Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the record I ask that a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior may be printed in the RECORD in order to explain the action taken by the committee.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, June 2, 1921.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your request of April 23, 1921, for a report on S. 1080, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled "A bill to provide for the establishment of Battell National Park, in the State of Vermont." This bill is identical with S. 4644 of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

From our records and the form of the proposed bill it appears that the area in question covers about 3,900 acres of land situated in the towns of Lincoln and Warren in the State of Vermont, which were devised to the United States of America for national-park purposes under the will of Joseph Battell, late of Middlebury, Addison County, Vt.

Before these lands could be accepted for the purpose indicated, they would require a careful inspection by a representative of the National Park Service. A large number of details have to be considered preliminary to the creation of national parks, such as whether the area in question expresses in the highest terms the kind of exhibit they represent, and whether the park, if and when created, would be susceptible of effective administration and control. No investigation of these features has been made in the case of the lands covered by the present bill, and until it has been made the department is not in a position to render a report.

Respectfully,

E. C. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4221) to amend section 439 of the transportation act of 1920; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. REED of Pennsylvania:

A bill (S. 4222) to amend the act entitled "An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved May 19, 1921, as amended and extended; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico (by request):

A bill (S. 4223) to establish a court of claims and to provide for the settlement of land claims of persons not Indian within Pueblo Indian lands and land grants in the State of New Mexico; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 4224) authorizing a loan of $20,000,000 to Armenia, provided the conference at Lausanne, Switzerland, makes adequate territorial provision for an Armenian national home; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 4225) for the relief of John W. Coontz; to the Committee on Military Affairs;

A bill (S. 4226) for the relief of Frances V. Dodge; and

A bill (S. 4227) for the relief of the General Hospital of Weston; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4228) granting a pension to Oscar E. Glenn (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORBECK (by request):

A bill (S. 4229) to provide credit facilities for the orderly marketing of agricultural products and for the preservation and development of agriculture and of the live-stock industry of the United States; to extend and stabilize the market for United States bonds and other securities; to provide fiscal agents for the United States; to amend the Federal reserve act; to amend the Federal farm loan act; to provide for Federal cooperative banks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 261) providing for proportionate distribution among the States of surplus war material; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE RULES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submit a resolution and ask that it may be read and lie on the table, and I give notice that I will call it up at the first opportunity hereafter.

The resolution (S. Res. 385) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of five, to be composed of Senators who will be Members of the Sixty-eighth Congress, to be appointed by the Vice President, no more than three to belong to the same political party, is hereby authorized. Such committee is authorized and directed to study the rules of procedure of the Senate and to report and recommend what changes should be made in order to expedite business and to enable a majority to bring a question to a vote for final action and at the same time afford reasonable protection for the rights of the minority. Such committee shall submit its report and recommendations to the Senate on or before the second Monday after the opening of the first session of the Senate in the Sixty-eighth Congress.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to submit the notice which I send to the desk and ask that it may be read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho presents a notice, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

I hereby give notice that under Rule XL I will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI in order that I may propose to the act (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, the following amendment:

SEC. —. That the President is authorized and requested to invite such governments as he may deem necessary or expedient to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of considering the economic problems now obtaining throughout the world with a view of arriving at such understandings or arrangements as may seem essential to the restoration of trade and to the establishment of sound financial and business conditions; and also to consider the subject of further limitation of armaments with a view of reaching an understanding or agreement upon said matter both by land and by sea, and particularly relative to limiting the construction of all types and sizes of subsurface and surface craft of 10,000 tons standard displacement, or less, and of aircraft.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13374, being the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13374, being the bill making appropriations for the Navy Department. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill to which the Senator from Wyoming has just directed attention is one of great importance.

Mr. WARREN. I asked unanimous consent, Mr. President, for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I so understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair propounded the request of the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Utah is now making some observation.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Utah object to the request?

Mr. KING. Certainly; the Senator from Wyoming can not take me off the floor, and ought not to insist upon a categorical answer.

Mr. WARREN. I had the floor and the Senator can not take me off the floor.

Mr. KING. The Senator did not have the floor. The Chair had asked if there was objection, and I arose, addressed the Chair, and received recognition.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if there is objection to the request for unanimous consent, I shall move that the bill be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had propounded to the Senate the request of the Senator from Wyoming and was awaiting the response of the Senate.

Mr. KING. And I addressed the Chair and received recognition.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a debatable question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the two distinguished Senators upon the other side who are now standing in their places and looking alternately at me and at the Chair would possess their souls in patience for a moment, we might reach a happy termination. I was about to ask the Senator from Wyoming, in view of the fact that it is an important bill, carrying more than $300,000,000 in appropriations, and in view of the fact that it was but yesterday reported by the committee to the Senate, so that there has been no opportunity for an examination of its provisions, if he would not consent to let it go over for a day and give us full opportunity to investigate the bill and the numerous items which are found therein?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator is addressing his question to me——

Mr. KING. I am.

Mr. WARREN. I should like, as I always like to do, to accommodate the Senator from Utah; but the time is somewhat limited, and the bill has been under preparation a good while, and very carefully scanned, and it makes very few changes as to the various matters. I will ask the Senator if this suggestion will not meet with his views: I think we would better take up the bill and proceed with it, and if the Senator at any one point would like to lay a matter aside until we go on with the other items we will proceed not in any hurried way, but we must move along.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that I am not disposed to offer any impediment whatever to a fair consideration of these bills.

Mr. WARREN. I shall endeavor to cooperate with the Senator.

Mr. KING. And yet the Senator knows that the Navy bill as well as the Army bill, particularly the Navy bill, ought to receive considerable attention at the hands of the Senate; and the fact that a subcommittee or a full committee have considered the items, and the members of those committees may be familiar with them, does not argue that the rest of the Senate ought not to have an opportunity to familiarize themselves with the various items, and to satisfy themselves as to the wisdom of the very large appropriations carried in this bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming will endeavor to see that the Senator from Utah has abundant opportunity, as we go along, to give such consideration as we are able to give to these matters; but there are 96 Senators, as the Senator knows, and it would be difficult to arrange these appropriation bills, of which we have so many to dispose of in a short time, so as to comport exactly with the request of each and every Senator. I think that with the condition the bill is in, as the Senator knows—perhaps he has already given it attention—we could go along, and the Senator certainly will have abundant time to correct anything that he thinks is wrong.

Mr. KING. Of course, the Senator appreciates the fact that sometimes, without an opportunity to examine the testimony which was submitted in the House—and I find here testimony of seven or eight hundred pages—inquiries are made upon the floor of the Senate which would not be made if full opportunity were given to examine the testimony and the hearings. In other words, the debate is more or less unsatisfactory. It consists, perhaps, in asking questions which would not be asked if opportunity were given to Members to investigate. It is obvious that since this bill came before the Senate no Senator has had an opportunity to examine it, to go through the hearings, and to familiarize himself with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there are thousands of pages of testimony concerning these appropriation bills. Of course, neither the committee nor I have any power of compelling attention to those matters, but the desire on the part of the committee is to extend every courtesy. I know the Senator will not complain of the way we have conducted the bills.

I move that we now take up the appropriation bill for consideration.

Mr. KING. I realize, of course, the power of the Senator to have it taken up on motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming withdraws his request for unanimous consent and moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13374.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is usual to ask consent to omit the formal first reading of the bill and then to have it read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall be first considered. I therefore make that request now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the bill be read first for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. KING. That means, of course, a reading of the full text of the bill?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the request, but I should like to know what the program is with reference to this bill. There seems to have been an impression that there would not be very much consideration of this measure, but I am satisfied that there will be considerable consideration of it.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator. I think there will be great consideration of the bill; and that is one of the reasons why I wish to have it taken up early and proceed with it according to the convenience of the various Senators.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I shall not object to this request, but may I ask another question? Is it anticipated that we are to conclude the consideration of this bill to-day?

Mr. WARREN. I consider it somewhat doubtful, but I should like to pursue its consideration as long as we can. As the Senator knows, if it goes over until next week we are likely to lose an entire week except for the consideration of this bill; so we must move along.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to take up a moment's time except to consider those things which I think are very vital. I certainly shall not object to this request; but I doubt if there is a quorum in the city, and certainly we would not want to undertake to dispose of this measure without a quorum of the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the request of the Senator from Wyoming. I should just like to inquire if the total appropriation carried in this bill is larger than the last appropriation, just prior to the Arms Conference which was held in the city of Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The comparative figures are given in the report of the committee. They exceed the appropriations for 1923 by $1,250,904.75.

Mr. HEFLIN. How much was the last appropriation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The last appropriation, for the fiscal year 1923, was $294,353,473.25.

Mr. HEFLIN. Was that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that was for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1923.

Mr. HEFLIN. Was that the last appropriation bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that was the last act.

Mr. HEFLIN. And this appropriation is larger than that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is larger than that by a million and a quarter dollars.

Mr. HEFLIN. So that it is costing more money to keep up the Navy now than it was before we had the Arms Conference?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is not costing as much, but an increased appropriation is carried in this bill in the interest of economy, to carry out without interruption and without slowing down the work upon the ships that were retained under the Arms Limitation Conference and treaty.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the point I am making is that this appropriation is larger than the appropriation which was made before we undertook to do something to prevent excessive armament and the expenditure of enormous sums of money in the upkeep of the Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The last appropriation was made in contemplation of the Arms Limitation Conference. That appropriation was affected by the conference. It would have cost over $305,000,000 to complete the building program under the act of 1916. It will cost only a little over $100,000,000 to complete it as limited and modified by the Arms Limitation Conference.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is one other question that I want to ask the Senator. Is the amount provided for in this bill as reported by the Senate committee larger or smaller than the amount which was provided for in the bill when it came over from the House?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is larger.

Mr. HEFLIN. I simply want to call attention to that point—that frequently appropriations are cut down in the House, and some Republican rushes into print with the statement that they are going to save to the Government so many million dollars on this item and that, and when those bills get over here the amounts are put back and more, and the amounts are larger than they were when the bill left the House, and the amount that they claim is saved to the people is not really saved at all. Instead of cutting down the appropriation it is increased, at the cost and expense of the taxpayers of the United States. I am not going to object to the request of the Senator. I have no objection to taking the bill up for consideration at this point.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I had not yielded the floor. I had yielded to the Senator from Florida, but the Chair did not hear him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that a discussion of the bill is not in order upon a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HEFLIN. I had completed what I had to say.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Alabama was not discussing the bill. He was asking some questions about it, and I was simply pointing out that the bill exceeds the estimates for 1923 by over $800,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in further answer to the question asked by the Senator from Alabama as to the effect upon the appropriations of the Arms Limitation Conference, I should like to call his attention to the fact that the amount carried in the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1922, the last appropriation bill preceding the Arms Limitation Conference, was $413,239,949, which was $180,879,181 more than the appropriation for the first year under the Arms Limitation Conference treaty.

TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, but there is a matter of very great importance to the whole country which I feel it my duty to call to the attention of the Senate for a few moments. It is the rule for the taxation of national banks.

More than a year ago bills were introduced in the House and in the Senate—in the Senate by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and myself—to change the law permitting the States to tax national banks and to change the rule of taxation. One bill passed the House, a bill which was absolutely ineffectual, which did not give any relief whatever. When the bill came to the Senate it went to the Committee on Banking and Currency, about a year ago. Last June it was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I personally appeared several times before the committee and argued the matter, showing how in some States banks were recovering back their entire taxes. In the city of New York alone the banks have recovered $20,000,000, and they have no way of raising the amount of money which should be properly assessed upon the banks, by reason of the fact that Congress insists on not changing the old rule, which has been in existence for more than 40 years.

Very briefly I want to call that to the attention of the Senate and to say that if the Subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, or the full committee, do not report a bill covering the subject by Wednesday next I shall move to discharge the committee, and will bring it before the Senate, and I wish very briefly to state the very great importance of that legislation to the country.

When the national bank act was passed Congress provided that the stock and real property of banks might be taxed by the States under two conditions, one that the real estate should be taxed at no greater rate than was assessed against other real estate, and the other that the stock of the banks should not be taxed at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of the States.

At that time, of course, we had no national banks. The banking business of the country was in the hands of State banks, and very largely in the hands of private individuals. There was no such thing permitted in the State as a private bank; they were all State banks or trust companies, and in some States they had banking firms. I am not going to weary the Senate with a discussion of the legal problem. I just wish to bring up the importance of this question.

For many years it was considered as the rule that only banking capital which came in competition with national banks was to be considered as the basis for this rule; in other words, because the money and intangible credits in the hands of the individual citizen came in competition with banks the banks should not be taxed at a greater rate than the moneyed capital in the hands of private citizens. There ceased to be any such thing.

Eighteen or twenty of the States, finding it impossible to tax the individual citizen upon his goods and bills receivable, intangible assets, and money in bank at the same rate at which bank stock was taxed, passed laws, some providing for income taxes, some of them so many mills on the dollar. To give an illustration, in my own State when we had a direct system of taxation of intangible assets of private individuals we used to collect about three hundred or three hundred and fifty thousand dollars a year. We changed to a 3 mill a dollar tax on individual intangible assets, and we are now collecting a million three hundred thousand. I am informed that in the State of New York, while formerly they would get a little over a million dollars, to-day they collect in the neighborhood of thirty-five or forty million dollars.

About a year ago the Supreme Court of the United States, in a case coming up from Virginia, held that the rule was that intangible credits in the hands of the individual citizen—that is, deposits in banks, notes, bills receivable, and accounts held by individuals—were within the rule, and that the national banks could not be taxed any more, although any man who knows anything about business knows that those things do not come in competition with national banks at all. It was stipulated in the case that they did.

Without going into the discussion of it, I introduced a bill which changed the rule, and provided that the tax imposed shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital employed in the business of banking. That includes individuals, private banks, State banks, trust companies—all capital engaged in banking which comes in competition with the banks.

This is a serious situation. The trouble is due to Congress maintaining a rule which has outgrown its usefulness. I certainly do not think banks should be taxed more than other property and other business is taxed, but it is absurd to say that a bank which receives deposits and does a regular banking business shall pay no more on its stock than the individual citizen on his notes, bills receivable, credits, and so forth.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I understand the question as presented by the Senator, and the cause of complaint, in brief, is this, that a larger amount of taxes has been collected from national banks than ought to have been collected, particularly in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court, and it is further contended that if the right amount of taxes were collected it would bankrupt State treasuries. The plan is to devise some scheme whereby some of our States may not be required to refund to these banks.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is part of the plan.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator give me his view as to this proposition: Could the State, by the passage of a statute, prevent the banks from paying this tax which they ought to have paid, but have not, and make it retroactive?

Mr. KELLOGG. In other words, does the Senator mean, can a State pass a curative act and make it retroactive?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and make it retroactive.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is no question about it whatever. The States have absolute power, if Congress consents to it. As I said, notable examples of the injustice of this exist in the State of New York and the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I put another question to the Senator?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. POMERENE. In the State of Ohio all property, real and personal, tangible and intangible, is taxable according to a uniform rule and according to its real value in money. Presumably, therefore, these taxes have all been levied in accordance with the constitutional rule. Assume, for the sake of the argument, that they have taxed the national banks more heavily than they ought to have taxed them, but in fact they have not taxed them over and above the real value in money. What relief could those banks get?

Mr. KELLOGG. They do not get any relief at all. The Supreme Court has held that the States may tax real estate at one rate and bank stock at another; corporations at one rate and bank stock at another; but they must not tax banks more than the individual citizen pays on his intangible credits. There is no consistency in such a rule as that. They can exempt corporations generally and tax banks, and yet they must tax banks no more than the ordinary citizen. I will mention the question of ratification in a minute.

I now send to the desk and ask to have read a short statement by the comptroller and the mayor of New York, showing the deplorable condition they are in; and, as I understand from the Senator from Massachusetts and the tax authorities in his State, Massachusetts is in much the same position.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the State of Massachusetts is in the same position as New York and many other States are in, and unless some remedy is given by Congress, the decision to which the Senator has referred will put an intolerable burden on the cities and towns, and will go far toward bankrupting some of our towns.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the statement sent to the desk by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

BOARD OF ESTIMATE WILL APPEAL FROM BANK-TAX DECISION—CRAIG SAYS RULING WILL COST CITY ULTIMATELY $20,000,000—COMPTROLLER FORESEES IMMEDIATE INCREASE OF FIVE POINTS IN THE TAX RATE.

The board of estimate decided to-day to appeal the recent decision of the court of appeals nullifying the 1 per cent national-bank tax. If the decision stands, Charles L. Craig, city comptroller, said it would cost the city ultimately $20,000,000.

In addition to this, Mr. Craig said in a statement read to the board, the decision means a rearrangement of the city budget, since the city has already expended over $10,000,000 of funds collected through the tax. He declared that it would necessitate an increase of 5 points in the tax rate next year to make up the deficit, and ultimately an an increase as high as 20 points.

The bank tax, Mr. Craig went on to say, has always been counted on as a source of revenue in making up the budget. Last year the amount accruing from this source was $5,000,000, and this year a total of $7,000,000 was anticipated.

According to the court of appeals decision, the banks are not only exempted from future payments but the city is obliged to pay back money collected on the bank tax in 1910 and 1921.

DENOUNCED BY HYLAN

Craig's announcement drew a general chorus of protest from members of the board. Mayor Hylan said that if the courts and mandatory legislation continued to shift the financial burdens of the State from the corporations to the small taxpayers the government of the city might just as well cease to function.

"For my part I would rather go to jail than take bread and butter from the mouth of a poor workingman," the mayor said. "As I see it, if the legislature keeps on passing mandatory legislation and the court of appeals continues to make decisions which practically take the burden away from banking and corporate interests and place it on the shoulders of the people we might as well close down.

"I don't see what can be done. Here are large sums of money which must be taken from the pockets of the taxpayers of the city, and the banking interests are relieved of the burden. I am glad that the matter has come up in open meeting, so people here will know that besides this they are compelled to raise thirty or forty million dollars to meet the demands of mandatory legislation for the new budget. I pity the poor taxpayers."

The comptroller called attention to the state of the city finances as affected by the decision. The nonavailability of the bank tax for 1922, he said, would create a deficit in the city's general fund for this year alone amounting to about $2,000,000, which will wipe out the balances and leave the deficit to be carried into the new year.

"There appears to be no provision of law," the statement concluded, "under which the city is authorized to make good such a deficit except to reduce the expenditures to be financed from the general fund. In other words, some way must be found, such as the shutting down on the purchase of supplies, the making of necessary repairs, the closing down of public offices, and reducing them to part-time service.

"I will not disburse moneys that have not actually been made available for disbursement by taxes lawfully levied."

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I had the article read so as to bring the attention of the Senate to the situation. The same situation exists in Massachusetts and I do not know in how many other States. I wish to suggest to the mayor of New York that he need not blame the Supreme Court of New York or the legislature of New York, although if he does I would remind him that the legislature which enacted the law which was in question was a Democratic legislature and the law was approved by Governor Smith, I am informed. But that is neither here nor there.

The trouble is with Congress. The Supreme Court of the State of New York is simply following the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. If Congress is going to keep in existence without modification an act which prevents the States from adopting a substituted system of income tax and different systems of taxation as to individual credits and compels the States to tax the banks exactly the same as they tax individual citizens, then of course we must expect such legislation and such decisions and such results.

I do not ask that the States shall be free to tax the banks exorbitantly. It is to the interest of the national banking system and of the whole country that the States should not have the power to excessively tax national banks and discriminate in favor of State institutions and trust companies and other moneyed capital which does come in competition with national banks, but to select out simply the intangible credits of an individual and say that the banks shall not be taxed at a greater rate than that because the individual comes in competition in the banking business with the banks is, in my judgment, an absurdity in legislation. I dare say there is not a city in the United States where the individual credits really come in competition with the great banking business of the country.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] asked whether the States have the power retroactively to cure the taxes which have been held illegal. There is not the slightest doubt about it. The States have no power to tax the banks except by the consent of Congress. Congress lays down the rule under which they are to be taxed, and if the States violate the rule of course the tax is illegal. Now the States alone can not ratify the illegal tax, but Congress can give its consent to the States and then the State legislatures may ratify it, because it is a familiar rule of law that whatever the State could originally have done in taxation or whatever Congress could originally have done it can cure by a curative act.

The position is simple. The committee may come to some conclusion to remedy the situation, and if it is not remedied during this Congress the city of New York will have placed a burden on other taxpayers, as will the State of Massachusetts, and I do not know how many other States, and it is going to destroy the taxing systems of 18 or 20 States.

Mr. President, I am willing to wait a reasonable time, but if the measure is not reported by next week or some report made on the bill, either adversely or in some other way, I shall move to discharge the committee.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter upon a discussion of the subject adverted to by the Senator from Minnesota. It is in justice, however, to the committees that I desire to speak a word or two.

There are several bills pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency bearing upon this question, one introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] and several by other Senators. There are many more or less grave questions at law involved in the proposed legislation. First, it is not quite so certain that Congress has the power to validate invalidly levied taxes by a given State. That is a debatable question. Briefs have been submitted to the subcommittee upon that question and lawyers of reputation and learning differ as to that point. I am inclined to the view that it is competent for Congress to validate, or, rather, authorize a State to validate, invalidly assessed and levied taxes on national banks by the several States; but I am by no means certain in my own mind of the soundness of that view. The latest decision of the Court of Appeals of New York holds that the system of taxation in that State in so far as it affects a tax on the capital stock of national banks is contrary to the Federal statute, and hence that such tax is invalid.

When the erudite mayor of New York undertakes to criticize the courts and the law and legislation generally, and speaks of the poor taxpayer, it ought to be borne in mind that the laws of New York, as administered, taxed national banks in a certain way and exempted from like taxes such poor taxpayers as J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and other poor concerns engaged in the banking business.

But I did not rise to discuss the many points involved in the proposed legislation. I wish merely to advise the Senator from Minnesota and the Senate that the Committee on Banking and Currency will be ready, I think, within a few days, perhaps during the coming week, to make report in respect of the several bills referred to. I hope and think I shall be able to support the bill which they shall favor.

I appreciate that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case known as the Richmond case, the late decision of the Court of Appeals of New York, and other decisions, and the existing facts, not only in New York but in Massachusetts and other States, make it incumbent upon us to take some action within our power to relieve the situation and to provide for wise and valid State action in the future.

Let me add a thought or two which may be worthy of consideration by Senators before the proposed measures come up for fuller discussion. Of course, no State can assess a Federal or national bank without the consent of the Federal Government. Now, it may become necessary, it may be wise, to amend the Federal statute as to the power of States to assess national banks. But whatever law the Congress enacts on that subject must, of course, be observed in spirit and purpose by the several States when they come to legislate on the subject. Another question to be considered is the question of validating hitherto invalidly assessed and levied taxes by a given State. Now, unless an appeal is prosecuted from the decision of the highest court of New York to the Supreme Court of the United States, the law will stand in that State at least as being that certain taxes paid by the national banks amounting to some $20,000,000 must be returned to them. I scarcely need to remark that the mayor of New York City has no power over the matter.

I question very much whether the legislature of that State has immediate power to relieve the situation; that is to say, prevent recovery by the national banks. But in any event there are two big questions to consider: First, how and in what way shall the Federal statute be amended in respect to future taxation of national banks by the several States; and second, is it competent for Congress to validate or authorize the State government to validate taxes which according to decisions were invalidly levied. I merely mention these controverted questions. But upon all this subject and many of the points involved I may find it necessary to enlarge when the bill comes before the Senate.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Has the matter been referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; a subcommittee consisting of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], and myself.

Mr. WATSON. Has the Senator from Minnesota appeared before the subcommittee?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Several times.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And he has filed a brief. We have received many briefs upon both sides of the question. We have listened for several hours to oral argument, and the matter may be said to be sub judice now.

Mr. LODGE. The House bill has been over here nearly a year, has it not?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. The practical thing to do is to have a meeting of the subcommittee and thrash it out.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. We have had many meetings of the subcommittee. Of course it has headway; but I am not here apologizing for anything, because I know of nothing that calls for apology.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, one suggestion of the Senator from California is that the law of New York discriminates in favor of J. P. Morgan & Co. The Senator knows that the bill which I drew provides that the tax imposed on national banks shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon all moneyed capital employed in the business of banking, it does not make any difference whether it is Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., or who it is. They, of course, should be taxed at the same rate. Anybody engaged in the business—I do not care whether it is a private individual, a trust company, or whoever it may be that is engaged in the banking business in competition with banks—using his capital or the capital of the corporation, should be taxed at the same rate as the banks. So there is no question of J. P. Morgan & Co. in the matter.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. There is a very big question about the exemption of J. P. Morgan and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., engaged in the banking business, from the payment of like taxes paid by the national banks.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator deny that my bill would prevent any discrimination in their favor?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then what does the Senator mean when he insinuates——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not insinuate. When I say a thing I undertake to speak directly and with accuracy.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well, then.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I make no insinuations; far from it; but since some spirit has been manifested——

Mr. KELLOGG. I have the floor, and I do not yield any further to the Senator until I get through.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I thought the Senator from Minnesota had yielded the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not yet finished.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I submit that the Senator from Minnesota yielded the floor——

Mr. KELLOGG. I did not.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And I was recognized by the President pro tempore; but if the Senator desires to say more, I shall be glad to listen.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am not criticizing the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And neither was I criticizing the Senator from Minnesota; far from it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not criticized the committee, but I have stated that the matter involved in these bills has been pending before the subcommittee since last June. I appeared before the committee last fall in reference to the bill of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] which is pending. I hope the Senator will give the question as early consideration as possible. I know it is a grave problem, which needs very careful consideration.

So far as the mayor of New York is concerned, I have already stated—and if the Senator had listened to me he would have known it—I do not believe his criticism of the court is just at all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is what I meant to say.

Mr. KELLOGG. As to the question of ratification, I know the Senator from California is too good a lawyer not to agree with me as to that. I do not claim that the Congress itself can ratify the tax; and the bill does not provide for any such thing. The bill simply proposes to give the consent of Congress to a ratification by the States.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Minnesota knows I am in full sympathy with what he is trying to do and with his bill; but would it not be possible now to allow us to go on with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill? Of course, I do not wish to cut off debate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield the floor?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield the floor to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I shall not detain the Senate longer. Mr. President, for the benefit of Senators who may be absent, and for all Members of the Senate, I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD the recent decision of the Court of Appeals of New York in reference to this matter. I think it will be useful in the future discussion of this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The decision is as follows:

December 12, 1922. Tax on capital stock of national banks invalid.

COURT OF APPEALS.

People ex rel. Hanover National Bank of the City of New York, appellant, v. Henry M. Goldfogle et al., respondent.

Appeal from order of the appellate division, first department, affirming order of special term, dismissing writ to review tax assessment.

Martin Saxe for appellant.

William H. King for respondents.

Charles D. Newton, attorney general (Edward G. Griffin, of counsel), for State of New York, intervening.

POUND, J.: Relator, a banking corporation organized under the national banking act of the United States, seeks to review an assessment of its capital stock for taxation for the year 1921 on the ground that taxation thereof by the State is at a greater rate than is assessed on other moneyed capital in the hands of individuals. A national bank is an agency of the National Government. The State has no constitutional power to lay any tax upon it. Its shares of stock are taxable by the State only when and as Congress permits. (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316; People ex rel. Bridgeport Sav. Bank v. Feitner, 191 N. Y. 88, 92; Van Allen v. Assessors, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 573.)

Section 5214 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. Stat., sec. 9779) imposes upon national banks the obligation to pay to the Treasurer of the United States certain duties "in lieu of all existing taxes," and section 5219 (U. S. Comp. Stat., sec. 9784; Barnes Fed. Code, sec. 9256) provides that nothing contained in the Federal national bank act (13 Stat. 99) shall prevent "all the shares in any association from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the association is located; but the legislature of each State may determine and direct the manner and place of taxing all the shares of national banking associations located within the State, subject only to the two restrictions, that the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State, and that the shares of any national banking association owned by nonresidents of any State shall be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located and not elsewhere. Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of associations from either State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed." This section prescribes the full measure of the power of the State to impose taxes upon national banking associations or their shareholders. Any assessment not in conformity therewith is unauthorized and invalid. (First Nat. Bank of Gulfport v. Adams, 42 Sup. Ct. 323.)

The tax law of the State of New York Consolidated Laws, CR. 60 (sec. 24, enacted long before any State income tax was imposed, and repealed by ch. 603 of the Laws of 1922), provided: "In assessing the shares of stock of banks or banking associations organized under the authority of this State or the United States, the assessment and taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is made or assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of this State." * * *

The tax law also provides for a tax of 1 per cent on the book value of shares of stock in all banks and banking associations (sec. 24b) and that such tax (sec. 24c) "shall be in lieu of all other taxes whatsoever for State, county, or local purposes upon the said shares of stock, and mortgages, judgments, and other choses in action and personal property held or owned by banks or banking associations the value of which enters into the value of said shares of stock shall also be exempt from all other State, county, or local taxation."

This tax of 1 per cent is a direct tax on the shares of stock without regard to the amount of income earned thereon, whether such income has been retained as surplus or distributed as dividends.

The personal income tax law (Laws 1919, ch. 627; tax law, sec. 352), adopted as part of a new program of tax reform, imposes upon every resident of the State of New York an annual tax upon his net income of from 1 to 3 per cent. Such taxes "are in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, except that money on hand or on deposit with or without interest, bonds, notes, and choses in action and shares of stock in corporations other than banks and banking associations, owned by any individual or constituting a part of a trust or estate subject to the income tax imposed by this article, shall not after July 31, 1919, be included in the valuation of the personal property included in the assessment rolls of the several tax districts, villages, school districts, and special tax districts of the State."

The statute further provides (Laws 1920, ch. 647; tax law, sec. 4a): "Notwithstanding any provision of this chapter, or of any other general, special, or local law, intangible personal property, except shares of stock of banks, or banking associations, whether referred to as personal property, capital, capital stock, or otherwise, after June 30, 1920, shall be exempt from taxation locally for State or local purposes. This exemption shall be in addition to all other exemptions of personal property from local taxation, whether based upon the character, ownership, or amount of property. The term 'intangible personal property,' as used in this section, means incorporeal property, including money, deposits in banks, shares of stock, bonds, notes, credits, evidences of an interest in property, and evidences of debt."

Shares of stock in banks and banking associations, both State and National, are thus subject to a 1 per cent valuation tax. Certain other corporations are subject to franchise taxes, but moneyed capital in the hands of individuals is exempt from taxation locally for State or local purposes. A long line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States defines the business of banking and holds that the words "moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens" includes moneys invested in private banking houses such as J. P. Morgan & Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and others, together with investments of individuals in securities that represent money at interest and other evidences of indebtedness such as normally enter into the business of banking.

The National Government permits State taxation only on terms of substantial equality in law and in fact, and entire fairness and friendliness. The tax on national-bank shares must not discriminate in favor of moneyed capital entering into competition with the national banks. (Evansville Bank v. Britton, 105 U. S. 322; Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138; Aberdeen Bank v. Chehalis Co., 166 U. S. 440; Owensboro National Bank v. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 676; Amoskeag Savings Bank v. Purdy, 231 U. S. 373; Merchants' National Bank of Richmond v. City of Richmond, 256 U. S. 635.) The court below has found that the competing capital in the hands of individuals, subject only to the personal-property income tax, is very large. "If the principle of substantial equality of taxation under State authority, as between capital so invested and other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens, however invested, operates to disturb the peculiar policy of some of the States in respect of revenue derived from taxation, the remedy therefor is with another department of the Government, and does not belong to this court." (Boyer v. Boyer, 113 U. S. 689, 703.)

The first question is whether the State of New York discriminates against national-bank shares by imposing a tax both on the shares and the dividends, while it imposes a tax on the income only of other competing capital in the hands of private bankers and other individuals. It was held below that if the direct tax and the income tax were both imposed the discrimination would be clear. The respondent contends, by a process of statutory construction which would exclude by implication the particular from the general, that no income tax is imposed on the dividends of bank stock. The test to be applied is not whether such dividends may lawfully be included in the income of individuals taxed by the State but whether they are in fact so included. It is urged that the State had no power to tax such income, for the reason that section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States above quoted permits a tax on valuation only, and, therefore, that it did not tax it. (People ex rel. Alpha P. C. Co. v. Knapp, 230 N. Y. 48, addenda page 65, herein.) The language of the statute suggests no such punctilious regard for those whose income is derived from dividends on national-bank shares. On the contrary, it plainly includes such dividends in gross income. Gross income includes (tax law, sec. 359) income from dividends. Dividends from stock in bank corporations owned by resident taxpayers are not included in the list of exemptions.

A clear discrimination is made against resident holders of bank shares which are taxed according to their book value, who are also taxed on their income. The shares of bank stock are taxed by one method and the dividends thereon are taxed by another method. Competing moneyed capital in the hands of individuals is exempt from taxation based on valuation and is assessed by one method, according to income only. The provisions of the law are explicit. The discrimination is unfortunately too clear to escape recognition. We can not assume that any exemption of dividends on national-bank shares from the provisions of the income tax was in the legislative mind. On the contrary, the report of the special joint committee on taxation and retrenchment submitted to the legislature March 1, 1922, the opinion of the Attorney General (March 31, 1920), and the practice of the Income Tax Bureau indicate that by legislative and administrative construction a personal tax upon dividends on the shares was contemplated and collected.

The amount of such moneyed capital in the State of New York thus exempted from taxation, except on income, is not inconsiderable. It is relatively of much consequence. In the city of New York in the year 1921 such competing capital was nearly twice the total capital of the State and National banks. The tax on the capital stock of national banks becomes invalid when it appears that it has become discriminatory. No way of escape from such a conclusion is open except by disregarding the rule which requires us to give a plain meaning to plain words plainly used. (United States v. Goldenburg, 168 U. S. 95, 102; Rodgers v. United States, 185 U. S. 83, 86.) The validity of the tax on dividends from national-bank stock may be considered when it is assailed by a taxpayer in a proceeding in which it becomes necessary to decide that question.

But assuming for the purpose of the discussion only that dividends on national-bank stock are exempt by implication from the income tax or that the tax thereon is invalid and may be disregarded, the tax on bank shares is discriminatory for another reason. The State may, so long as it observes the rule of fairness and good faith, tax national-bank shares by one method, while it taxes competing capital by another method, without exact uniformity or equality. (Mercantile Bank v. New York, supra; People ex rel. Bridgeport Savings Bank v. Feitner, supra.) In doubtful cases the burden may rest on the bank to establish inequality. (Bank of Commerce v. Seattle, 166 U. S. 463; First National Bank of Wellington v. Chapman, 173 U. S. 205.) Yet the rule laid down for our guidance by the Supreme Court of the United States in substance requires that the shares of the bank shall be taxed only to the same extent that other moneyed capital invested in the State is taxed. (People v. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539; Boyer v. Boyer, supra.) If the inequality is palpable the State courts are without discretion. It becomes their duty to declare the right asserted under the Constitution of the United States and the statute enacted by Congress in uniformity therewith and to hold the tax invalid. (Merchants' National Bank v. City of Richmond, supra.)

When it appears on the face of the statute that bank shares are taxed on valuation at a flat rate and that the owner of competing moneyed capital relatively material in amount is taxed on income only, the court is powerless to say that equality of taxation has been secured and injustice prevented. We are forced to compare two methods which are wholly unlike. How can equality be established or presumed as the necessary result of the taxing statutes? In a very considerable number of cases the valuation tax must inevitably be the heavier burden. It is fixed and certain. The income tax is variable and dependent on income and amount of income. It is conceivable that when returns on such capital are low the bank stock would be taxed and the competing capital would be exempt. In no event would equality exist unless the income on competing capital were large beyond the dreams of avarice and the usual returns on investments.

The relator is entitled to the relief asked for. The orders should be reversed and the assessment vacated, with costs in all courts. (L. S. 359(1).)

Ordered accordingly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD a memorandum in the form of a brief which I submitted to the committee, which gives my views on the question, which I think might be of use to Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JUNE 9, 1922.

Hon. SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE, Chairman;
Hon. GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER,
Hon. CARTER GLASS,
Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency.

GENTLEMEN: Having under consideration S. 2903, to amend the banking act, permitting States to tax the stock of national banks, I desire to make a brief statement in relation to this bill. Under section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States the States are permitted to tax the shares of stock of national banks provided that the taxation "shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such State."

I am not going to review the long line of decisions in the State and Federal courts construing this provision, but simply to refer to the last case—the Merchants National Bank of Richmond v. City of Richmond, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States on June 6, 1921, and one or two other decisions. In the City of Richmond case it was held that a lower rate of tax imposed on moneys and credits than that upon the bank shares rendered the taxation of bank stocks invalid. It must be noted, however, that the court said "it also was shown by evidence, without dispute, that moneyed capital in the hands of individuals, invested in bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, comes into competition with the national banks in the loan market," and the court based its decision on that evidence.

Whatever may be said about the long line of decisions appearing on this question, at least for 25 years the general understanding has been that only capital invested in State banks and trust companies which directly comes into competition with national banks was included in the inhibition of section 5219, providing that the shares of national banks should not be taxed at a greater rate than other moneyed capital in the hands of the individual citizens. The court in the case of Aberdeen Bank v. Chehalis County, 166 U. S. 440, on page 458, said:

"The business of banking, as defined by law and customs, consists in the issue of notes payable on demand, intended to circulate as money where the banks are banks of issue; in receiving deposits payable on demand; in discounting commercial paper; making loans of money on collateral security; buying and selling bills of exchange; negotiating loans, and dealing in negotiable securities issued by the Government, State and National, and municipal and other corporations. These are the operations in which the capital invested in national banks is employed, and it is the nature of that employment which constitutes it in the eye of this statute 'moneyed capital.' Corporations and individuals carrying on these operations do come into competition with the business of national banks, and capital in the hands of individuals thus employed is what is intended to be described by the act of Congress."

This was followed in the case of the National Bank of Wellington v. Chapman, 173 U. S. 205.

During all of these years there grew up in the various States methods of taxation by which a different rate of tax was placed upon intangible credits and moneys, different rates of income taxes imposed, until it has become a system in many of the leading States of the country. Some 19 States have adopted such systems. This appears more in detail in the statement made by the tax commissions of the various States in the hearings, page 246 and subsequent pages. The States found that it was impossible to impose upon intangible credits a direct ad valorem tax at the general property rate and to obtain any considerable return in taxes. Take the State of Minnesota, to illustrate. When we had the ad valorem tax at the general property rate, we collected about $300,000 to $350,000 per year.

The law was changed to impose 3 mills upon the dollar, and we now collect more than $1,300,000. Take the State of New York: When it had the old system of taxation it collected about $1,000,000 a year. To-day, under the income provisions in the State of New York, it is collecting $37,000,000, a large amount of which comes from intangible property. Many of the States have mortgage taxes, whereby when a mortgage is filed on real estate the tax is paid in advance in a lump sum. These systems of taxation have never injured national banks in the slightest degree. On the contrary, they, together with all other taxpayers, have benefited thereby and to-day are more prosperous than ever before and the banking capital has enormously and progressively increased.

In fact, the bankers themselves have been very influential in promoting the very laws some of their attorneys are attacking before this committee, and I wish here to state that the attorney or the president of the American Bankers' Association has no right whatever to come before a committee of Congress and claim that he represents all the banks of the country. I know that in my State the banks are in favor of this change in the law, and I believe they are generally throughout the country. Much of the opposition to this bill comes from attorneys who have suits to collect for the banks from local communities, money paid in taxes claimed to be invalid under the present act of Congress and under the Richmond decision. Furthermore, it is idle to say that intangible credits, in the hands of individual citizens, come in competition with the moneyed capital of banks to any perceptible degree. I venture to say that not even in the financial centers in the United States does money loaned by individuals come in competition with the business of the banks to any appreciable extent. It is purely negligible. The money loaned by banks to commercial and business institutions on direct paper is of such enormous volume that the amount loaned by all the individuals in the country is insignificant by comparison. We know that, as a practical matter, mortgages, bonds, and investments of this kind do not come in competition with the short term credits of banks. It is only banking institutions which do the great credit business of the country that really come in competition with national banks; and to require every State and municipality to go into court and prove that intangible credits generally in the hands of citizens do not come in competition, or to go into litigation of that question, is an absurdity and a hardship in the face of the general understanding about business of this kind in the country.

Is it possible that Congress, in order to protect national banks, is going to disrupt all the different systems of taxing moneys and credits at different rates than those imposed upon the shares of national banks? Certainly banks have been prosperous and have not been overtaxed. The taxes hitherto imposed on banks by States and municipalities are naturally reflected in the present value of their shares, and to reduce their taxation to the basis of the money or credits or income taxes in the various States would constitute a gift to the stockholder and seriously hamper the States and municipalities.

What should be done is that Congress should pass a law, similar to the bill which was introduced by Senator Wadsworth, or the one which I shall submit, which is designed to carry out the same purpose, providing that the taxes imposed shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital employed in the business of banking, and thereby carry out the general understanding and practice which has existed for years.

The inconsistency of the claim of the Virginia bankers that they were harmfully discriminated against by a lower rate on privately held intangible investments (the rate in 1915 being 95 cents on such property as against the bank rate of $1.45) is shown by the fact that the Virginia Legislature, in 1922, actually reduced the rate on such privately held intangible investments to 55 cents; and, I am informed, so anxious were the bankers to secure for the State the benefit of such a low rate that they voluntarily submitted to a rate of $1.10 on their own shares.

I ask the committee how this comports with their previous contention that such privately held investments are in competition with the resources of the banks. Incidentally, the present Virginia situation illustrates one of the evil consequences which the Wadsworth bill would cure, namely, that in order to overcome the absurd fiction that a lower rate on intangible investments is hurtful to the banks, an arrangement has to be entered into whereby the banks voluntarily submit, by way of a gentleman's agreement, to a higher rate of tax. We therefore have a new practice in taxation growing out of the Richmond decision, namely, the taxation of banks by gentlemen's agreement. It goes without saying that such an arrangement can be upset at any time by the action of a single bank or of a single stockholder.

We find that Virginia has thus been forced to adopt the Chinese method of taxation by voluntary contribution as a direct result of an economic fallacy.

I next refer to subdivision (3) of my bill, known as the validating clause. There is a similar clause in the Wadsworth bill. The Richmond decision has apparently presented to the national banks in the aforesaid 19 States an unlooked-for opportunity to recover back taxes paid by the banks upon the shares thereof during several years last past, and thus to evade altogether taxation for the years in question, even though such taxes were paid by them at the time without objection or protest. In New York I am informed that something like 90 suits of that character have been instituted and that a test case is now on its way through the courts, and that both sides have announced they will carry the same to the Supreme Court of the United States—that if this test case is successful, practically every one of the 500 national banks in that State may be required to contest taxes for as many years as under the circumstances they are able to do.

In Massachusetts, I am informed that some 40 banks have instituted similar suits; that in Connecticut, while no suits have been started, it is probable that a successful termination of such suits in the other States will give rise to a very large number of similar suits in that State. The same is undoubtedly true as to the remaining States of the 19 which have departed from the general property tax, and in this statement I include my own State of Minnesota. In short, if this matter is allowed to take its course, we will be confronted with a flood of litigation in nearly half of the States of the Union, whereby every local community containing a national bank will find itself subject to a judgment for moneys collected in good faith on the understanding that the levy was legal and regular, where the money has been spent, and where the remaining taxpayers will be required to make good the sums required with interest. Such a situation is, to my mind, intolerable.

With regard to the legality of validating such taxes and thereby quieting the suits referred to, I will not say more than to refer to the case of Grim v. Weissenberg (57 Pa. 433), which was cited with approval in United States v. Heinszen (206 U. S. 370), where the court said:

"If an act of assembly be within the legitimate scope of legislative power, it is not a valid objection that it divests vested rights. If the use is public, if it is taxation, the rule against divesting vested rights for private benefit does not apply."

In general, it may be said to be a settled policy of the courts of this country that the legislature may validate any tax theretofore levied which would have been within its jurisdiction to impose in the first instance. In other words, that the legislatures may do retroactively what they might have done prospectively.

On page 241 of the record made before the House committee will be found a letter to the Hon. Samuel Lord, chairman of the Minnesota Tax Commission, signed by three officers of the First National Bank of Minneapolis, the largest bank in the State, viz: F. M. Prince, chairman of the executive committee; F. A. Chamberlain, chairman of the board of directors; and C. T. Jaffray, president. The letter follows:

"We have examined the McFadden bill (H. R. 9579), identical with the Wadsworth bill (S. 2903), now pending in Congress, and wish to advise you that we are in favor of the passage of the same, or one covering substantially the same ground.

"We wish to assure you that we are not disposed to put any obstacle in the way of the collection of the 1921 State personal-property tax on national banks. This tax is assessed and levied against national banks upon the same basis as is the tax upon State banks, and with this general system we are quite satisfied.

"We are advised by our attorneys that upon passage of the McFadden bill, or one substantially like it, the assessment and levy of personal-property taxes in this State upon national banks will be validated and that the same may then be safely paid by the national banks."

This letter, I believe, correctly expresses the attitude of the national banks in my State.

Very respectfully, FRANK B. KELLOGG.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been absent from the Chamber for a few moments. May I inquire of the Senator from California if any explanation was made by the subcommittee or by the full committee of the reason for the delay in reporting the bill, and if the report thereon may be expected within a short time?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The report may be expected soon. I will say to the Senator from Utah. There were many delays which were due to known causes.

Mr. KING. I am making no complaint at all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The subject is not to be disposed of by the ipse dixit of anyone. It involves many debatable questions, questions, for example, as to the power of Congress either directly to validate taxes which have been held to be invalid, or, as is designed by the bill of the Senator from Minnesota, whether Congress has power to authorize a given State through its legislature to validate taxes which have been invalidly levied. There are many questions involved in the consideration of the subject which are not to be disposed of by a wave of the hand; but, of course, that is no excuse for indefinite delay.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the former Secretary of the Treasury, and I also, to the extent of my humble ability, as a subcommittee have severally read many briefs upon the subject by gentlemen favoring or opposing these bills—and there are three or four such bills. We have listened to lawyers from Boston, New York, Minneapolis, Philadelphia, and possibly from other places upon the various phases of the proposed legislation. Very lately, within a week, indeed, the Court of Appeals of New York has held that their State system of taxing national banks is contrary to the Federal statute, which means in its ultimate that if the decision holds there must be refunded to certain national banks of New York some $20,000,000. It is upon that decision that the mayor of New York comments in the editorial contained in the newspaper clipping which was read by the Secretary.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not deduce from the inquiry which I propounded any criticism of the committee by reason of delay.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Not at all.

Mr. KING. I appreciate, as the Senator has stated, that the question is one of complexity, and many lawyers of ability have differed and will continue to differ regarding the decision of the court and as to the constitutionality of the proposed legislation.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 6, on page 2.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when the Senator from Washington had the floor a moment ago, responding to the question propounded by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], he stated the figures carried by this appropriation bill. I rose then for the purpose of asking the Senator if he had not omitted several million dollars which, directly and indirectly, are carried by the bill, which, to that extent, would augment the figures which he gave of $294,000,000 or $296,000,000. As I recall, there is an authorization in the bill for the sale of property and the utilization of all the funds derived therefrom. That may aggregate several million dollars. Then there is carried over from appropriations heretofore made which have not been exhausted a considerable sum. So that in the aggregate my understanding is that this bill appropriates and reappropriates, if I may be permitted that expression, more than $320,000,000. If I am in error as to that, I should be glad to have the Senator correct me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there is a fund, known as the "general supply account of the Navy," which is not in the general fund of the Treasury but is already held by the Navy for the purchase of supplies. It is a revolving fund. The bill as it came from the House to the Senate, no change having been made in it by the Senate committee, does authorize the use of $35,000,000 of that fund for carrying on the work of completion of ships now under construction.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if the bill does not authorize the application of proceeds derived from the sale of certain properties to some of the purposes defined in the bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; to the amount of $450,000 received from the sale of ordnance property.

Mr. KING. That is the aggregate, is it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. A fund derived from the sale of ordnance and ordnance materials to the extent of $450,000 is made available by the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there was some controversy in the Committee of the House, as I recall—I have not had time to read the hearings, but I saw some reference to it—in regard to a $19,000,000 charge, being an aggregate of various items, which seemed to lead to considerable dispute as to what was the total carried by the bill. Can the Senator advise me as to that item and what that embraces?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is impossible to tell what the Senator has in mind, unless he can be a little more specific. I have given him quite specific information as to what the bill carries. If the Senator will point out definitely any feature of the bill concerning which he desires information, I will supply it, if possible.

Mr. KING. I will endeavor to secure more definite information regarding that item before the bill is finally disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the item for experimental and research laboratory, on page 7, line 7, after "$20,000," to insert "in addition to the amount authorized by the preceding proviso," so as to read:

Provided, That $25,000 of this appropriation shall be available for the temporary employment of civilian scientists and technicists required on special problems: Provided further, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for technical, drafting, clerical, and messenger service shall not exceed $20,000 in addition to the amount authorized by the preceding proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 14, to insert:

NAVAL WAR RECORDS.

Toward the collection or copying and classification, with a view to publication, of the naval records of the war with the Central Powers of Europe, including the purchase of books, periodicals, photographs, maps, and other publications, documents, and pictorial records of the Navy in said war, clerical services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and other necessary incidental expenses, $19,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 4, to increase the appropriation for officers and employees in the office of the Judge Advocate General from $76,420 to $78,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator having the bill in charge what reductions, if any, have been made in the clerical force and in the civilian employees of the Navy Department here in Washington and in the various agencies and naval instrumentalities for which provision is made by this bill? What I have in mind particularly is that we have been promised material reductions in the civilian personnel of the various departments of the Government. The Senator will recall that during the war the number of Government employees in the District of Columbia necessarily was greatly increased until the total was considerably more than 100,000, whereas prior to the war the civilian personnel of the departments in Washington was approximately 37,000. I was wondering what diminution there had been, first, in the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, and, second, in the various agencies outside of Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There have been very considerable reductions in the civilian force. The Senator is probably familiar with the public controversy on that subject and the attempt to meet the demand for employment of men employed on the work of the Navy by curtailing the number of working days in a week and having a 5-day week instead of a 6-day week, so that by that system, without the expenditure of more money, an increased number of employees might be given part-time work.

There has been a very substantial reduction going on, and a readjustment of the working forces of all of the navy yards. A great deal of pressure has been brought to bear toward that end by officers of the Navy and by strict orders of the President to the heads of the various departments, and the result has been a cutting down of the forces to the bone and very much lower than was desirable, according to representations made by the department as to the required force.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Washington whether it is expected to finish this bill to-day? As I understand, it will go over until to-morrow in order to consider the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Is that correct?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no agreement to that effect. I think the understanding was that we would go ahead with the bill in the ordinary way, and give everybody an opportunity to discuss it at such length as he desired. How much time will be required in the consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Idaho it is impossible to tell, but when it is reached it will be taken up and considered, and such adjournments as may be necessary will be taken.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason of the inquiry is that I desire to introduce an amendment to another bill and have a few words to say about it, and I thought I would do that now unless there was great haste in passing this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow us to make a little bit of progress with this bill I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not take much time.

Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary read the amendment which I send to the desk, and which I desire to offer to the shipping bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The READING CLERK. On page 62 of H. R. 12817, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 712. Whereas the convention between the United States and Great Britain concluded on the 22d day of December, 1815, and extended by amendatory commercial convention, ratified April 2, 1828, between said countries, provides in Article II of the amended convention, "Either of the contracting parties, in case either should think fit, at any time after the expiration of the said 10 years—that is, after the 20th of October, 1828—on giving due notice of 12 months to the other contracting party, to annul and abrogate this convention, and it shall, in such case, be accordingly annulled and abrogated after the expiration of the said term of notice"; and

Whereas in section 34 of the merchant marine act passed by the Congress and approved June 5, 1920, the President was "authorized and directed within 90 days after this act becomes law to give notice to the several governments, respectively, parties to such treaties or conventions, that so much thereof as imposes any such restrictions on the United States will terminate on the expiration of such periods for the giving of such notice by the provisions of such treaties or conventions"; and

Whereas the President of the United States refused and failed to give notice as required by said act of Congress; and

Whereas in the opinion of the Congress the convention aforesaid discriminates against the trade and commerce of the United States; and

Whereas in any event said convention is no longer responsive in various respects to the commercial needs of the countries: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall within 90 days after the passage of this act give notice to Great Britain, as required in said conventions as amended, by leaving a copy of this act with the British ambassador to the United States, or, by mailing to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain, London, England, a like copy of this act.

Resolved further, That 12 months after said notice is received by the British ambassador or by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of Great Britain the said convention between the United States and Great Britain of date December 22, 1815, as amended by the said convention of date April 2, 1828, is hereby entirely abrogated and annulled, as provided in Article II of said amended convention ratified April 2, 1828.

Resolved further, That the President is hereby requested upon the abrogation of the said treaty as amended to negotiate with Great Britain in lieu of the convention hereby abrogated a convention more in consonance with modern conditions of trade and commerce between the two countries.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, several days ago, in the debate on the shipping bill, section 34 of the merchant marine act was referred to, and mention was made of the action of President Wilson first and the action of President Harding later in declining to give notice as required in section 34 of the said act of Congress. I stated at the time that I should offer later an amendment looking to the abrogation of those commercial conventions referred to in section 34. I thereupon wrote a letter to the Secretary of State asking for a list of the nations that were affected, the nations with which we had treaties which were or might be affected by the provisions of section 34 of the merchant marine act. I ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD my letter to the Secretary of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 13, 1922.

Hon. CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: Section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920 authorized and directed the President, within 90 days after the act became a law, to give notice to the several governments, parties to the treaties, which restrict the right of the United States to impose discriminating customs duties on imports entering the United States in foreign vessels and in vessels of the United States. As I recall, both President Wilson and President Harding declined to carry out the provisions of this act.

Would you be good enough to give me a list of the treaties containing such restrictive provisions? Should your office have copies of the several treaties, I would like to have copies; but if copies can not be obtained, will you give me the number, the dates, the countries with which they were negotiated, and the time of notice required to annul as to each treaty? I will greatly appreciate it.

Very sincerely yours,

KENNETH McKELLAR.

Mr. McKELLAR. I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD—and I shall not read it now, but simply refer to it—the reply of the Secretary of State to me, of date December 20, giving the names of the various nations that are affected by that provision of the act of 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 20, 1922.

Hon. KENNETH McKELLAR,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 13, 1922, asking for a list or copies of the treaties to which the United States is a party, containing provisions of the kind referred to in section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920, which restricts the right of the United States to impose discriminating customs duties on imports entering the United States in foreign vessels and in vessels of the United States. You also ask for information as to the time of notice required to annul each treaty.

Section 34 of the act of June 5, 1920, provides for a notice of the termination of treaty provisions between the United States and other countries "which restrict the right of the United States to impose discriminating customs duties on imports entering the United States in foreign vessels and in vessels of the United States, and which also restrict the right of the United States to impose discriminatory tonnage dues on foreign vessels and on vessels of the United States entering the United States." It is not clear what treaty stipulations Congress intended should be covered by this provision. I may, however, invite your attention to certain stipulations relating to discriminatory duties and shipping charges.

Nearly all of the so-called commercial treaties between this Government and other nations contain provisions securing for the nationals of each of the contracting parties complete equality in the matter of duties imposed on the cargoes of vessels of each country in the ports of the other. The purpose of such provisions is evidently to prevent any discrimination against vessels through the imposition of discriminatory duties on their cargoes. The following article in the treaty concluded with the Argentine Republic on July 27, 1853, is an example of a provision of this character:

ARTICLE VI.

"The same duties shall be paid and the same drawbacks and bounties allowed upon the importation or exportation of any article into or from the territories of the United States, or into or from the territories of the Argentine Confederation, whether such importation or exportation be made in vessels of the United States or in vessels of the Argentine Confederation."

The treaties just mentioned generally also contain other provisions securing for the nationals of each of the contracting countries reciprocal equality generally with regard to duties on goods shipped from one country into the other. Such stipulations stand in the way of discriminatory tariff duties without reference to agencies of transportation. The following comprehensive provision of this character is also found in the treaty with the Argentine Republic:

ARTICLE IV.

"No higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the territories of either of the two contracting parties of any article of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the territories of the contracting party than are, or shall be, payable on the like article of any other foreign country; nor shall any other or higher duties or charges be imposed in the territories of either of the contracting parties on the exportation of any article to the territories of the other than such as are, or shall be, payable on the exportation of the like article to any other foreign country; nor shall any prohibition be imposed upon the importation or exportation of any article of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the territories of either of the contracting parties to or from the territories of the other which shall not equally extend to the like article of any other foreign country."

It will be noted that provisions such as those in the above-quoted article relate to the importation of goods by land and by sea, and are not limited merely as are those rereferred to in the act of June 5, 1920, to goods imported in American vessels or in foreign vessels.

The treaties in question further contain provisions obligating each of the contracting Governments not to impose on the vessels of the other higher tonnage dues than those payable on its own vessels. Article V of the treaty with the Argentine Republic is illustrative of such provisions. It reads as follows:

ARTICLE V.

"No other or higher duties or charges, on account of tonnage, light or harbor dues, pilotage, salvage in case of average or shipwreck, or any other local charges, shall be imposed in the ports of the two contracting parties on the vessels of the other than those payable in the same ports on its own vessels."

The purpose of the so-called most-favored-nation clauses in treaties may be said to be to prevent discrimination in general and comprehensive terms by securing to each contracting party the benefit of any favor awarded to a third nation by the other contracting party. Article III of the treaty with the Argentine Republic may be cited as an example of such provisions. This article reads as follows:

ARTICLE III.

"The two high contracting parties agree that any favor, exemption, privilege, or immunity whatever, in matters of commerce or navigation, which either of them has actually granted, or may hereafter grant, to the citizens or subjects of any other government, nation, or State shall extend, in identity of cases and circumstances, to the citizens of the other contracting party, gratuitously, if the concession in favor of that other government, nation, or State shall have been gratuitous; or, in return for an equivalent compensation, if the concession shall have been conditional."

Provisions of the four general classes to which I have referred are found in treaties with the following countries: Argentine Republic, July 27, 1853; Belgium, March 8, 1875; Bolivia, May 13, 1858; Borneo, June 23, 1850; China, November 17, 1880, and October 8, 1903; Colombia, December 12, 1846; Costa Rica, July 10, 1851; Denmark, April 26, 1826; Ethiopia, June 27, 1914; Great Britain, July 3, 1815; Honduras, July 4, 1864; Italy, February 25, 1871; Japan, February 21, 1911; Liberia, October 21, 1862; Muscat, September 21, 1833; Netherlands, August 26, 1852; Norway, July 4, 1827; Ottoman Empire, May 7, 1830; Paraguay, February 4, 1859; Persia, December 13, 1856; Serbia, October 14, 1881; and Spain, July 3, 1902. It is possible that certain of the provisions of the treaty of commerce and navigation concluded with France on June 24, 1822, are within the intent of section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920.

As you probably recall, the treaty concluded between the United States and Cuba December 11, 1902, provides for free entry of certain commodities shipped from one country into the other and establishes certain rates of duties. Section 34 of the act of June 5, 1920, would seem to require the abrogation of all treaty stipulations that in any way restrict the Government of the United States from imposing discriminatory duties. This treaty with Cuba obviously stands in the way of imposition by the United States of discriminatory duties on certain Cuban products.

The majority of the above-mentioned treaties contain the customary stipulations with regard to termination of a treaty as a whole (not in part) by either party on 12 months' notice. The treaty of 1911 with Japan, which has an initial duration of 12 years, may be terminated by either party on six months' notice given on or after January 17, 1923, and the treaty of 1822 with France may be terminated on three months' notice under the agreement signed July 17, 1919. Of the treaties listed above, those with the Argentine Republic, Borneo, China (November 17, 1880), Liberia, Muscat, and the Ottoman Empire do not contain any stipulation with regard to notice of termination. The treaty of October 8, 1903, with China is operative for successive periods of 10 years from the exchange of ratifications on January 13, 1904, and may be revised at the end of any 10-year period on notice given by either the United States or China. The earliest date on which the treaty of June 27, 1914, with Ethiopia may be terminated is September 19, 1928.

The treaties and conventions concluded by the United States with foreign countries up to the year 1913, which are printed in the United States Statutes at Large, may be conveniently consulted in the compilation entitled "Treaties, Conventions, International Acts, Protocols, and Agreements between the United States and Other Powers," in three volumes, which is published by the Government Printing Office. Treaties concluded since the compilation of the third volume of this publication may be consulted in the several volumes of the Statutes at Large.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now offer as an amendment to the shipping bill the amendment that has just been read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McKELLAR. That amendment is in furtherance of the plan that was suggested by me to abrogate those treaties.

I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the convention between the United States of America and His Britannic Majesty of date December 22, 1815, as extended and amended by a commercial convention whereof the ratifications were exchanged on April 2, 1828. I ask unanimous consent to have both of them printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

GREAT BRITAIN—REGULATING COMMERCE.

Convention between the United States of America and His Britannic Majesty to regulate commerce between the two countries.—Signed at London July 3, 1815. Ratification advised by the Senate December 19, 1815. Ratified by the President December 22, 1815. Ratifications exchanged December 22, 1815. Proclaimed December 22, 1815.

James Madison, President of the United States of America, to all and singular to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas a convention between the United States of America and His Britannic Majesty, to regulate the commerce between the Territories of the United States and of His Britannic Majesty, was signed at London on the 3d day of July, in the year 1815, by plenipotentiaries respectively appointed for that purpose, which convention is in the words following, to wit:

"The United States of America and His Britannic Majesty being desirous, by a convention, to regulate the commerce and navigation between their respective countries, territories, and people in such a manner as to render the same reciprocally beneficial and satisfactory, have respectively named plenipotentiaries and given them full powers to treat of and conclude such convention; that is to say—

"The President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, hath appointed for the plenipotentiaries John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, and Albert Gallatin, citizens of the United States, and His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, has named for his plenipotentiaries the Right Hon. Frederick John Robinson, vice president of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade and Plantations, joint paymaster of His Majesty's forces, and a member of the Imperial Parliament; Henry Goulburn, Esq., a member of the Imperial Parliament and undersecretary of State, and William Adams, Esq., doctor of civil laws.

"And the said plenipotentiaries having mutually produced and shown their said full powers, and exchanged copies of the same, have agreed on and concluded the following articles, videlicet.

"ARTICLE THE FIRST.

"There shall be between the Territories of the United States of America and all the territories of His Britannic Majesty in Europe a reciprocal liberty of commerce. The inhabitants of the two countries, respectively, shall have liberty freely and securely to come with their ships and cargoes to all such places, ports, and rivers in the territories aforesaid to which other foreigners are permitted to come, to enter into the same, and to remain and reside in any parts of the said Territories, respectively; also to hire and occupy, houses and warehouses for the purposes of their commerce, and generally the merchants and traders of each nation, respectively, and shall enjoy the most complete protection and security for their commerce, but subject always to the laws and statutes of the two countries, respectively.

"ARTICLE THE SECOND.

"No higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the United States of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of his Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, and no higher or other duties shall be imposed on the importation into the territories of His Britannic Majesty in Europe of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States than are or shall be payable on the like articles being the growth, produce, or manufacture of any other foreign country nor shall any higher or other duties or charges be imposed in either of the two countries on the exportation of any articles to the United States or to His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, respectively, than such as are payable on the exportation of the like articles to any other foreign country, nor shall any prohibition be imposed on the exportation or importation of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States or of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe to or from the said territories of His Britannic Majesty in Europe, or to or from the said United States, which shall not equally extend to all other nations.

"No higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed in any of the ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same ports by vessels of the United States, nor in the ports of any of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe on the vessels of the United States than shall be payable in the same ports on British vessels.

"The same duties shall be paid on the importation into the United States of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, whether such importation shall be in vessels of the United States or in British vessels, and the same duties shall be paid on the importation into the ports of any of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, whether such importation shall be in British vessels or in vessels of the United States.

"The same duties shall be paid and the same bounties allowed on the exportation of any articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe to the United States, whether such exportation shall be in vessels of the United States or in British vessels, and the same duties shall be paid and the same bounties allowed on the exportation of any article the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States to His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe, whether such exportation shall be in British vessels or in vessels of the United States.

"It is further agreed that in all cases where drawbacks are or may be allowed upon the reexportation of any goods the growth, produce, or manufacture of either country, respectively, the amount of the said drawbacks shall be the same whether the said goods shall have been originally imported in a British or an American vessel. But when such reexportation shall take place from the United States in a British vessel or from the territories of His Britannic Majesty in Europe in an American vessel to any other foreign nation, the two contracting parties reserve to themselves, respectively, the right of regulating or diminishing in such case the amount of the said drawback.

"The intercourse between the United States and His Britannic Majesty's possessions in the West Indies and on the Continent of North America shall not be affected by any of the provisions of this article, but each party shall remain in the complete possession of its rights with respect to such an intercourse.

"ARTICLE THE THIRD.

"His Britannic Majesty agrees that the vessels of the United States of America shall be admitted and hospitably received at the principal settlements of the British Dominions in the East Indies vide licit, Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and Prince of Wales' Island, and that the citizens of the said United States may freely carry on trade between the said principal settlements and the said United States in all articles of which the importation and exportation, respectively, to and from the said territories shall not be entirely prohibited—provided only that it shall not be lawful for them in any time of war between the British Government and any State or power whatever to export from the said territories, without the special permission of the British Government, any military stores or naval stores or rice. The citizens of the United States shall pay for their vessels when admitted no higher or other duty or charge than shall be payable on the vessels of the most favored European nations, and they shall pay no higher or other duties or charges on the importation or exportation of the cargoes of the said vessels than shall be payable on the same articles when imported or exported in the vessels of the most favored European nations.

"But it is expressly agreed that the vessels of the United States shall not carry any articles from the said principal settlements to any port or place except to some port or place in the United States of America where the same shall be unladen.

"It is also understood that the permission granted by this article is not to extend to allow the vessels of the United States to carry on any part of the coasting trade of the said British territories, but the vessels of the United States having in the first instance proceeded to one of the said principal settlements of the British Dominions in the East Indies and then going with their original cargoes or part thereof from one of the said principal settlements to another shall not be considered as carrying on the coasting trade. The vessels of the United States may also touch for refreshment, but not for commerce, in the course of their voyage to or from the British territories in India, or to or from the dominions of the Emperor of China, at the Cape of Good Hope, the Island of St. Helena, or such other places as may be in the possession of Great Britain in the African or Indian Seas, it being well understood that in all that regards this article the citizens of the United States shall be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations of the British Government from time to time established.

"ARTICLE THE FOURTH.

"It shall be free for each of the two contracting parties, respectively, to appoint consuls for the protection of trade, to reside in the dominions and territories of the other party, but before any consul shall act as such he shall in the usual form be approved and admitted by the Government to which he is sent, and it is hereby declared that in case of illegal or improper conduct toward the laws or Government of the country to which he is sent, such consul may either be punished according to law, if the laws will reach the case, or be sent back, the offended Government assigning to the other the reasons for the same.

"It is hereby declared that either of the contracting parties may except from the residence of consuls such particular places as such party shall judge fit to be so excepted.

"ARTICLE THE FIFTH.

"This convention, when the same shall have been duly ratified by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of their Senate, and by His Britannic Majesty, and the respective ratifications mutually exchanged shall be binding and obligatory on the said United States and His Majesty for four years from the date of its signature and the ratifications shall be exchanged in six months from this time or sooner if possible.

"Done at London this 3d day of July in the year of our Lord 1815.

[SEAL.] JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.
[SEAL.] H. CLAY.
[SEAL.] ALBERT GALLATIN.
[SEAL.] FREDERICK JOHN ROBINSON.
[SEAL.] WILLIAM ADAMS."

Now, therefore, be it known that I, James Madison, President of the United States of America, having seen and considered the foregoing convention, have, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, accepted, ratified, and confirmed the same, and every clause and article thereof, subject to the exception contained in a declaration made by the authority of His Britannic Majesty on the 24th day of November last, a copy of which declaration is hereunto annexed.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed, and have signed the same with my hand. Done at the city of Washington this 22d day of December, A. D. 1815, and of the Independence of the United States the fortieth.

[SEAL.] JAMES MADISON.

By the President:
JAS. MONROE,
Secretary of State.

DECLARATION.

The undersigned, His Britannic Majesty's chargé d'affaires in the United States of America is commanded by His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to explain and declare upon the exchange of the ratifications of the convention concluded at London on the 3d of July of the present year for regulating the commerce and navigation between the two countries, that in consequence of events which have happened in Europe subsequent to the signature of the convention aforesaid, it has been deemed expedient and determined in conjunction with the allied sovereigns that St. Helena shall be the place allotted for the future residence of Gen. Napoleon Bonaparte under such regulations as may be necessary for the perfect security of his person, and it has been resolved for that purpose that all ships and vessels whatever, as well British ships and vessels as others, excepting only ships belonging to the East India Co. shall be excluded from all communication with or approach to that island.

It has therefore become impossible to comply with so much of the third article of the treaty as relates to the liberty of touching for refreshment at the island of St. Helena, and the ratifications of the said treaty will be exchanged under the explicit declaration and understanding that the vessels of the United States can not be allowed to touch at or hold any communication whatever with the said island so long as the said island shall continue to be the place of residence of the said Napoleon Bonaparte.

ANTHONY ST. JNO. BAKER.

WASHINGTON, November 24, 1815.

GREAT BRITAIN—COMMERCIAL.

Commercial convention between the United States of America and Great Britain. Concluded August 6, 1827. Ratification advised by the Senate January 9, 1828. Ratified by the President January 12, 1828. Ratifications exchanged April 2, 1828. Proclaimed May 15, 1828.

By the President of the United States of America, a proclamation:

Whereas a convention between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland was concluded and signed by their plenipotentiaries at London on the 6th day of August, 1827, which convention is, word for word, as follows:

"The United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, being desirous of continuing in force the existing commercial regulations between the two countries which are contained in the convention concluded between them on the 3d of July, 1815, and further renewed by the fourth article of the convention of the 20th of October, 1818, have, for that purpose, named their respective plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

"The President of the United States of America, Albert Gallatin, their envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to His Britannic Majesty;

"And His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Right Hon. Charles Grant, a member of his said majesty's most honorable privy council, a member of Parliament, and vice president of the committee of privy council for affairs of trade and foreign plantations; and Henry Unwin Addington, Esq.;

"Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in due and proper form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

"ARTICLE I.

"All the provisions of the convention concluded between the United States of America and His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, on the 3d of July, 1815, and further continued for the term of 10 years by the fourth article of the convention of the 20th of October, 1818, with the exception therein contained as to St. Helena, are hereby further indefinitely, and without the said exception, extended and continued in force from the date of the expiration of the said 10 years in the same manner as if all the provisions of the said convention of the 3d of July, 1815, were herein specifically recited.

"ARTICLE II.

"It shall be competent, however, to either of the contracting parties, in case either should think fit, at any time after the expiration of the said 10 years—that is, after the 20th of October, 1828—on giving due notice of 12 months to the other contracting party, to annul and abrogate this convention; and it shall, in such case, be accordingly entirely annulled and abrogated after the expiration of the said term of notice.

"ARTICLE III.

"The present convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged in nine months, or sooner if possible.

"In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the same and have affixed thereto the seals of their arms.

"Done at London the 6th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1827.

[SEAL.] ALBERT GALLATIN.
[SEAL.] CHA. GRANT.
[SEAL.] HENRY UNWIN ADDINGTON."

And whereas the said convention has been duly ratified on both parts, and the respective ratifications of the same were exchanged at London on the 2d day of April, 1828, by William Beach Lawrence, chargé d'affaires of the United States at the court of His Britannic Majesty, and the Right Hon. Charles Grant and Henry Unwin Addington, Esq., on the part of their respective Governments:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, John Quincy Adams, President of the United States of America, have caused the said convention to be made public, to the end that the same and every clause and article thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 15th day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight and of the independence of the United States the fifty-second.

[SEAL.] JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

By the President:
H. CLAY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the remarkable fact that we have had no commercial treaty with England since 1815 except this treaty just read. The commercial treaty that we agreed to at that time was agreed to under very peculiar circumstances. The War of 1812 was brought about by Great Britain's impressment of our seamen and by what we called her illegal blockade of ports. As we all recall from history, that war was fought with varying fortunes; and finally, in December, 1814, we agreed to a treaty of peace. Under that treaty the United States got nothing. Not a word is said in that treaty about the impressment of our seamen, and not a word is said about illegal blockades complained of by us—the two things for which we went to war. The only real thing favorable to us accomplished in that war was the Battle of New Orleans, which was fought by Gen. Andrew Jackson on the 8th of January, 1815, after the treaty of peace had been signed, but of which General Jackson did not know. It was under those circumstances, where we had come out in not a successful way, to put it mildly, that the commercial convention of December 22, 1815, was entered into between Great Britain and the United States.

That convention contains a number of discriminations against the American merchant marine. It is very natural that it should. Various discriminations were made. In reality, it applied only to dealings or commerce between the British Isles proper and the United States. It did not refer, except in certain particulars, to colonies. In all matters pertaining to the colonies of Great Britain, the United States was put to a very great disadvantage by the treaty, and under this treaty great discriminations have been practiced against the merchant marine of the United States ever since. I will say to the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], in charge of this bill, that one of the great reasons for our merchant marine not having been a success was because of the inequality and injustice of the treaty of 1815 between the United States and Great Britain, which, for some remarkable reason, has been in force ever since, and is in force to-day. I have already asked and received permission to put it in the RECORD; but, as giving an illustration, I want to read certain provisions of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to say to the Senator that there will be no dispute between him and me on that matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was sure there would not be. I want to read from article 3 of the treaty:

It is also understood that the permission granted by this article is not to extend to allow the vessels of the United States to carry on any part of the coasting trade of the said British territories, but the vessels of the United States having in the first instance proceeded to one of the said principal settlements of the British dominions in the East Indies, and then going with their original cargoes, or part thereof, from one of the said principal settlements to another shall not be considered as carrying on the coasting trade.

But here is the sentence to which I particularly refer:

The vessels of the United States may also touch for refreshment but not for commerce in the course of their voyage to or from the British territories in India, or to or from the dominions of the Emperor of China, at the Cape of Good Hope, the Island of St. Helena, or such other places as may be in the possession of Great Britain in the African or Indian seas, it being well understood that in all that regards this article the citizens of the United States shall be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations of the British Government from time to time established.

Somebody suggested here not long ago that it was very outrageous that American ships taking American cargoes to Egypt were prohibited by Great Britain from taking any Egyptian cargoes back to the United States, but had to bring their ships back in ballast; and that is true, but it is directly within the terms of this agreement. The United States has no power to trade in her own ships or, at all events, to bring cargoes from any of the British possessions in any Indian sea or in any African sea against Great Britain's objection; and as Great Britain has large possessions in those seas, the United States is thereby cut off from an enormous trade under this treaty. It is a discriminatory treaty all the way through. It ought to be abrogated. Both parties have outgrown it. It is in a different situation from the other twenty-odd treaties that were referred to in section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920, and for that reason ought to be treated separately. In the amendment that I have offered it is treated separately and it is abrogated, and the President is requested to make a new treaty with Great Britain which will give us the right to trade in British possessions without discrimination as well as in Great Britain itself.

Of course, as long as this treaty is in force America will be discriminated against by the British in trade and commerce, and it should not be so. We ought to be permitted to discriminate in return in the event a discrimination is continued against us.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am rather inclined to think that that situation has been changed by the acceptance by Great Britain of our act. I think it was in 1828 that we repealed our discriminating provision on the condition that other countries would accept it. England, I think, accepted it along about 1853.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that the act of 1828 did not apply to Great Britain, because we already had a treaty with Great Britain; but it did apply to Germany, it did apply to France, and it did apply to some others. At all events, the Secretary of State says in his letter that this treaty is included in section 34.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator will find that it did apply to Great Britain, although I have not looked the matter up recently.

Mr. McKELLAR. At all events, I am sure the Senator will agree with me, and I believe the Senate will agree with me, that we should not be bound by the provisions of that old treaty, made more than a hundred years ago, before the introduction of steam, before the tremendous improvements which have been made in trade and commerce all over the world, and that it ought to be abrogated. It not having been abrogated in the usual way, then the Congress, in its wisdom, should direct an abrogation of the treaty and request the President to negotiate a new treaty.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, the Senator knows I have been trying to get those treaties abrogated.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure it will be done if the Senator will vote for the amendment. I send to the desk a second amendment abrogating other treaties. I do not ask that this amendment be read, but I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I have an amendment here providing for the abrogation of treaties with all of the nations, except Great Britain and Japan, which the Secretary of State wrote me would be effected by the provision known as section 34 of the merchant marine act of 1920. This amendment, if adopted, would abrogate all of those treaties except two, one with Great Britain, which I have already discussed, and one with Japan, which I will now discuss for just a moment.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed in the RECORD and offered as an amendment to the pending shipping bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 52, after line 17, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 712a. Whereas in section 34 of the merchant marine act passed by the Congress and approved June 5, 1920, the President was authorized and directed within 90 days after this act becomes law to give notice to the several Governments, respectively, parties to such treaties or conventions, that so much thereof as imposes any such restrictions on the United States will terminate on the expiration of such periods for the giving of such notice by the provisions of such treaties or conventions"; and

"Whereas the President of the United States refused and failed to give notice, as required by said act of Congress, to the nations affected by said section; and

"Whereas treaties with the following countries, together with the date of conclusions of such treaties, are within the intent of section 34 of said merchant marine act of 1920: Argentine Republic, July 27, 1853; Belgium, March 8, 1875; Bolivia, May 13, 1858; Borneo, June 23, 1850; China, November 17, 1880, and October 8, 1903; Colombia, December 12, 1846; Costa Rica, July 10, 1851; Denmark, April 26, 1826; Ethiopia, June 27, 1914; Honduras, July 4, 1864; Italy, February 25, 1871; Liberia, October 21, 1862; Muscat, September 21, 1833; Netherlands, August 26, 1852; Norway, July 4, 1827; Ottoman Empire, May 7, 1830; Paraguay, February 4, 1859; Persia, December 13, 1856; Serbia, October 14, 1881; and Spain, July 3, 1902; and the treaty of commerce and navigation, concluded with France on June 24, 1822; and

Whereas the said conventions are no longer responsive in various respects to the commercial needs of the several countries: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall, within 90 days after the passage of this act, give notice to each of said nations, as required in said conventions, by leaving a copy of this act with the diplomatic representatives of each of said countries in Washington or by mailing to the officer conducting the foreign affairs of each of said countries a copy each of this act.

Resolved further, That within the time limit mentioned in each convention after said notice is received by the diplomatic representatives at Washington of each of said countries or after said notice has been received by the officer conducting the foreign affairs of each of said nations the said conventions, and each of them, between the United States and each of said countries of dates mentioned herein are hereby entirely abrogated and annulled, as provided for in said conventions.

Resolved further, That the President is hereby requested, upon the abrogation of the said treaties, or any of them, to negotiate with the diplomatic representatives of said countries, in lieu of said conventions hereby abrogated, a new convention more in consonance between the United States and the said several countries.

Mr. McKELLAR. In reference to the treaty with Japan, that treaty was made in 1911. It is a recent treaty and is different from all of the treaties which have been mentioned in the two amendments I have offered. It is very different from the treaty with Great Britain. It very greatly differs from the various commercial conventions which have been made with the other nations mentioned in the second amendment I have offered. As yet I think the Japanese treaty ought to be treated separately, and it ought to be considered more carefully than I have had time to consider it, and I shall not offer that amendment now but shall avail myself of the opportunity of offering it before the bill is finally passed upon.

I have taken occasion to bring these matters before the Senate at this time so that these amendments might be put in the RECORD, in order that the treaty with Great Britain might be put in the RECORD, and in order that this letter of Secretary Hughes might be put in the RECORD, for the benefit of Senators in their further consideration of the shipping bill.

I think those things are very pertinent. I think it is absolutely necessary, if we are to build up a real merchant marine in this country, that those treaties be abrogated and that American rights shall be protected in such new treaties as may be negotiated. As all such new treaties will have to come before the Senate of the United States, I take it that the rights of Americans will be protected properly in the negotiation of those treaties. No one is more concerned than I am in building up our merchant marine. We can not do it by giving a cash subsidy, but we can do it by taking off the shackles that now bind it and passing laws getting business for it.

That is all I have to say about the matter at this time.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, recurring to a few items we had passed, and in view of the question which I propounded to the Senator having the bill in charge relative to reductions in the number of civilian employees and a diminution in the cost of operation, I want to call the Senator's attention to the item of $108,000, appearing on page 2, line 5. I find that in the appropriation bill approved July 1, 1922, which carried the naval appropriations for the current year, there were appropriated, under the head of "Office of the Secretary, salaries, Navy Department," $72,080. If the Senator has the bill of last session before him he will find the allocation of that amount to various persons. In the pending bill this plan seems to have been dispensed with. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to expend $108,000 for employees in any way he may deem necessary. It gives him carte blanche authority. In all there are appropriated $125,000 under the head of "Office of the Secretary," as against $72,080 in the appropriation bill for the current year. I was wondering why this carte blanche authority was given the Secretary; why the plan followed in the preceding bill was not followed, and why the various officials were not pointed out, and the salaries which each should receive indicated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator failed to take into consideration the fact that in addition to the specific appropriation of $72,080 in the act for the current year, there was $58,340 appropriated in a lump sum, making a total appropriation of $130,420 in the act for the current year, against a total of $125,000 in the pending bill. In other words, the pending bill is a reduction in this item of $5,420, instead of an increase.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that we were promised, when the last naval appropriation bill was under consideration, either in the committee or on the floor, I do not recall just which, that the large number of temporary employees provided for in the bill were temporary, and that those employees would not be continued after the current year. As the Senator states, there were $53,340 provided for temporary employees, under the promise, as I understand, that those employees would not be retained as a permanent appendage to the department. Under the Senator's statement, there is a saving of only $5,000 in the office of the Secretary of the Navy, notwithstanding the fact that $53,000 plus were for temporary employees for the current year. It seems to me that after the end of this year those temporary employees should no longer be attached to the office.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has considered this reduction in only one office, and the Naval Establishment is the same as it was last year. There are the same number of vessels. In fact, there is considerable additional work in the decommissioning of vessels, in carrying out the terms of the arms limitation treaties, and in going on with the construction of those ships which we are to retain under those treaties. It seems to me the department is entitled to considerable commendation for being able to reduce, in one office, the appropriation for clerks, messengers, draftsmen, technical employees, and so forth, to that extent.

In that connection I would call the Senator's attention to the fact that from June 30, 1922, to September 30, 1922, the total decrease of civilians in the entire Naval Establishment, including the department, was from 55,843 to 48,641. Such a decrease is general in all the offices, both of the department and of the establishment outside of the department.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in view of the fact that during the war it was necessary to largely increase the forces in practically all of the departments of the Government, and particularly in the War Department and in the Navy Department, it does seem to me that the decrease to which the Senator now refers is inconsequential.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the comparison which I made did not relate to the war force at all. That was reduced on June 30, 1922, enormously. On June 30, 1917, there were 62,224 civilian employees in the department and in the Naval Establishment; on June 30, 1918, there were 100,392; on December 31, 1918, there were 129,843. In addition to those civilian employees on those dates there were large numbers of naval reservists employed on work ordinarily performed by civilian employees, and there has been a reduction from the civilian war force, of which the Senator has spoken, from 129,843 to 48,641.

Mr. KING. I am not sure I understand the Senator. As I understood him a few moments ago, there was a reduction during the past year from 55,000 to forty-odd thousand, and, as I understand the Senator, that related to the civilian force.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It did relate to the civilian force, but immediately following my statement the Senator from Utah said that was a small reduction to have been effected from the war force. I was pointing out to him that that was not the war force, but that the war force was very much greater.

Mr. KING. What I intended to state was that during the war the Government was necessarily compelled to employ a very largely increased force in all departments, and I mentioned particularly the War Department and the Navy Department. As the Senator knows, our Army was increased from a few thousand to more than 4,000,000, and the Navy was increased from a few thousand to more than 400,000, with the marines and all of the auxiliary departments or agencies.

The point I am making is that years after the war is over, and with the plea of the department that pending a return to normal conditions a certain number of temporary employees must be allowed, there is not the reduction in the temporary force that I was led to believe would be brought about.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator would point out and give information to the committee or to the Senate, even now while we are considering the bill, as to opportunities for further reduction of this force, requiring of the force ordinary industry and the hours of labor that are established by the law, I personally would be very glad indeed to join with the Senator in endeavoring to secure further reductions.

I call his attention to the fact, however, and I think the Senator will agree with me, that there has been a very energetic effort made by the Budget officers, I know much to the embarrassment of the Navy, to reduce the force and cut down expenses in every direction. Notwithstanding that effort, and notwithstanding the fact that the desires of the Navy were curtailed by the officers of the Budget, the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs reported the bill containing an amount less in this item than was recommended by the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before we proceed further in the consideration of the bill, I desire to submit some general observations. I think we may perhaps save as much time as we shall save later by discussing some general propositions at the present time.

It is perfectly clear to me that we are again threatened with a naval race. Different reasons for it have been assigned. I am not going to discuss it with reference to individual responsibility. But it is perfectly apparent that it is here, for the reasons which I shall undertake to disclose as the debate proceeds.

The House committee report which accompanied the bill had this to say:

> It is the committee's information that already large programs are planned of vessels up to the maximum size permitted under the agreement, and that new and larger types of subsurface craft have begun to put in an appearance. In other words, competition is on again in the single direction to which the unratified agreement does not extend, and if it be allowed to go on unchecked the purse strings again must be relaxed and this Government, like all the others, will be constrained to launch upon a new program to the extent necessary to keep us at least abreast of any of the other powers.

I am of the opinion that that statement is well founded, and unless something can be done to prevent it, the purse strings will again be relaxed and we are to have what we had hoped to avoid by the disarmament conference. Building is going on abroad, we are told, along all lines not specifically covered by the disarmament conference treaty. The things which were covered by that treaty have been regarded to some extent as not essential to a modern navy, and therefore the course now being pursued is that of a naval race in those things which really count in modern naval warfare.

There is a very pronounced propaganda in the country in favor of an increased or enlarged navy. There is also a very remarkable propaganda in favor of an increased or enlarged army. The reasons which are assigned for this are because not only of the building abroad in naval affairs, but because of the economic conditions and the discontent and distress which prevail throughout the world. We are told almost daily by the admirals of the Navy or by those who are high in authority in the Army that we may expect almost any day a condition of affairs abroad which will necessitate our having a vast navy and a very much larger army.

There was no more pronounced advocate of disarmament at the time of the disarmament conference was on than General Pershing. He stated, and stated truly, that unless some course could be adopted which would prevent the continuation of increased armament a practically universal breakdown must follow. On the 20th of December, 1920, General Pershing said:

> Unless some such move (as disarmament) be made, we may well ask ourselves whether civilization does not really reach a point where it begins to destroy itself and whether we are thus doomed to go headlong down through destructive war and darkness to barbarism.

That statement was made just about two years ago. For some reason, owing, I assume, to conditions which the general sees or thinks he sees, he has concluded that we should not commit ourselves to a program of disarmament, but, upon the other hand, we should build a much larger and stronger navy and also provide for a much larger army. He has been speaking throughout the country for the last two months upon this subject and has over and over again stated that conditions were such as to endanger the safety of the United States unless we should prepare upon an enlarged and increased scale both with reference to our Army and our Navy. I take it, therefore, that General Pershing has come to the conclusion that the theory of disarmament or limitation of armaments under present conditions is an impractical or an impossible one.

Speaking on the 12th of December, the present month, in New York City, it was said, according to the press reports:

At 11 o'clock yesterday, four hours to the minute from the hour of the armistice, Gen. John J. Pershing, speaking before the National Civic Federation at the Hotel Astor, began an earnest plea for America to abandon its "fallacious, fatuous, and foolish" policy of disarmament and to adopt a program for preparedness to defend the national life of the United States.

I shall not read at length from the address, but the address carries out the statement of the paper fully. General Pershing gave as his reason for his views the disturbing questions and problems of an economic or financial or business nature of the Old World, believing, apparently, that unless these can be adjusted and settled there is no possible way for us to remain out of another conflict, perhaps equal to the one from which we emerged four years ago.

General Harbord, the assistant of General Pershing, speaking shortly thereafter in the city of Washington, said that—

An effort was being made to disparage the work of the Army, deny its claims for further extension of credit, and displace its "old-line insurance" with a much-advertised substitute called "disarmament, presented as a panacea for every national ailment."

Continuing, he said he thought—that there were probably trying days ahead for "Uncle Sam, Limited," and while "ologies" and "isms" might come and go and conferences might confer, human nature remained the same—"men will be men, trade is trade, and nations will fight for economic supremacy."

Again, he said:

It is being handled—

That is, disarmament—

on the market by the same class of irresponsible speculators who for years have dabbled in similar fakes and cheap imitations. It will be presented to you in very attractive form by some of the smoothest agents of the business, among them those who, in the enthusiasm of newly conferred suffrage and anxious to do good, will endeavor to flood the market with this fake substitute for our old-line insurance, urging with all that fascinating inconsistency of mingled charms and hysterics which so often characterizes lovely woman.

I might quote at great length and by the hour from the views of different representatives of the Army and the Navy and of others also high in official position. I only quote them, Mr. President, to show that there already exists in the minds of these men the necessity for throwing off all effort in the limitation of armament under present conditions and to depart entirely from the program which they indorsed so earnestly and enthusiastically a year ago.

I take it, Mr. President, that they have sufficient reasons, from their viewpoint, for these statements. It is not my intention, as I said a moment ago, to indulge in personal criticism. I only call attention to the condition of affairs, and that is that we are again entering upon a competitive race in armament, that we are practically abandoning any further effort along the line of disarmament or the limitation of armament. Before we accept such a course we ought to survey the situation with reference to our present condition and as to what will probably follow. It is my purpose briefly to call attention to some of the conditions in this country at this time.

Mr. President, our present national indebtedness is between twenty-one billion and twenty-two billion dollars—an almost inconceivable sum when one attempts to measure it with any degree of accuracy or intelligence. In these days we speak of billions in glib terms, but when one comes to measure what $22,000,000,000 means in the way of an indebtedness it is pretty difficult to get a thorough comprehension of it. At the close of the Civil War we had an indebtedness of about two and a half billion dollars.

In the space of about 50 years we had reduced it about one-half. At the same rate of reduction we now have an indebtedness which it will take us over twelve hundred years to pay. When we seek to measure the payment of this debt in human toil, in energy, in sacrifice, and in suffering it is beyond the power of human language to portray the seriousness of this burden. The entire amount of gold which has been produced since 1493 is $5,000,000,000 less than our present national debt.

In addition to our national debt we have at present an annual expenditure of something about three and one-half billion dollars a year—possibly a little less, possibly a little more. It has not been so very long since we were regarded as unduly extravagant when it was known that we had had "a billion dollar Congress" in the way of appropriations; but now, four years after the close of the World War, after all those expenditures which have particularly to do with the prosecution of the war are supposed to have been eliminated, or at least greatly modified, we still have a national expenditure of some three and a half billion dollars a year.

That, however, Mr. President, only gives a very inadequate glimpse of the real condition of affairs in this country. When we take into consideration the national debt and the national expenditure we have only a portion, and a very inadequate portion, comparatively speaking, of the entire debt and the entire burden which rest upon the American people at this time. I have before me some figures with reference to the indebtedness of the States and the cities and the annual tax levies in the States, and the increase of indebtedness and of taxes, which has been furnished me by the Census Bureau. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to call attention in detail to all of the figures, but I wish to direct attention to the enormous increase of indebtedness and the enormous increase of taxes during the last four or five years.

I shall compare the statistics for a period prior to our entrance into the World War with those for a period after the termination of the war in various States, some of which were under the administration of one party and some under the administration of the other party. I desire to disclose what is actually taking place throughout this country not only in the way of increasing our burdens by the Federal Government, but what has become, in a sense, a national disease, the increasing of indebtedness everywhere. I cite, for instance, the increase of the levy of general taxes on real and personal property in the following States:

The levy in Arizona June 20, 1915, was $1,830,262, which increased in three years to $3,746,137; in Colorado on June 30, 1915, it was $1,830,262, and on November 30, 1920, it had increased to $5,518,229; in Idaho on September 30, 1914, it was $1,044,880, and had increased on September 30, 1920, to $3,095,482; in Illinois, covering the same period, the tax levy had increased from $11,788,000 to $16,939,000; in Indiana it had increased from $7,889,000 to $11,677,000; in Massachusetts from $8,750,000 in 1914 to $14,000,000 on November 30, 1920. In Minnesota on July 31, 1914, the tax levy was $6,974,000, but it had increased on June 30, 1921, to $11,493,000—not giving the hundreds of dollars. In Nebraska in 1914 it was $3,681,000, but increased in 1920 to $8,124,000; in New Jersey it increased from $11,160,000 to $22,334,000; in New York from $1,103,449 in 1914 to $14,130,000 in 1920.

Mr. LODGE. Do the figures which the Senator from Idaho is giving refer to State taxes?

Mr. BORAH. They cover the increased levies in taxes on real and personal property.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In New York it should be billions of dollars, should it not?

Mr. BORAH. I thought that myself and I called up the Census Bureau. I could not understand those figures, but that is the way they were furnished to me.

In North Dakota the tax levy increased from $1,347,000 to $2,941,000; in South Carolina from $1,843,000 to $3,401,000; in Texas it increased from $10,286,000 to $21,023,000; in the State of Washington it increased from $8,317,000, in 1914, to $17,459,000 on September 30, 1920; in West Virginia it increased from $1,276,000, in 1915, to $3,220,000 in 1921; in Wyoming in 1914 the tax levy amounted to $580,659, but it increased to $1,547,955.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question: Do I understand him to say that the figures stated by him represent the increase in taxes which are laid and collected in the various States enumerated by him?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. They represent the increase in the general property taxes levied on real and personal property in the respective States.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, has the Senator from Idaho made any inquiry in order to ascertain how much of the increase in the taxes referred to by him is due to the inability of the States to raise revenue from other sources which hitherto were available? The result was inevitable in my State.

Mr. BORAH. I am not interested in that question, Mr. President, because it is immaterial to me from what part of the goose the feather is plucked.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to follow my inquiry——

Mr. STANLEY. If the Senator will excuse me, I desire to say if you have two geese and kill one of them, you have got to pluck the other a little cleaner.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it is just that much harder on the goose that is living. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho if the authorities who furnished him these statistics furnished figures showing the increase in property values upon which the taxes were collected?

Mr. BORAH. No; they did not do so. Such figures can be obtained, of course, but I do not happen to have them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In other words, I wish to know whether the rate of taxation or the taxes themselves had been increased out of proportion to the increase in the value of the property upon which the taxes have been levied or assessed?

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether in compiling the figures as to the increase in taxes to which he refers as having taken place in the various States any account has been taken of what the States have voted for the soldiers' bonus, for which bonds have been issued, or whether any account has been taken of the bonds which have been authorized and issued in various States for the building of roads. For instance, in my own State the increase of indebtedness is entirely due to bonds which were issued for the construction of public highways.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the purpose for which I cited the figures did not involve the question of the cause of the levy of the taxes. I am only seeking to show the increase in taxation. So far as I am concerned now, for the purpose of the question which I have in mind, it is immaterial to me whether the taxes were increased because of the issue of bonds or whether they were increased for one purpose or another; but this tax burden is now resting upon the people of the different States. Those States may have imposed it upon themselves—of course they did; the burden would not be there if they had not—but it is a form of extravagance, an increase of the burden, regardless of the reasons which actuated the people when they laid on the burden.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the figures submitted by the Senator from Idaho, which he has obtained from the Census Office, do not include the indebtedness to which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] referred, namely, bonded indebtedness.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no; it does not include bonded indebtedness.

Mr. KING. So the Senator from Colorado is entirely in error, in my opinion, in attempting to include within the figures mentioned the indebtedness of his State resulting from the issuance of bonds. The figures which the Senator from Idaho is citing merely represent the increase in the taxes.

Mr. BORAH. The figures given by me do not include bonded indebtedness.

Mr. KING. And, may I say, they do not include the taxes which are levied by counties, by municipalities, and school districts of the States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is all very true; but you can not pay the interest on bonds without levying taxes, and bonds bearing interest issued for roads and for schools have a very direct bearing upon the amount of these taxes; but none of it has anything to do with the support of the Military Establishment because not a dollar or a cent of those moneys is expended for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with that. I am simply undertaking to show the economic condition of this country as it is developed by the burden of taxes which we are carrying, whether imposed by the city, the State, the county, or the Nation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Senator will agree, I suppose, that the burden has not been increased if the valuation of the property has increased in proportion to the amount of taxes laid upon it. The size of the actual figures would be increased, but the burden would not be increased.

Mr. BORAH. No; if that is true, provided the income of the property kept pace with the assessed value; but there is the rub.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am inclined to think that the amount of taxes levied upon the people has increased beyond all bounds, beyond the increased value of the property on which the taxes are assessed; but if the property has increased in valuation the burden would not be increased.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, that formula would be correct as applicable to real estate if the productivity of the land increased with its nominal value; but a mere rise in the price of the land without any increase in its productiveness, with a corresponding increase of taxation, would be an unalleviated burden, as I see it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I had occasion not long ago to look into this matter. The best test is what part of the aggregate annual earnings of the people each year is taken for taxation. At the time indicated by the Senator the aggregate percentage of earnings taken for taxation purposes was about 6 per cent or less. Now about 16 per cent of the aggregate earnings of the people is taken for State, local, and Federal taxes. I think that is a pretty fair test as to whether or not taxation is excessive when nearly one-sixth of the earnings of the people annually is now taken for tax purposes. Before the date indicated by the Senator about 6 per cent of the aggregate annual earnings was consumed for taxation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, as the Senator from Kentucky says, it is a question of the income from the property; and the test of that is disclosed by the fact that you can go into any agricultural region that I know of west of the Mississippi River and pick up any county newspaper and you will find hundreds or perhaps thousands of acres of land advertised for sale for taxes—land which is as valuable and as rich land as lies outdoors. I remember that in passing through one agricultural State I happened to buy two papers on the train, and I looked over the list of tax sales, and I found—and you will find it everywhere you go—that thousands of people are being sold out for taxes; so it must be that there is a disparity between the income from this property and the taxes, regardless of the fanciful value which they may put upon the property itself.

I take another test of this proposition, and that is the per capita increase of taxes in these States.

The per capita increase in Montana from 1914 to 1920, omitting the cents, was from $7 to $12 per capita. In Nebraska the increase was from $3 to $10; in New Hampshire, from $4 to $14; in New Jersey, from $6 to $11; in New Mexico, from $4 to $15; in Oregon, from $6 to $26; in Rhode Island, from $6 to $14; in South Dakota, from $5 to $20; in Vermont, from $7 to $14; in Washington, from $8 to $13; in Wyoming, from $7 to $24; in Colorado, from $4 to $11; in Idaho, from $5 to $16; in Illinois, from $3 to $7; in Iowa, from $3 to $10; in Minnesota, from $7 to $17. All other States, should I take the time to read the figures, would disclose a similar situation.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] observed that this had nothing to do with the matter which is now before the Senate. I think it has a vast amount to do with it in one way. The capacity of the people of the United States to respond to the taxes which are now being placed upon them, by the Federal Government down, is becoming a very serious proposition. The man who pays the tax to the city or State is the same citizen who pays to the Federal Government.

We all know that there is widespread discontent throughout the United States; that there is complaint from almost every line of business and every avocation that they are unable to meet their taxes and the interest upon their mortgages. All that has its bearing when we come to consider the question of entering upon another great naval race or an armament race, and thereby adding millions if not billions to the already crushing burden. You can only get money out of the Treasury of the United States after you have put it in, and you can only get it by taking it from these people who are already carrying this superhuman load now resting upon them, from the county up to the Federal Government. It all has its relevancy upon the question as to the economic condition of the people of the United States at this time.

I call attention to one other item, Mr. President, and that is the taxes upon railroads. I am not going to consider all the railroads, but enough to give an illustration.

We discuss considerably in these days the question of reducing freight rates; and the reduction of freight rates is an indispensable step in the recovery of our producing classes, because at the present time the freight rates are such as to take away all possible profit from that which they may produce. It will be very difficult to reduce freight rates if we continue in this country to increase taxes upon the railroads as we have for the last four years. More than one-half of all the net earnings of the railroads which I shall mention was taken during the last year to pay taxes. That comes back upon the producer, upon the shipper. It is a part of the tax which he pays, ultimately and inevitably, as much as if it were levied upon his personal property or upon his real estate. These public utilities must collect this money from but one source, and that is from those who ship; so, as a matter of fact, it is another form of tax directly upon that class of people.

In 1916 the tax upon the railroads in Idaho was $540 per mile. In 1920 it was $1,458 per mile.

In 1916 in Oregon it was $530 per mile. In 1920 it was $1,061 per mile.

In 1916 in the State of Washington it was $772 per mile. In 1920 it was $1,709 per mile.

The taxes per mile upon the following roads in 1921 were as follows:

Santa Fe, $1,226 per mile.
Chicago & Northwestern, $1,007 per mile.
Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, $809 per mile.
Great Northern, $1,016 per mile.
Northern Pacific, $1,354 per mile.
Southern Pacific, $1,779 per mile.
Union Pacific, $1,355 per mile.

I have also the per capita increase in some of the large cities of the United States.

The per capita tax in 1918 in Chicago was $26; in 1920, $32.

In New York in 1918 it was $30; in 1920, two years afterwards, $38.

In San Francisco in 1918 it was $26; in 1920, $36.
In Cincinnati in 1918 it was $27; in 1920, $36.
In Pittsburgh in 1918 it was $35; in 1920, $45.
In Philadelphia in 1918 it was $25; in 1920, $35.
In St. Louis in 1918 it was $19; in 1920, $28.
In Boston in 1918 it was $33; in 1920, $49.
In Minneapolis in 1918 it was $28; in 1920, $42.
In Los Angeles in 1918 it was $28; in 1920, $45.
In Seattle in 1918 it was $31; in 1920, $56.
In New Orleans in 1918 it was $19; in 1920, $36.

Without taking further time of the Senate to go into these figures, there is no place where you touch the producer, the business man, or the man who has to pay the tax, that there has not been a doubling and trebling of the taxes during the last three or four years. We know the result from the conditions which confront us in this country at the present time. We must bear in mind that the Secretary of the Treasury advised us only a few days ago not only of the conditions which prevail throughout the country with reference to the increase of taxes, but also that there has been a drying up of the tax receipts to the amount of about $1,000,000,000.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. At that point I respectfully suggest to the Senator—not to divert him—that I am deeply impressed with what he says with reference to the drying up of the sources of taxation.

Mr. BORAH. I did not intend to touch that sensitive nerve. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANLEY. I do not mean to intimate that it is not perfectly proper and perfectly right to dry up these sources; but it is just as well for us to face the music, and to realize that we have transferred the burden of taxation from the luxuries of the rich to the necessities of the poor, from the vices of the vicious to the virtues of the good.

For instance, the average rate of taxation in these States, I should say, would be about 40 cents on the hundred dollars, and, as a rule, farm lands are assessed at 75 per cent of their value. At a 40-cent rate and a 75 per cent valuation, it takes $300 invested in land to pay the State $1 in taxes. The same $300 formerly invested in an alcoholic beverage, with a tax of $10 on the gallon, would pay the Government just $15,000. In other words, that business was just fifteen thousand times as able to bear the burden of taxation as the land.

It is all right, we have done it; but it is the inevitable consequence that this richest source of taxation having been, as the Senator has said, dried up entirely, the overwhelming burden must fall upon virtuous and abstemious citizens like the Senator and myself. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. BORAH. The Internal Revenue Bureau reports that for the year ended last June the receipts decreased $1,397,905,978, to be exact.

I also observed in the London Outlook a few days ago this statement:

> On March 31, 1919, there were arrears of income tax—excluding the second installments, due in July—amounting to £55,000,000. In 1920 the figure had risen to £73,000,000. By 1921 it was £86,000,000. And this year it had reached the gigantic total of £110,000,000.

Of course, if we were the only nation embarrassed by heavy taxes or suffering from economic conditions such as confront us we might very well conclude that it would be only a question of time when we should escape from them. But we are surrounded by nations who are infinitely worse off. The conditions in Europe and elsewhere, other than possibly one nation in the Orient, are very much worse than are the conditions in the United States, and that helps to accentuate the economic conditions which torment our own people. I call attention very briefly to some of the conditions abroad, because later I propose to discuss that more at length.

Sir George Paish, who visited this country a few days ago, said:

> The credit of Europe is practically exhausted and the credit of other borrowing nations in almost the entire world will be exhausted, and trade will collapse and there will be almost universal bankruptcy, national and individual. * * *
> Will the prime ministers of the Entente nations when they meet recognise that the policy hitherto pursued enhances the mischief that the war caused to the credit of Europe and that all the great nations of Europe are either bankrupt or on the verge of bankruptcy and several other nations in the world approaching bankruptcy?

Some months ago there was a commission appointed in England to make a particular study of economic conditions and of the increase of taxes, and later it made its report, one of exceedingly great interest. I shall not read it all, but only the concluding lines. The report states:

> We see, therefore, that at present we are slithering down an inclined plane of prodigality and indebtedness that will land us, unless we act promptly and resolutely, in the ditch. We must cut down our expenditures, we must reduce taxation, otherwise there is nothing before us but a progressive series of Budget deficits, with all the prejudice to national credit and all the trade depression which accompany them.

We are advised within the last few days by the Prime Minister of England that under present conditions England can not pay her debt. We are advised also that France is unable to meet her debt. We know that Russia is unable to meet her indebtedness. In other words, all of the great powers of Europe are now either bankrupt, confessedly so, or are approaching or nearing bankruptcy.

This is the condition, inadequately and most briefly stated, which confronts us at the beginning of the year 1923; $250,000,000,000 of indebtedness resting upon the great nations of the world; $22,000,000,000 of it ours, with the leading nations in the world, outside of our own, announcing to the world that they are unable to meet their indebtedness. Of course, if there is no escape from adding to that burden we will undoubtedly go forward and add to it. What the consequences may be no man can know. But if there is any possible way to avoid adding to the burden which already rests upon the energy and the brain of the human family, every effort ought to be made which can be made to avoid it. It is the most vital problem with which we are confronted. Additional taxes spell disaster.

These figures which I have given, Mr. President, tell their own story. They reveal a condition of affairs the seriousness of which can not be overestimated. They disclose a tendency in our own national life the evil consequences of which, if not arrested, no one can adequately foretell. It is not the fault of this or that political party alone. It can not be remedied by partisan denunciation of the opposition. It is a broader and deeper question than that. It is a national question. It is a national problem. It is a national disease. If we can not as a people, as a nation, come to comprehend its significance, its demoralizing and destructive effect, not only upon the individual but upon our institutions, and deal with it as a great national problem, then we shall not deal with it efficiently or effectively at all. There is no enemy of orderly government at once so subtle and still so powerful as oppressive taxes. There is no adversary with which free governments have had so often to contend and none with which they have contended so unsuccessfully. In our plan the contentment of the average citizen is the foundation upon which the whole structure rests. We built a Government dependent almost entirely upon the character, the physical and moral well-being of the people. Without that the whole fabric crumbles. Without that the whole scheme fails utterly. Nevertheless, in 150 years there has been laid upon the backs of our people a burden in the way of taxes and debts such as no free people ever before undertook to carry. I look upon it as a distinct menace, a supreme tragedy. To refuse to lighten this load in every way possible is a reckless trifling with the orderly well-being of society. To unnecessarily increase it is a betrayal of representative government. The crisis is here. The painful question, the accusing interrogatory, is: Are the men here equal to the task which fate and circumstances have imposed upon them?

I know it will be said that notwithstanding our debt is very large, our expenses enormous, our taxes most onerous, still we are a strong people—comparatively speaking, a young people—and the load may be made even heavier without signal disaster. Possibly so. The people may toil on like beasts of burden, and again they may not. Anything in which there is life may strive and eat and sleep and strive again. But just anything can not be a responsible citizen in a republic. We dare not leave out of consideration the fact that our system of government calls for men and women, not merely so many foot-pounds of human energy; for homes, not hovels. Intelligence, character, confidence, outlook, faith in the Government, and faith in the future are just as essential to the citizenship upon which our Government rests as muscle and brawn. Contentment in the home, education for the child, are to free institutions what armies and navies are to despotic powers. A fiscal policy which destroys these is an abandonment of government itself. And yet we know the first baneful result of oppressive taxes is to turn the child out of school and plant discontent and distress in the home. The struggle in life may go on, but education can obtain only where there is to a certain extent at least economic ease. There is much excitement in certain quarters of late over the activity of those who would teach our children to hate war. But if I had to choose security for my country between a discontented, tax-ridden people and a large standing army upon the one hand and a nation of happy homes and prosperous people and no army, not a soldier, not a gun, I would choose the latter. In the former instance there may come a time when the soldier will fraternize with the discontented citizen and your security crumbles in a single hour. In the latter instance, the citizen is a soldier every hour of his life when his country is assailed. The people best prepared to meet the demands of the future, whether of war or peace, are the people economically sound and strong. Modern warfare is not a test of armies or navies, but a test of peoples.

It seems to be the view of many that since we have not yet experienced, as a people, "The pestilence that walketh in darkness nor the destruction that wasteth at noonday," therefore, we need have no fear—that we need not take even the precaution of the mariner of old to study the signs of the sky as the clouds begin to gather. But is that the line of security in modern representative government? Is it the part of wisdom to await actual outbreaks? Will nothing move us but misery and want? In these days when men mingle their thought with their labor and in a world rich with natural wealth, throbbing with God's own blessings, men and women demand, and have a right to demand, of their Government, of organized society, something more than the mere right to live and serve, something more than sheer existence. They demand, and have a right to demand, the privilege to share the world's comforts and blessings as well as it burdens and responsibilities. One has studied to little purpose the lessons of this war, the teachings which have come out of this seismic change, who does not realize that the people see more clearly their rights and also their opportunities; that they feel far more released from parties and leaders and creeds than ever before. They will not consent that waste and incompetency, extravagance and inefficiency shall stand between them and their rightful portion of the world's wealth and the world's blessings. The beauty of this blessed old Republic of ours is that it is not necessary for the citizen to go into the street or appeal to force in order to get relief. He can effectuate his purposes through the ballot box and the commanding power of public opinion, and effectuate his purposes at will, as every political sign of the zodiac now unmistakably indicates.

The American people ask, indeed, in my opinion, the people of the world ask, in their great struggle to regain their own, to get from under the ruins of a world cataclysm, that governments shall appreciate the crushing load under which they are bending and make known that appreciation by withholding additional burdens. Bless their energy with hope, baptize their efforts with promises of reward, and they will rebuild upon the ruins of war even a nobler civilization, for into its woof and warp they will weave the experiences so dearly bought. There is nothing finer in all the history of our country than the spirit, the courage, the willingness to sacrifice, with which business men, farmers, laborers, and all classes have carried the load placed upon them for the last 10 years. They have worked and schemed and carried on, bought Liberty bonds, and given millions for charity and paid taxes. They have met the task with fortitude and rare courage and until lately with marvelously little complaint. But four years have passed since the war. The load increases and the hour has come when relief must be had. The country must, for the whole country's sake, experience a change. There is such a thing as moral breakdown as well as physical exhaustion.

Later in the debate I shall seek to show that this whole economic condition is associated directly or indirectly with the reparation clauses of the Versailles treaty; that until that problem is adjusted upon a basis of reason and sound economic principles they can not get better and may become very much worse. My remarks to-day are preliminary to the discussion of the question of whether we can be of service in making that adjustment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think it would be impossible even for the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], with all of his eloquence and power, to emphasize too greatly or to inveigh too vehemently against the growing tendency of public debt. But I believe it would be a great mistake to allow the statement which the Senator has just made, in which he has called the attention of the country to the burden of taxation, to go in such way as to create the impression that the part of taxation to which he has referred and which he has put in the RECORD has been caused by the maintenance of national defense or that in any respect whatever even the entire abandonment of the Navy and the wiping out of existence of the Army would reduce the rates in the various States, the table of which the Senator has just given to the Senate.

The Senator started his remarks by calling attention to the report of the House committee upon the bill. He followed that by an indorsement of what the committee said as to the continuation of competitive armament and competitive naval construction between the naval powers of the world. The Senator did not call attention to the fact, but no doubt he had it in mind, that the bill as it came from the House not only was accompanied by a report calling attention to this condition, but that the House undertook to meet the evils which were pointed out in the report and which have been emphasized by the Senator's speech by incorporating in the bill this language:

> The President is requested to enter into negotiations with the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan with the view of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to limiting the construction of all types and sizes of subsurface and surface craft of 10,000 tons standard displacement or less, and of aircraft.

So that the very issue which the Senator suggests here has been foreseen by the House of Representatives. It has been approved by the Senate Committee on Appropriations for naval affairs, and if the Senate passes the bill which is now pending it will be in strict accordance with the argument which the Senator from Idaho has just now made.

But, Mr. President, I happen to have at hand some figures indicating quite clearly and, in fact, startlingly the enormous burden of taxation imposed upon the people for local, municipal, and State purposes in the various States, which was a very large part of the substance of the matter to which the Senator from Idaho referred; and it would not be affected in any way whatever, even though such a conference as proposed in the bill should be called and even if it should result in a further limitation of armament along those lines that were not covered by the agreement which was reached in the conference recently held in this city between the great naval powers of the world. In a statement prepared by Captain Overstreet it was said:

> Where does the taxpayers' money go? It goes largely to meet city, county, and State budgets, which are constantly increasing at an alarming rate. In New York City the city budget in 1901 was little over $99,000,000; in 1911 it was $174,000,000; while in 1921 it had grown to nearly $346,000,000.

I turn to another portion of his statement and call attention to the fact that in 1922 it had increased to $345,530,000. Proceeding to read from the former paragraph:

> The budget of 1901 would not pay the interest on the city debt of 1921, as the debt is over a billion dollars.
> In the agricultural States of the West it is surprising to find even higher rates of taxation to meet State and county budgets, with high rates to meet city budgets. The taxpayers of Lincoln, Nebr., a city of only 55,000 people, have to meet a city budget of over $1,000,000; have to meet their quota of a county budget of $534,000; and their quota of a State budget of $30,000,000. Their quota to build battleships (on a population basis) is but $34,000, but on a Federal income tax basis it would be much less.

That calculation was based upon a naval appropriation bill of $400,000,000, more than $100,000,000 in excess of the amount covered by the pending measure. I continue reading:

> The agricultural county of York, Nebr.—population 17,146—must raise over $172,000 to meet the State budget, nearly $520,000 to meet township and county budgets. The people of the county seat, York—population 5,388—must raise annually nearly $190,000 to meet city, township, county, and State budgets. The farmer should realize that the tax he pays on his land, buildings, live stock, and crops goes to meet the ever-growing expenses of his township, county, and State, and that not one penny of these taxes goes to build battleships or to the support of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, that merely illustrates the condition in all the States, the burden to which the taxpayers are subjected and the purposes for which these taxes are collected.

The greatest menace to the world to-day, in my opinion, both as to imposing the necessity for the burden of taxes and as a menace to the peace of the various peoples of the world, is the ultrareactionary bolshevistic government of Russia. It was established under a plea of universal peace, and yet to-day it is maintaining a highly drilled and constantly exercised army of 1,500,000 men. The purposes of that government, while calling itself progressive in a term that is so loosely used in these times, are as a matter of fact ultrareactionary. It proposes not only to go back to previous decades and to previous centuries but to go back scores of centuries and to establish again in the world a condition of primeval communism.

The next great menace in the world is the reactionary influence of the military party of Germany. It proposes to go back not necessarily to a state of communism but it does propose to go back as far as the feudalism of the Middle Ages and to establish on the ruin of modern democracy an autocracy to which the whole world will be subjected if it can organize the power to bring it under its will.

I do not know what can be accomplished by calling a conference of nations to consider these matters. There was a time not many years ago when if the prudent statesmen of the world had looked a few years into the future they could have seen an opportunity to use the power of the armed democracies of the world—France, Great Britain, and the United States, having equipped and in a thorough state of training millions of veterans who had just come through the Great War, to exterminate both of those great menaces from which the world is now suffering, necessitating national defense, imposing the necessity of taxation, disturbing the psychology of the people, keeping them in a constant dread and terror that at any day there may be launched upon the world another great horror as that which such a short time ago plunged it into unspeakable distress.

If these armies had marched into Berlin and collected the reparations there and ended the war, we would have been saved the necessity of these constant series of conferences which each winds up in a wider disagreement and a more unsettled condition than existed before the conference was called.

If when the Bolshevists of Russia broke down the army of the eastern front and under the pay of Germany betrayed the Allies, the Allies had sent even a few divisions of the veterans of that war to sustain the great leaders of constitutional democracy in Russia and to reestablish the lines which were standing for the principles for which the Allies were fighting, that menace would have been exterminated, and the conditions to which the Senator from Idaho refers with so much eloquence would not confront and vex and trouble the world to-day.

I do not know, Mr. President, what would come in case the President should consider and should act upon the suggestion which is contained in the bill and call another conference of the naval powers to consider the question which the Senator from Idaho has discussed. I know that it is but a short time since such a conference was called. There was general acclaim and general approval of the representatives appointed by the President to represent the people of the United States in that conference. There was no criticism as to their patriotism and none as to their ability and their statesmanship.

At the time at least it was considered that the results of the conference were a substantial gain in the interest of economy and of the peace of the world. It can not be said that the questions which the Senator from Idaho has discussed were not submitted to that conference, for they were considered and discussed, and out of it all came the best that could be obtained, in view of the practical difficulties, the conflicting views and the conditions of the various countries whose representatives were assembled around the table here in Washington.

It was stated on the floor of the other House by a Member of that body while this bill was under discussion there that the President was already taking steps to endeavor to bring together another meeting of the nations for the purpose of a further limitation of naval armament. I do not know upon what authority that statement was based, but I read it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It may be so, because I know that it would be in accordance with the wishes and with the policies as manifested by the previous actions of the administration. It may be that some good would come from it; possibly no harm would result; although harm has resulted, in my opinion, from the continued agitation, the continued series of conferences, the continued discussions, and the continued controversies between the nations of Europe over the question of German reparations and the reestablishment in Europe of normal conditions, economically and otherwise.

What would be the effect upon the question of peace if we should reach an agreement more comprehensive than the one which was formulated in the recent treaty providing for the limitation of naval armament, which was confined to capital ships and to aircraft carriers and to other types of ships of a tonnage greater than 10,000 tons? It was thought by the naval experts and the foreign relations offices of the various Governments, whose representatives were assembled there, that the agreement which was made between the powers participating in the conference for the limitation of the construction of battleships, which they agreed upon as the standard unit of naval power, would tend to bring about an end of competitive naval construction.

It was hopefully and confidently announced by many at that time that the result of the conference meant perpetual peace, although, of course, it was realized by practical men that that was largely a visionary dream.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield the floor in just a moment. I was merely going to add that the experience of a few brief months since that conference ended has been that it was a very easy matter for those nations to find other lines of competition rather than in the line of the construction of battleships. The information which now comes to us is that they are engaged in a modernization of their old ships; increasing the range of their guns, adding subsurface armor protection, increasing the thickness of the decks of their vessels, making them more formidable engines of war within the terms of the treaty; that they are building fast cruisers; that they are engaged in the construction of submarines of a larger type; and that the same menace which grows out of the competition of nations in the construction of navies exists as it did before. From that experience it is not very hard to realize that even if we should altogether put a stop to the construction of naval vessels it would be a very easy matter, if the nations desired to do so, to continue a rivalry of sea power by putting guns upon merchant ships. The nation which possessed the largest fleet of merchant vessels and the ability to arm them, other nations having disarmed in accordance with such proposed agreement, would be just as completely the mistress of the seas as though she had constructed 100 battleships of modern type.

So it seems to me, Mr. President, that in order to arrive at the desired result of peace among the nations it is necessary to develop the will for peace; that it is necessary that there should be the desire for peace in the hearts of peoples and the hearts of governments. Peace can not be obtained by a pacifist policy, merely by disarmament, in the face of world contentions which arouse the passions of peoples and make for conditions out of which war will inevitably ensue, and in it such weapons and agencies as are available will be used.

Mr. President, we have reported this provision, and I am very glad indeed to see that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is in favor of it. There is no issue involved in what he has said in so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. POINDEXTER subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to incorporate at the conclusion of my remarks on the subject of taxes the article from which I quoted.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL TAXES COMPARED WITH STATE, COUNTY, AND MUNICIPAL TAXES.

[From extension of remarks of Hon. MELVIN O. MCLAUGHLIN, of Nebraska, in the House of Representatives, Tuesday, February 21, 1922.]

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks I will print the following letter from Capt. L. M. Overstreet, United States Navy, showing the amount of Federal taxes compared with State, county, and municipal taxes.

The letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1922.

MY DEAR MR. MCLAUGHLIN: There seems to be a general feeling that a holiday in battleship building will greatly reduce taxes. A little study of the budgets and taxes shows the fallacy of this idea. In our county of York, Nebr., the tax is nearly $40 per capita to meet township, county, and State budgets. The per capita tax for the whole United States for building battleships this year is 64 cents, but Nebraskans contribute about half this amount due to their small Federal income tax, as will be shown later.

According to the World Almanac, 1922, the city of New York has a population of 5,620,000, with a city budget of $345,530,000 (including county budgets and $22,041,000 which goes to the State); the State of New York, a population of 10,385,000, with a State budget of $145,798,000; and the United States, a population of 106,000,000, with a national Budget of practically $4,000,000,000. Of this national Budget of $4,000,000,000, about 10 per cent, or $400,000,000, is allotted to the entire Navy, and but 1.7 per cent of the national Budget, or $68,000,000, to continue the construction of battleships and battle cruisers during this present fiscal year.

If we prorate, according to population, the money to be raised in New York City to help support the government of New York State and of the United States, we find that the people of New York City must raise annually $313,460,000 to support their own city, $10,029,000 to support the five counties in New York City, $78,000,000 to help support the State government, and $212,000,000 to help support the United States Government, or a total of $613,489,000. This means that for every dollar the New York City taxpayer contributes to build battleships and battle cruisers (year ending June 30, 1922) he pays $78 to meet city expenses; $3 to meet county expenses; $22 to meet New York State expenses; and $58 to meet the expenses of the United States Government (building battleships omitted). A holiday in building battleships would reduce expenses in New York City from $100 to $99.38, or a reduction of about six-tenths of 1 per cent.

In the following table a comparison is made between the total annual expenses of New York City and the portions spent on the whole Navy and on building battleships:

Total expenses	$613,489,000
Spent on the whole Navy	21,200,000
Spent building battleships	3,604,000

In Chicago the annual amounts to be raised are as follows: $132,000,000 for the city (additional funds are raised for parks and for the sanitary district); $10,800,000 for Cook County; $25,300,000 for the State of Illinois; and $100,000,000 for the United States Government, or a total of $268,100,000. Of this amount about $10,000,000 would go to the whole Navy and $1,700,000 to continue building battleships. The following table illustrates the annual expenses of Chicago graphically:

Total expenses	$268,100,000
On whole Navy	10,000,000
On building battleships	1,700,000

In San Francisco the city must raise annually $24,467,000 to meet city and county expenses; $6,033,000 for the State expenses of California; and $19,170,000 for the United States Government, or a total of $49,670,000. Of this, $1,917,000 would go to the whole Navy and $326,000 to continue construction of battleships. The following table shows these figures:

Total expenses	$49,670,000
On whole Navy	1,917,000
On building battleships	326,000

From these tables it will be seen that the reduction in city expenses due to a holiday in battleship building will hardly be noticeable. This is a popular saying: "The taxpayer is groaning under a crushing load of taxes for battleship building." The above figures do not support such a statement.

Many papers have stated that we will save hundreds of millions annually by stopping battleship construction. How can this be when we are only spending $68,000,000 this year to build battleships? Now, when we break our contracts with the shipbuilders and scrap these ships it will take much of this sixty-eight million to settle legitimate damage claims. The remainder will be needed for the five plane carriers which we are to build in accordance with the terms of the treaty.

WHAT ABOUT THE FARMERS?

Some may say, "Why, these charts illustrate what the city taxpayers save by the holiday in building battleships, but what about the farmers?" It will be shown later that battleships are built from money obtained from the Federal "ordinary receipts." The farmer contributes to these Federal "ordinary receipts" a slight amount through the customs (duty on imported articles he might purchase), a slight amount through internal revenue, and, thirdly, directly through his personal Federal income tax. It is assumed that the farmer does not pay a corporation income tax. After taking out his exemptions for himself, wife, and children, few farmers pay much Federal income tax.

In fact, the Treasury Department publication, Statistics of Income, 1919, Income Tax Returns, shows that over half (or 56 per cent) of the personal income taxes for the whole United States come from four States—that is, 31 per cent from New York, 10 per cent from Pennsylvania, 8 per cent from Illinois, and 7 per cent from Massachusetts. If we add Ohio, 4.5 per cent; Michigan, 4.4 per cent; New Jersey, 3.7 per cent; California, 3.9 per cent; and Texas, 2.5 per cent, we can show that over 75 per cent of the personal Federal income taxes for the whole United States, including Hawaii, Alaska, and the District of Columbia, come from nine States. Very little personal Federal income tax comes from the agricultural States. The great grain and cattle States of Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, and the cotton and tobacco States of Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, and Louisiana altogether pay but 6.7 per cent of the Federal income taxes, or less than the one State of Massachusetts.

In our agricultural State of Nebraska there were but 87,344 personal Federal income-tax returns from a population of over 1,296,000 in 1919. The taxpayers who make personal Federal income-tax returns in the whole United States pay an average tax on these returns of over $239, while those making returns in Nebraska pay an average of less than $99 per return. While New York State has but nine times the inhabitants of Nebraska, New York State pays over fifty times the amount of personal Federal income tax and nearly sixty times the amount of Federal corporation income tax. Taxes to support the Federal Government come largely from the Eastern States and from large manufacturing districts.

WHERE DO NATIONAL FUNDS COME FROM?

Where does the money come from which is used to meet the National Budget? The Treasury Department, Division of Bookkeeping, Form 778, shows that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, the "ordinary receipts" amounted to nearly $5,578,000,000. This is the money which is used to meet congressional appropriations. Of this amount $308,000,000 came from the customs, $1,500,000 from the sale of public lands, 683,000,000 from miscellaneous items—coinage profits, Pacific railways, tax on national bank circulation, fees, fines, penalties, etc.—$1,352,000,000 from internal revenue, and $3,228,000,000 from income taxes—of which about two-fifths comes from personal income taxes and the other three-fifths from corporation income taxes. The money from these personal Federal income taxes, therefore, meets about one-quarter of the National Budget. As 1.7 per cent of the National Budget goes to build battleships, this means that one-quarter of 1.7 per cent of a taxpayer's personal Federal income tax, or 40 cents out of every $100, will go to build battleships during the year ending June 30, 1922, at a time when we have six battle cruisers and nine battleships under construction, a number considerably above the average. The cessation of battleship building will, therefore, reduce the taxpayer's personal Federal income taxes from $100 to $99.60, but the taxes on his property to meet city, county, and State budgets will remain the same. From every dollar the taxpayer pays as a personal Federal income tax one-fifth of 1 cent goes to continue the construction of battleships.

WHERE DO TAXES GO?

Where does the taxpayer's money go? It goes largely to meet city, county, and State budgets, which are constantly increasing at an alarming rate. In New York City the city budget in 1901 was little over $99,000,000; in 1911 it was $174,000,000; while in 1921 it had grown to nearly $346,000,000. The budget of 1901 would not pay the interest on the city debt of 1921, as the debt is over a billion dollars.

In the agricultural States of the West it is surprising to find even higher rates of taxation to meet State and county budgets, with high rates to meet city budgets. The taxpayers of Lincoln, Nebr., a city of only 55,000 people, have to meet a city budget of over $1,000,000; have to meet their quota of a county budget of $534,000; and their quota of a State budget of $30,000,000. Their quota to build battleships (on a population basis) is but $34,000, but on a Federal income tax basis it would be much less.

The agricultural county of York, Nebr.—population 17,146—must raise over $172,000 to meet the State budget, nearly $520,000 to meet township and county budgets. The people of the county seat, York—population 5,388—must raise annually nearly $100,000 to meet city, township, county, and State budgets. The farmer should realize that the tax he pays on his land, buildings, live stock, and crops go to meet the ever-growing expenses of his township, county, and State, and that not one penny of these taxes goes to build battleships or to the support of the Federal Government.

The following 18 cities have budgets of over $10,000,000 each, given to the nearest million:

	Millions of dollars.
1. New York City	346
2. Chicago	133
3. Philadelphia	59
4. Baltimore	57
5. Boston	44
6. Milwaukee	28
7. San Francisco	24
8. Buffalo	24
9. Newark	22
10. St. Louis	21
11. Pittsburgh	19
12. Seattle	19
13. Jersey City	14
14. Cleveland	14
15. Minneapolis	13
16. Los Angeles	13
17. Rochester	11
18. Providence	10

The following 23 States have budgets of over $10,000,000 each, given to the nearest million:

	Millions of dollars.
1. New York	146
2. Pennsylvania	117
3. Illinois	60
4. Washington	59
5. Ohio	56
6. California	41
7. Massachusetts	40
8. New Jersey	32
9. Nebraska	30
10. Connecticut	26
11. Wisconsin	26
12. Texas	23
13. Oregon	23
14. Michigan	17
15. Virginia	16
16. Minnesota	16
17. Missouri	15
18. Maryland	14
19. North Carolina	13
20. Mississippi	12
21. Iowa	10
22. Louisiana	10
23. Oklahoma	10

No data is available to show how many counties have budgets in excess of $10,000,000, but the five counties of New York City have a combined budget of over this amount, while Cook County, Ill., has a budget of over $12,000,000.

The writer believes that the money appropriated for the Navy is well invested, that the taxpayer contributes but a small part of his taxes to the Navy, and that this amount could not be materially reduced. Further, it seems certain that millions of dollars could easily be saved by cutting city, township, county, and State expenses. This is where the cuts should be made to relieve the taxpayers of this so-called "crushing load of taxation."

Sincerely yours,

L. M. OVERSTREET,
Captain, United States Navy.

Hon. MELVIN MCLAUGHLIN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not intend anything that I said to be construed as a criticism of the committee. I was speaking in favor of the provision reported by the committee, in so far as that provision goes. It may go far enough; I do not know. That is a matter that may be determined later; but I do know that there is opposition here in the Senate to the provision. While I presume the committee, as a committee, favors it, there are other Members of this body who are not in favor of it.

I agree perfectly, Mr. President, with the able Senator from Washington in the basic proposition that world peace can only result from the desire of the people to have peace, to will peace; but I know that a race in armaments absolutely prevents the accomplishment of anything in the way of education for peace. For instance, how can we educate the people of the United States to peace or educate the people of the world to peace when the representative of France visits our country and preaches to 110,000,000 people that we are on the verge of another war; that war is inevitable; that enemies are contriving and planning now to overcome the great so-called peace-loving nations of the world? He recounts how arms are being manufactured in a secret and clandestine way, thereby inciting fear, distrust, passion, hate. How can we have peace, Mr. President, or educate the people to peace when every representative of the Navy who has spoken to the public for months has insisted that the situation is so serious and so dangerous that we must at once prepare for war; when the generals of the Army are discussing the question from every rostrum? I assume, of course, that those gentlemen, well informed as they are, have in their minds some conditions which justify their statements and that they are speaking from a patriotic standpoint; but, Mr. President, the way to accomplish something in the direction of peace is to strive to bring the nations together upon the question of the limitation of armament. Armaments have always begotten war.

The great World War came on as the result of competition in armaments more than from any other cause. The Triple Alliance was formed; then followed the Triple Entente; and then followed the building of battleships. Every time the Triple Alliance would construct a battleship or enter upon an extra building program the Triple Entente would do likewise, or vice versa; and every time the army of the Triple Entente was increased the Triple Alliance would increase its army.

All we have to do is to go back and read the history of Europe from the Moroccan affair down to 1914 and place it over what is happening now throughout the world, and we have a complete duplication, as it were, of the transactions, the events, and the discussions which led to the World War. In other words, we are told that as Japan is now building a large navy we must build more ships in order to match it; we are told by the visitor from France that conditions in Europe are such that war must inevitably follow; we are advised by the representatives of France that their situation is such that they will not ratify, for the present at least, the disarmament treaty. We can not lead people to will peace under such conditions as that.

I do not disagree at all with the able Senator from Washington if the provision to which he refers goes far enough, but I want it understood that I am an utter disbeliever in the proposition that peace can be obtained by building armaments; I am an utter disbeliever in the proposition that peace can be achieved by increasing the armies and the navies of the world. Such a course inevitably leads to war; it has done so for 3,000 years, and it will do so for 3,000 years more.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho how much it is probable we may save by the proposed reduction, say, for the next fiscal year?

Mr. BORAH. How much we could save in what way?

Mr. STANLEY. In expenditures for armament in this country. How much does the Senator propose to cut the Navy? How much are we going to save in dollars and cents to the Government by the proposed reduction? Has the Senator any definite idea on that point?

Mr. BORAH. I am advocating a conference for the purpose of bringing about an understanding between the different nations as to the limitation of their building programs.

Mr. STANLEY. We must have some sort of a navy.

If the Senator from Idaho were chairman of a subcommittee engaged in making a reduction in our naval armament, how much does he think we could, with the consent of the rest of the world, safely cut the naval force of the United States, at the same time leaving us an adequate sea power?

Mr. BORAH. I have not reduced the matter to figures; I do not know; but what I am particularly interested in, if the Senator please, is not so much the mere matter of dollars and cents and the saving which may be involved for a year or so, but I want to avoid competition in war preparations and arousing the antipathy which naturally follows as a result of such competition.

Mr. STANLEY. With that laudable purpose I am in hearty accord, and I approve of what the Senator says in that respect. I have not asked the question in a controversial spirit, but the Senator has called the attention of the country to the fact that armaments and the improvement of weapons of destruction are provocative of war, as I understand him, and that a reduction of navies to the point where each nation would feel its inability to contend upon the seas, in other words, would feel its unpreparedness, would be a deterrent to war. In that I heartily agree. The Senator, however, has, as only he can, perhaps, vividly and emphatically called the attention of the country to another reason and that is the great burden of taxation due to the expenditures of the Government for naval armament and for other purposes, and he proposes, among other reasons, for this reduction that it will in a measure alleviate that burden, as I understand.

Mr. BORAH. I hope so.

Mr. STANLEY. It is bound to, if you reduce it. To that I wish to call the attention of the Senate; and I had hoped that I might get from the Senator some statement of the amount of the saving, if he has any definite idea as to just how much it would save the country, how much he thought it was in the realm of probability that we might reduce our naval expenditures if this conference were as successful as the Senator hopes.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, that would involve the question of what the conference would finally accomplish; but if it did not save a dollar——

Mr. STANLEY. It would still be a good thing; I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. If it did not save a dollar as to the present amount, but did prevent the increase from year to year that will inevitably follow, it would be a tremendous benefit. The Senator knows, of course, that if this naval race begins, as the House indicates, we will not have a bill carrying $300,000,000 here next year; we will have a bill carrying four hundred or five hundred million dollars, and it will continue from year to year.

Mr. STANLEY. I entirely agree with the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Remember that in 1916, the year the building program of the large Navy began, we spent $170,000,000. Now, four years after the war, we are spending $300,000,000 plus, and so on.

Mr. STANLEY. Three hundred and twenty-five million dollars.

Mr. BORAH. And so, if we discontinue or are unsuccessful in our efforts to get an understanding, the increase from $170,000,000 in 1916 to $300,000,000 in 1923 will be very small compared with what it will be in the next 10 years. That is what I have in mind more than what we shall cut this particular bill, although I think we might possibly accomplish something along that line.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, as a sedative to the high-strung nerves, the inflamed animosities, the almost neurotic war spirit which displays itself in the Old World, the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho is entirely opportune, and, I trust, may receive the favorable consideration of this body and a sympathetic and earnest response from the civilized world.

The Senator, however, has called our attention to another matter—the matter of the burden of taxation; to the fact that we are burning our candle at both ends; that, on the one hand, while we are drying up the source of taxation we are inordinately increasing its amount and its burden.

The Senator from Idaho may see his brightest hopes realized, may see the armaments of the world scrapped, and a few revenue cutters preserving the peace of the world upon the high seas for a new era and a new civilization; and still he will not have appreciably lightened the burden of taxation upon the shoulders of the American people. As well attempt to bail the sea with a tin cup as to cure this disease by the saving of three hundred millions to the American people. You must go further and deeper, and you must secure a more widespread and a more drastic reform.

Why, Mr. President, a short time ago I had the most careful and detailed calculations made of the expense incident to the operation of this Government without regard to war, eliminating pensions, eliminating interest upon the national debt, eliminating all appropriations for fortifications, for armies and for armaments, and for everything directly or indirectly connected with wars, past, present, or future. In the year ending in 1916 we spent a little over $232,000,000 for post offices, public improvements—rivers and harbors and buildings—and for the various courts and commissions. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for the same purposes, with the additional commissions and courts and multitudinous officers, we spent over $1,115,000,000. Outside of war, we have increased the cost of government nearly 500 per cent in five years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I perfectly agree with the Senator that this is only one step.

Mr. STANLEY. I understand.

Mr. BORAH. But this is the one which is now before us. I know that the increase of governmental expenditures has been exorbitant all along the line; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, notwithstanding these other increases, at the present time our war burden is $2,650,000,000.

Mr. STANLEY. I quite agree, and I am not saying this with a purpose of indirectly obstructing the Senator's present proposal; but I hope to secure the cooperation of the able Senator from Idaho in still further and still deeper cuts, in a still wider and a more thorough reform. We must go further, because this burden must be lifted. As the Senator has well said, to-day agriculture staggers; to-day, not knowing why nor how, there is a profound discontent, the fecund mother of violence and revolution, over a great portion of this country. The reason why it is a mere blind discontent, the reason why now it is a cry of anguish and of despair, rather than of wrath, is because they who suffer know not why they suffer. If they who are on the verge of ruin and bankruptcy knew the extent to which this is due to bungling public officials, ill-considered legislation, wanton and reckless extravagance, expenditures for things for which this Government never should have spent a dollar at all; if they realized not only that they have paid the taxes the Senator has mentioned, but if they knew that through their freight rates, through their cost of living, if they knew that whenever they entered a hotel or place of public amusement, in the purchase of food and clothing, and the implements of toil—everywhere, as wide and general "as the casing air," they are literally enveloped by an inquisitorial, vexatious, and incompetent Government plundering them in a thousand ways, sucking like a vampire their sweat and toil; if they knew all this I would tremble for the safety of this Republic. An increase from $232,000,000 to $1,115,000,000 in five years for the same service! You could a few years ago milk a cow without a Federal inspector at your heels.

One hundred and three years ago, in his second inaugural address to Congress, Thomas Jefferson said:

> At home, fellow citizens, you best know whether we have done well or ill. The suppression of unnecessary offices, of useless establishments and expenses, enabled us to discontinue our internal taxes. These, covering our land with officers and opening our doors to their intrusions, had already begun that process of domiciliary vexation which once entered is scarcely to be restrained from reaching successively every article of property and produce. * * * It may be the pleasure and the pride of an American to ask, What farmer, what mechanic, what laborer ever sees a taxgatherer of the United States?

Think of it! What would be the relief to-day of the Washington farmer who is pouring his apples into the Columbia River; what would be the relief to-day of the potato growers in the West who are seeing their crops freeze because it costs more to dig it than it will bring, if they could say, with their mortgaged farms and their inordinate taxation, that the day is at hand when no man will see a taxgatherer of the United States!

Why, it was only a few years ago that I heard that great Senator from Ohio, with whom I did not agree politically, Senator Foraker, in 1906, upon the floor of this body bemoaning the fact that 10 years previously we had 167 marshals and deputy marshals, delators, and sleuths in the United States, and that in his degenerate day the number of spies and inspectors had increased to 3,000—3,000 busy gentlemen qualified to regulate every detail of the business of the people of the United States—3,000! Governor Haskell the other day, speaking at the McAlpin Hotel, said there were an army of 42,000 now. There were not half a dozen times in the Civil War when either side commanded an army as numerous or as active as the marshals, deputy marshals, and special agents who infest our highways and byways, our business houses, and homes, peering into every nook and corner, and supervising every detail of the industrial and private life of citizens of the United States. Now, you can not operate an inquisitorial, omnipotent Government, reaching every detail of the private lives and domestic activities of the people, without paying for it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STANLEY. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I want to ask the Senator if he has had an estimate made of the cost of this army of 42,000 spies, and so forth, and compared it with the total cost of the American Army? I am just wondering if it does not amount to more than the whole cost of the Army.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, the cost within the last five years of unnecessary commissions and regulatory concerns, commissions to control and regulate railroads, to regulate every butcher shop and every slaughterhouse, to regulate the production of fuel and its sale, to regulate the practice of medicine, to supervise the birth of babes and the burial of the dead—everything which the heart can desire or fancy can conceive, from the setting of a hen to the running of a railway—all this has actually cost the difference between $232,000,000 in 1916, and we had too much of it then, and $1,115,000,000 in 1922. The cost of the Government's doing things which it has no business to do, employing people who ought to be paying taxes instead of eating taxes, regulating matters which should be left to the States or the citizens thereof, is now more than the cost of operating this Government, everything included—Army and Navy, post offices, post roads, and everything else—from the inauguration of George Washington to the Civil War.

You can not conceive its enormity. Does the Senator from Idaho realize that it has been conservatively estimated by Mr. Ulm, in the Independent, that there are only about 30,000,000 people in the United States to-day who are producing wealth, actually producing it?

With his intimate acquaintance with Adam Smith, the Senator will concur with me that it is only those who are engaged in productive enterprise upon whom the whole structure rests so far as the production and distribution of wealth is concerned. In its production and in its distribution there are 30,000,000 people at work to-day in the United States, and there are 15,000,000 pensioners upon public bounty. Every two laborers carry a tax eater on their backs.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator say there are 15,000,000 holding Government jobs?

Mr. STANLEY. The Independent estimates that there are 15,000,000 who are pensioners upon public bounty in one form or another. I will have the whole article incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to see that. It is a very astonishing statement. I never heard any such statement as that before. I thought, as far as the Government itself was concerned, there were 3,000,000.

Mr. STANLEY. That is the Federal Government. Mr. Ulm estimates the number of pensioners, State and Federal officers, and so forth, at 15,000,000 people. It is a startling statement. It may well cause the Senator to ponder.

Mr. WATSON. My understanding of the statement was that there are 3,000,000 men holding Government positions——

Mr. STANLEY. Fifteen million.

Mr. WATSON. And that they each averaged five in the family, making a total of 15,000,000. I did not understand the Senator to say that 15,000,000 are on the Government pay roll.

Mr. STANLEY. I did not make the statement that they are on the Federal pay roll.

Mr. WATSON. On all pay rolls.

Mr. STANLEY. On some sort of pay roll or receiving some sort of pension. I give my authority. I think it is a conservative estimate, and I will take pleasure in incorporating it in the RECORD. He estimates that 10 per cent of the entire resources of the country are consumed in one form of taxation or another.

Says Aaron Hardy Ulm, in the Dearborn Independent of December 17, 1921:

> Do you know that the operations of government in these United States now provide income approximating the support of 15,000,000 persons, or about one out of every seven individuals in the country? Do you know, furthermore, that 10 per cent of the national earnings now go for governmental operations having to do alone with the protecting of man against man?
> What amounts to the "support" of around 15,000,000 individuals passes in the form of taxes from the public as a whole to a minority of the people in these United States. Only about one-third of the population is made up of what by strict interpretation can be called producers. Not many more than 30,000,000 persons are actually engaged in producing and distributing food, clothing, and other necessaries of life. Every two actual producers now maintain, in addition to "dependents" and other nonproducers who draw from production, the equivalent of one individual that is maintained by governmental expenditure of some sort.

We have reached the breaking point, Mr. President. We have come to the time when unrequited toil staggers under its load. We have reached the point when the faithful, diligent plodder at the plow, or at the anvil, or with the pick, knowing not why, finds that his labor is the labor of Sisyphus; that at the end of the year the burden falls from his shoulders only to be taken up again at the foot of the weary hill; that he can not accumulate; that wages are a mockery; that the purchasing power of the dollar decreases faster than his wages increase. There never was a time, from the discovery of America till now, when it was as hard for the average man to provide food, raiment, and shelter, and pay taxes, and to live; and that agony, when it grows much more acute, is going to end, as the Senator from Idaho has well said, in revolution.

There is a time, says Victor Hugo, when the mind takes fire and a tattered rag becomes a banner. This is the thing that feeds Bolshevism. This is the thing that causes anarchy to whet its knife and to light its torch. This is the seismic disturbance, the volcano that now rumbles under our feet. We must make this Government cost less, and in order to make it cost less we must make it do less. The time to start is now, and I am ready to start with the Senator from Idaho; but I ask him to go further and to do more.

Mr. WATSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. I am very much interested in the statement the Senator has made. Of course, we all understand that if we are to have all sorts of governmental inspection, it means added numbers to the pay roll, with increased appropriations; but in order to be practical I would like to ask the Senator where he proposes to begin to lop off. That is to say, would he repeal the pure food law?

Mr. STANLEY. I will say to the Senator that it would take me a long time to answer that question. I made a speech on the floor of the Senate some time ago of several hours' length, in which I took up the laws now governing the Department of Agriculture. There was a bill before the Senate to create a meat-inspection service, and right side by side we provided for inspectors under one department to do exactly the same thing inspectors were doing under another department. I would immediately go over the whole Budget and I would eradicate this duplication. That is the thing to which Senator Aldrich referred a few years ago when he said he could save $300,000,000 a year. That is just one instance.

Again, I would review the various commissions which have been created, carrying appropriations, and wherever I found that the work could be done by the State as well as by the Nation, and where they had concurrent authority, I would cut out the Federal appropriation wherever possible. Again, with the exception of the construction of public roads, I would forever and eternally stop this pernicious policy of a 50-50 cooperation between the General Government and the States on all sorts of new and untried experiments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator from Indiana of a matter which is a practical one right now? We are about to pass a ship subsidy bill some of these days. We now have a Shipping Board of seven men drawing $12,000 a year each. There is not a business man in the United States who would stand that overnight; seven men drawing $12,000 a year each, where one man could operate it infinitely better, and the responsibility would be greater and more direct if we had one single individual doing it. You can review the commissions now created by the Government of the United States, and by eliminating the number—cutting them down to one, two, or three at the outside—you will get infinitely better service and you will save hundreds of thousands, and even millions, of dollars.

Mr. WATSON. I think there is something in that; but, after all, the Senator would not have one man constitute the Interstate Commerce Commission or one man constitute the Federal Trade Commission. I do not imagine we would want any of our big commissions, which have tremendous jurisdiction, to be reduced to one man in number. As to the Shipping Board, I am not advised.

Mr. STANLEY. I will make another suggestion.

Mr. WATSON. The big point about it is that if we are greatly to reduce public expenses by reducing the number of men on the pay roll we must strike at the system itself, not at a few individuals here and there.

Mr. STANLEY. I would first start with duplication, and right there we would save hundreds of millions.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator is aware of the fact that already that has been undertaken. We have been working at that for a year and a half.

Mr. STANLEY. But we do not cut deep enough. We are afraid to go deep enough.

Mr. WATSON. It is exceedingly difficult to do that.

Mr. STANLEY. Take the labor board, for instance. Two years ago on the floor of the Senate I said that when you cut compulsory arbitration out of the transportation act of 1920 you did away with your labor board, because you had left a body of men who could stir up a row, and then give advice with no authority whatever in the way of a settlement. It was emasculated; it was a political eunuch, and the thing ought to have been abolished right then. You went to work and spent thousands and thousands and thousands on this intricate machinery.

The other day the President said that the labor board could do nothing but give advice, that it was perfectly impotent, that it had been rendered almost contemptible, and that the carriers and the laboring men took turns defying its orders and ignoring in contempt its recommendations. You can do away with that board and save several hundred thousand dollars. I would like to talk until 10 o'clock in the morning making suggestions to the Senator about useless boards, useless offices, useless officers, the perversion of one governmental function and another, the reckless expenditure of public funds for impossible or improper purposes; but the startling and appalling fact remains that you are expending nearly a billion more now than you did five years ago with about half the sources of revenue you had five years ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator in that connection that one fault is the creation of a lot of temporary commissions for temporary purposes, making appropriations for those purposes, and having those commissions continue, with all their clerks, and asking for additional appropriations?

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, 10 years ago, in an investigation of the United States Steel Corporation, Mr. Gary came before the investigating committee and suggested that the Government fix prices and wages. I had the pleasure the other day of reading a beautiful introduction to one of Herbert Spencer's essays, in which the same Judge Gary said, "They are best governed who are least governed." He has turned a complete industrial and political somersault, and, thank God, he has at last landed on solid ground. At that time, whenever a commission was appointed, they would point to the Interstate Commerce Commission, exercising in its incipiency legitimate Federal power. The right to regulate tolls charged upon public highways is almost as old as civilization. It was to give Congress power over interstate commerce more than any other one thing that caused the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

It was the essential weakness of the old Articles of Confederation. As long as the Interstate Commerce Commission exercised those powers, it was a blessing and beneficent influence and still is. But every day you are preparing to unduly increase the personnel and the powers of that commission, to give it control over wages, to give it purchasing power, to give it police power, and the first thing you know you are going to have an Interstate Commerce Commission of about 50 members costing about $50,000,000, and the people will rise in their wrath and abolish the whole business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am not going to enter into any controversy at this time with reference to the Shipping Board or whether it should be composed of one or more members, but I am going to say that I quite agree with Senators in the suggestion, if they were to suggest it, that the Emergency Fleet Corporation should be controlled and its functions carried out under the control of one man. But the Shipping Board is an entirely different organization, and an entirely different body. It is as nearly like the Interstate Commerce Commission in its relation to shipping as any organization could be and, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] suggested, I do not think anybody would think about putting the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission into the hands of one man. If Senators investigate the proper functions of the Shipping Board they would no more think of putting those functions in the hands of one man than they would think of putting the functions of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the hands of one man. It is a matter that will no doubt come up in connection with the shipping bill and will be discussed more fully at that time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I agree perfectly with the Senator from Washington. I have examined the functions of the Shipping Board under the pending bill and I would not put them in the hands of one man, and I would not put them in the hands of 100 men. The functions of the Shipping Board being created under the new bill are practically governmental functions and ought not to be lodged anywhere except in the elective bodies of the United States, the Congress.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not talking about the functions of the Shipping Board under the bill. I am talking about the functions of the Shipping Board under the law now on the statute books.

Mr. BORAH. The function of the Shipping Board just now is to make speeches in favor of the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator knows that is a very attractive remark, but that is not the function of the Shipping Board; not that laid down to them by law.

Mr. BORAH. I agree to that, too.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course the Senator knows that.

Mr. BORAH. It is not the duty laid upon them by law, but one can not pick up a newspaper that he does not find therein a speech or an article from some member of the Shipping Board advocating some feature of the bill. My view is that one man would be plenty to do that.

Mr. STANLEY. I am not conscious of having said a word about the Shipping Board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was not referring to the Senator from Kentucky. I was referring to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. STANLEY. I purposely kept away from that board. I am reserving a shot at them for a later day. I will say in passing, however, that I would not confer the powers that this bill confers upon the Shipping Board upon any authority in the heavens above or the earth below or the waters under the earth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before leaving the question of taxation, I wish to add to the record a few figures. The total indebtedness of 227 cities in the United States of more than 30,000 population in 1919 amounted to $2,619,551,824. I might add that since that date many of the cities have greatly augmented their bonded indebtedness. There are many cities in the United States whose population is less than 30,000 which have also very large municipal indebtedness. I have not been able to ascertain the aggregate amount of the indebtedness of the cities under 30,000 population, but from the best information I have it exceeds $200,000,000.

The State indebtedness in 1919—and this does not include the political subdivisions of the States—exceeded $520,000,000. Since that date the State indebtedness has been very greatly increased. I have been unable to ascertain exactly the amount of the present State indebtedness, but it is, as I am advised, in excess of $1,000,000,000.

On November 30 our national debt, not including, of course, the outstanding paper currency issued and guaranteed by the Federal Government, was $22,963,696,739.92. In 1920 corporations paid interest upon indebtedness to the amount of $2,835,369,000. Assuming this interest to have been 5 per cent, the capitalization would be $56,705,380,000; that is to say, if the interest paid was $2,835,000,000 upon the indebtedness, then the indebtedness was substantially $57,000,000,000 owing by those particular corporations.

In 1920 the Treasury estimate of deductions allowed individuals for interest paid amounted to more than $700,000,000. This sum capitalized at 5 per cent represents a gross individual indebtedness reported of more than $3,500,000,000. The outstanding paper currency issued and guaranteed by the Federal Government was more than $3,875,490,000.

So that the indebtedness of the United States and the people of the United States, as I have indicated, amounts to over $90,000,000,000. That does not include the indebtedness of school districts and counties and thousands of unreported obligations, and hundreds of millions of indebtedness which bears no rate of interest and which is not reported. So that it is safe to say that the debts of the United States and the people of the United States to-day—and when I say the United States I mean the Federal Government, the State government, the county and municipal subdivisions—would amount to more than $100,000,000,000, perhaps one-third of the value of all the property in the United States. A debt so stupendous of necessity must be oppressive, and unless some steps be taken to liquidate it and to cut down expenses, the people of the United States, notwithstanding the tremendous resources of the country, must pass through a state of great financial depression, if not bankruptcy

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 13, to increase the appropriation for employees in the office of the Chief of Naval Operations from $55,000 to $57,450.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 8, after the words "For travel allowance" to strike out "of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment," and insert "or for transportation and subsistence as authorized by law of enlisted men upon discharge."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 13, page 10, "Recreation for enlisted men."

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, under this heading I desire to call attention to an amendment which I wish to offer. On board the battleships and other ships of the Navy they print little newspapers giving news of athletics and other matters of interest to those on board. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 10, in line 13, after the last word in the line, add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That ships' newspapers are authorized to be published on board ship as heretofore, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to the amendment. It does not increase the amount of the appropriation. The difficulty the Senator from Virginia is trying to remove is on account of the law which forbids the use of the appropriation for printing. However, this is an exception on account of the printing of little sheets for the amusement and entertainment of the men on board the ships, which, of course, could not be done at the Public Printing Office.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the chairman of the committee if it permits the establishment of a small printing plant on each ship?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Only a very small hand press. The appropriation is, of course, limited. The amendment does not increase the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. SWANSON. They have the little hand presses already, but their use will be prohibited under a recent law unless the amendment is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, while we are talking about printing, I ask the Senator why there is such an increase in the allowance which is carried in this bill for printing and binding?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will answer very briefly that it is because allowances for printing have been taken out of other items and placed in the printing appropriation. Formerly various items contained appropriations available for printing, but those appropriations have been reduced by the amount that had been heretofore appropriated for printing and the corresponding amounts were added to the printing appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I add that that has been done as to all of the departments? Separate amounts for printing in the various bureaus have been eliminated and the appropriations for printing have all been put under one head; so that we now know just where the money is going and how much of it is appropriated for printing.

Mr. KING. I think that is very wise. I can not understand why there should be half a dozen different items in the various bills for the printing of the same department. May I ask, then, whether the appropriation for printing and binding, say, for last year, which appears to have been $212,250, was greater than the appropriation for printing provided by the pending bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was greater last year.

Mr. KING. Then, eliminating the various printing appropriations of the bill of last year from which drafts might be made, does the aggregate this year exceed the aggregate of last year?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; there is a decrease of $9,000 in the total amount.

Mr. KING. Then, the amount of "$550,000, including not exceeding $90,000 for the Hydrographic Office," is less than the appropriation of last year?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. KING. I discover, however, that the Hydrographic Office last year had only $50,000 and that this year it has $90,000. There is an increase of $40,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Utah is speaking of the appropriation for printing, the appropriation for the printing of the Hydrographic Office is about $5,000 less this year than it was last year.

Mr. KING. The bill of last year—and I am now reading from it—states:

For printing and binding for the Navy Department, $212,250, including not exceeding $50,000 for the Hydrographic Office.

In the pending bill—the one we are discussing—I find the following language:

For printing and binding for the Navy Department and the Naval Establishment executed at the Government Printing Office, $550,000, including not exceeding $90,000 for the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the same amount for printing for the Hydrographic Office as was allowed last year, but the total appropriation for the Hydrographic Office is less this year than it was last year.

Mr. KING. I can not say that I understand the Senator. The pending bill states that there is appropriated $90,000 for printing for the Hydrographic Office.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say that for the printing of the Hydrographic Office the appropriation is the same as it was last year.

Mr. KING. Then last year it was more than $50,000, as stated in the item which I have just read, but it was carried in some other appropriation? Is that the case?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was carried in a number of different appropriations.

Mr. KING. But the aggregate did not exceed $90,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, line 12, after the word "material," to insert "heat, light, water," so as to read:

NAVAL TRAINING STATIONS.

For maintenance, including labor and material, heat, light, water, general care, repairs, and improvements; school books; and all other incidental expenses for the naval training stations that follow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington what, if anything, has been done under the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] with respect to closing a large number of training and other naval stations? My recollection is that the Senator from Illinois offered a resolution dealing with the question. May I inquire of the Senator from Washington what has been done pursuant to that resolution? What modifications have been made and what stations have been closed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The inspection contemplated by the resolution has been made, but there has been no report submitted. As yet there has been no action taken in respect to the resolution, except to create a board and to conduct an examination.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Washington will recall that the Senator from Illinois challenged the attention of the Senate to the fact that there were hundreds of naval stations of various kinds, and it was conceded, as I understood, by the members of the Naval Affairs Committee that there were entirely too many such stations. The suggestion was made that many of them would be closed. May I ask, once for all, without going into details, whether many of them have been closed? When I say "stations" I refer, of course, to training stations, naval stations, bases and radio stations, a large number of which, it was conceded, were wholly unnecessary. I ask the Senator whether any such stations have been closed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just stated to the Senator from Utah that in pursuance of the resolution to which he refers a board was appointed, which has made a careful survey of the various stations, but their report has not as yet been made; they have not completed it. Consequently no action has been taken under the resolution. Orders have been issued closing certain stations; for instance, there was an order issued closing the station at Charleston, S. C., but a tremendous protest arose against that action. I think the matter is in statu quo at the present time; it is held in suspense. There have been great reductions made in the establishments at a number of navy yards, in the navy yard at New Orleans and some other navy yards, but there has been no general action taken, largely on account of the resolution to which the Senator from Utah referred and because of the fact that the question was being investigated by an official board.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations in preparing the naval appropriation bill ought to inquire into the necessity of maintaining a large number of naval stations. They ought not to ask for the appropriation of a single dollar for a naval station, no matter whether it be a base or training station or what not, unless satisfied that such station is necessary.

If the committee has done its duty—and I have no doubt that it has done its duty—and gone into the question of naval stations with a view to determining whether it is necessary to maintain them, it seems to me that they ought not to await the action of the board appointed under the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois. It was understood a year ago, when the naval bill was under consideration by the committee, that a large number of stations were absolutely unnecessary and that they would be closed. Now, it seems to me that the committee ought to know whether or not they have been closed, and if they have not been closed, why, if a spirit of economy is to prevail, they have not been closed. Are we to wait indefinitely and maintain these expensive stations until some Secretary of the Navy may have the courage to come to Congress and insist upon abolishing many of them?

Mr. POINDEXTER. To which station is the Senator from Utah referring? The Senator states that there are some of these stations that ought to be abandoned. Does he state that as a fact?

Mr. KING. That is my opinion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On what is the Senator's opinion based?

Mr. KING. It is based upon an investigation which I made a year ago, and it is based upon the concessions which have been made in reference to the matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator ought to call such stations to the attention of the committee. My observation is that the closest scrutiny was given to every appropriation which was requested for a station. There are a great number of navy yards, the usefulness and necessity of which are not questioned at all, for which insignificant appropriations are carried in this bill.

The reductions in the appropriation for navy yards made in this bill run into the millions of dollars as a result of the very scrutiny on the part of the committee which the Senator says ought to be given to the subject. If the Senator knows specifically of a navy yard that ought to be abandoned, we will be very glad to have that information.

Mr KING. Mr. President, the Senator, I am sure, will recall the fact that the Senator from Illinois called attention in a resolution and in a statement which he submitted to a large number of naval bases and stations in various parts of the United States and in some places outside of the United States, and it was understood, I think, by all the committee—certainly the impression was conveyed to the Senate—that many of those stations were not important and that they ought not to be maintained. I feel sure that some naval officers have strongly recommended the abolition of many of those stations, and I am sure the Secretary of the Navy—and I wish to compliment him for his attitude upon that question—has recommended the abandonment of a number of stations. I am also sure that he has sought to unite several training stations, or at least two training stations, and to bring the training station in Rhode Island and the one in Virginia together. Whether he has made recommendations with respect to the navy yard in New Hampshire, I feel sure that matter has received sympathetic consideration at the hands of some of the naval officers. I believe that the interests of the Government would best be served by abolishing that station. I feel certain that we could abolish, to the advantage of the Government, at least two or three naval stations or bases upon the Atlantic coast. I do not understand that this bill has abolished any of them. We are keeping up the Boston Navy Yard and the one in New Hampshire.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the bill repeals an appropriation of $750,000 for dredging at one of them, which appropriation was made two years ago and continued in effect last year.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean at the navy yard in South Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no; at the navy yard in New York. There is practically nothing going on at the navy yard in South Carolina. I think an item of $20,000 for dredging is all there is appropriated for that yard.

Mr. KING. The Senator recalls an investigation was made by a committee of three, of which I was a member, with respect to the South Carolina navy yard, and I feel that it ought to be abandoned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is no reason why we should not economize on other yards.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator; but what I am insisting upon is that there should be further abandonment and greater economy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just called the Senator's attention to the fact that the committee has gone a long way in the direction he has indicated, even without the help of the Senator and without his suggestion.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that under the new plan the Naval Affairs Committee have no voice in the preparation of the naval appropriation bill. I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee; and the only members of the Naval Affairs Committee, so far as I know, who participated in preparing the pending bill were the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. The other members of the committee know no more about the bill, unless they have taken the trouble to investigate it, than other Members of the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I wish to say that no navy yard can be abolished on the appropriation bill. It can only be abolished by a separate bill.

Mr. KING. The committee can fail to recommend an appropriation.

Mr. SWANSON. If the committee undertook in the appropriation bill to abolish a navy yard provided for by existing law, the amendment would be subject to a point of order, and the bill would have to go back to the committee if a point of order were made and sustained. Any measure proposing to abolish a navy yard would have to be reported out by the Committee on Naval Affairs; a navy yard can not be abolished by action of the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee merely recommends the appropriation of money for projects authorized by existing law; it can not abolish anything. The committee in the consideration of this bill have given no more money to any navy yard or naval station than is necessary to maintain the yard until its abandonment is authorized by law. Until that time it is necessary at least to have caretakers, and, as to several of the yards, that is about all that is done by this bill. I repeat, a single navy yard can not be abolished until a law is passed providing that the yard shall be abolished, and that is a matter within the province of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, technically the Senator is right, but, unfortunately, his conclusions are not accurate. There is no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations can refuse to include in the bill an appropriation for any navy yard which they think ought to be abolished; and, by failing to appropriate, that in effect abolishes the yard. I feel that it is the duty of this committee—and when I say "this committee" I mean this committee and the one in the House that has had this matter under consideration—to make such investigations as they may deem proper, and they ought to make very full ones, as to the needs of the Navy; and if they reach the conclusion that any particular yard or naval base ought to be abolished they ought, in the preparation of the appropriation bills, to refuse to include any item for its maintenance. Then, I invite the attention of the House and the Senate to the fact that in the preparation of the bill they have omitted any appropriation for any given base or any given station.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. KING. I do.

Mr. DIAL. The Naval Affairs Committee is now making a very thorough investigation of some of the navy yards, and a report will be made in a reasonable time.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to know that a thorough investigation is being made; but I submit that this committee ought to have made, and I assume that it has made, a thorough investigation; and the question which I propounded was whether or not, after such investigation as satisfied the committee, it had followed the suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] and either abolished by failing to appropriate or recommended the abolition of any naval bases or any naval stations. I regret that the full information I have sought to obtain has not been elicited; and I shall have to avail myself of other channels of information, perhaps, to obtain that which I desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, line 21, to increase the appropriation for expenses of organizing, administering, and recruiting the Naval Reserve Force and Naval Militia from $2,800,000 to $3,800,000, and, in the same line, to increase the total from $2,994,000 to $3,994,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator give us any reason for asking to have it passed over?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator will not oppose this appropriation for the Naval Militia and Naval Reserve Force, because that is in the interest of a reduced permanent force—the training of civilians, which is the fundamental, basic military policy of the United States. To cut off appropriations for that purpose would be to discourage altogether the policy of training civilians for military purposes and increase the necessity for permanent establishment.

Mr. KING. I addressed myself some time ago to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and told him that some of these items, where I was not sufficiently advised, I should ask to go over to give an opportunity to investigate them; and I ask that this go over until I can look into it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed; and the Assistant Secretary read to line 2, page 21, the last paragraph read being:

SALARIES, NAUTICAL ALMANAC OFFICE.

For employees necessary for preparing for publication the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, $18,420: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except one at $2,500 and one at $2,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I may not be able to be here when the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendments is concluded and it is open to individual amendments; so I ask unanimous consent that I may offer a small amendment in line 2, page 21. After each word "one" in that line I want to put in the word "assistant"—that makes it conform to the appropriations as we have made them heretofore—so that it will read:

One assistant at $2,500, and one assistant at $2,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. That does not change the total?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will state the amendments offered by the Senator from Washington.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 21, line 2, after the word "one," the first word in the line, it is proposed to insert the word "assistant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "one," where it appears the second time in the same line, it is proposed to insert the word "assistant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 22, line 8, to increase the total of the appropriation for the Bureau of Engineering from $14,440,000 to $14,590,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator the reason for that increase.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a clerical addition on account of the increase that was made in line 14 from $1,350,000 to $1,500,000—an increase of $150,000 for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of United States inspectors of machinery and engineering material. The increased amount is the same as recommended by the Budget, and the same as carried in the act for the current year. It is necessary in order to carry on with some reasonable degree of currency the work of the Engineering Bureau. They are preparing a manual of engineering which is partly completed, portions of which have been issued, and which has proved to be a means of tremendous saving in the operation of ships; and it is sought in the interest of economy to continue this force to carry on that work.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether any part of this appropriation is to be devoted to changing some of the battleships which will be maintained in commission, either the decks or the gun elevations or the mechanism employed in handling the guns?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No part of it is for remodeling or modernizing any ship. That is a matter which is being urged, but the committee did not act on it at all. Of course the battleship Maryland is to have certain apparatus installed under one of the appropriations here, but that is not remodeling. That is the completion practically of a new ship, arranging for control of gunfire.

Mr. KING. May I make a general inquiry? Some criticism has come to my attention—indeed, I will say a naval officer has spoken to me—concerning the report that an effort is to be made to modernize, to use the Senator's expression, some of our fighting craft—not only to change the decks, strengthen and improve them and modify them, but also to change the gun carriages and the mode of elevating, lowering, and so forth, at a tremendous cost. May I inquire whether or not there is any such purpose, and, if so, whether this appropriation bill carries any provision to accomplish that end?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The appropriation bill carries nothing for that purpose. Personally, I should like to see it carry something for that purpose, because other naval powers have modernized their fleets, and if we are to carry out the naval policy which we have agreed upon of having a fleet equal to that of any other power it will be necessary for us to do the same thing; but, however that may be, no provision is made for it in this bill.

Mr. KING. I express no opinion as to the propriety of the proposed changes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 22, line 14, to strike out "$1,350,000" and insert "$1,500,000," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards, naval stations, and offices of United States inspectors of machinery and engineering material for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, shall not exceed $1,500,000.

Mr. KING. I ask that that item go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the same item that we have just been considering, involved in the previous line. It is just a correction.

Mr. KING. Then I have no objection. I thought it was an increase in the appropriation for clerical force.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is a limitation.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 23, line 7, to increase the appropriation for services of draftsmen and such other technical services required to carry into effect the various appropriations for "Increase of the Navy" and the appropriation "Engineering" from $150,000 to $170,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 6, in the items for salaries, Navy Department, to increase the appropriation for services of draftsmen and such other technical services required to carry into effect the various appropriations for "Increase of the Navy" and the appropriation "Construction and repair" from $170,000 to $190,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 25, to increase the appropriation for ordnance and ordnance stores from $9,000,000 to $9,903,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation as to that increase.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is not an increase in the total amount carried by the bill. The amount of $903,000 was stricken from the appropriation for ordnance under "Increase of the Navy" on page 53 and put in here because of the controversy over the question as to whether the Maryland should be considered as a completed ship or an incomplete ship. In order to meet the objections on that score, the appropriation was taken out of "Increase of the Navy" and put under the head of "Ordnance" for the purpose of installing antiaircraft guns, fire-control equipment, and ammunition on that ship.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether, in the report submitted by the naval authorities, the amounts required for the various items mentioned in this paragraph were separately and specifically set forth—for instance, for the armament of ships, for fuel, for material, for labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department, for furniture at naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, and so forth? Did the department submit an itemized statement of the amount which would be employed for each of those items?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; a very minute and detailed statement.

Mr. KING. And is it understood that the general appropriation here may not be differently allocated from the items submitted by the Navy Department?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was all gone into, not only by the committee but by the Budget, and pruned down so that it would be impossible for them to any extent to interchange those appropriations.

Mr. KING. Is there any rule or regulation or any law which, to use the Senator's expression, would prohibit the interchange of any of those appropriations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think there is any law that prohibits it, but the necessities of the service practically prohibit it, because the amount is calculated upon the necessities of each one of the activities that are specified in this paragraph. If we take it away from any one of them, that activity can not be maintained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 8, to insert the following paragraph:

For the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances, to be available until expended, $550,000.

Mr. KING. I ask for an explanation of that item. It was not reported in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was recommended by the Budget Bureau. The purpose of it is simply as stated, for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances. The view of the committee was that it is useless to have ships unless you have ordnance and ammunition for the ships. The allowance of torpedoes for the destroyers which the United States has is short to the extent of eight torpedoes for each destroyer, in order to make the full complement agreed upon by the technical experts of our naval service. In order to maintain the activities at our torpedo factory, and continue to make torpedoes to supply this deficiency, in consideration of the fact that it requires some six months to a year to complete a torpedo, it being one of the most complicated pieces of machinery in the world, it was thought a very wise precaution, so long as we are maintaining a Navy at all, to provide for a supply of torpedoes for the full complement of the vessels which we have.

Mr. KING. Why did not the House committee, which gave considerable attention to the preparation of this bill, and which doubtless heard the experts to whom the Senator refers, make the recommendation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is impossible for me to tell what mental processes the House committee used in arriving at their conclusions. They probably thought they were willing to take a chance of getting along without the necessary number of torpedoes. Our committee thought we might as well do away with the ships if we did not have them prepared. There was a large supply of the parts of torpedoes made during the war, and those parts should be used and put together, and the necessary finishing and manufacturing should be performed in order that they should not be entirely wasted. If not used in a few months they will deteriorate so that they would be practically useless, whereas if they are put together and completed in torpedoes they can be preserved for an indefinite length of time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Were they included in the estimates?

Mr. SWANSON. They are included in the estimates. There is enough material on hand to construct about 500 torpedoes, material already paid for, which will be wasted if it is not used within the next two years. This appropriation will take care of about half of it, and the department is very urgent, and state that it will probably cost a great deal of money if these torpedoes are constructed in the future. If not used in two years' time this material will deteriorate so that it can not be used.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from Virginia that the intimation has come to me, although I have not read the testimony in the House hearings, that this is rather to take care of two Government factories, or two private factories, I did not learn which, which were engaged in the past in making torpedoes, and in order to give work to some persons who otherwise might be separated from the service; in other words, that it was not a necessity so much as it was to give employment to individuals.

Mr. SWANSON. That is one of the usual accusations made when an appropriation is asked to continue work. The Navy Department states that the material was bought and paid for during the war to construct about 500 torpedoes, as I previously stated, and they say that there would be great waste if that material is not utilized at this time. It would save from one-third to 25 per cent in the cost of the torpedoes if the material is used now, and they are not compelled to purchase new material later. We need 2,400 torpedoes for our fleet. We have no fast cruisers, and a destroyer is useless without torpedoes. I see no use in spending $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 for a destroyer if we do not put torpedoes on it. The Navy Department says it is absolutely necessary. The Budget Bureau recommended it.

Mr. KING. The information furnished me is not sufficient to warrant a persistent opposition to the appropriation. I shall not object to its being voted upon, with the understanding that if I care upon further investigation to move to reconsider, no objection will be made to that motion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 16, after the word "reenlisting," to strike out "under honorable discharge" and insert "after being honorably discharged," so as to read "extra pay to men reenlisting after being honorably discharged, $1,839,525."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to page 34, line 12, the last paragraph read being as follows:

BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

For surgeon's necessaries for vessels in commission, navy yards, naval stations, and Marine Corps; and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy yards, naval medical supply depots, Naval Medical School and Dispensary, Washington, and Naval Academy, $1,760,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical service in naval hospitals, dispensaries, medical supply depots, and Naval Medical School, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, shall not exceed $150,000.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the chairman if the appropriation under that heading is not larger than it was a year ago?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Last year it was $2,400,000. This year it is only $1,760,000, a very material reduction. It is $640,000 less than it was last year.

Mr. KING. It occurred to me there ought to be a very material reduction in view of the change in conditions from last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 16, to increase the appropriation for nontechnical employees in the Bureau of Yards and Docks from $50,000 to $53,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 22, to increase the appropriation for services of draftsmen and such other technical services to carry into effect the various appropriations and allotments thereunder from $120,000 to $150,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to page 53, line 17, the last paragraph read being as follows:

In all, for the maintenance of Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, $8,604,943; and the money herein specifically appropriated for the maintenance of the Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with the existing law as maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps; and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator consent to taking a recess at this time? I want to make some observations on the Marine Corps appropriation, and move to reduce the force.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are one or two other minor amendments yet to be disposed of. Will the Senator allow us to complete those?

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 19, after the words "enlisted men" to insert "and accepted applicants for enlistment," so as to read:

CONTINGENT, MARINE CORPS.

For freight, expressage, tolls, cartage, advertising, washing bed linen, towels, and other articles of Government property, funeral expenses of officers and enlisted men and accepted applicants for enlistment, and retired officers on active duty during the war and retired enlisted men of the Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 22, to reduce the appropriation for "Increase of the Navy" from $20,000,000 to $19,097,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, to strike out lines 7 to 14, inclusive, in the following words, "No part of any appropriation made for the Navy shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, including personal services of civilians and of enlisted men of the Navy, except as herein expressly authorized: Provided, That there may be detailed to the Bureau of Navigation not to exceed at any one time 34 enlisted men of the Navy," and in lieu to insert:

No part of any appropriation made for the naval service shall be expended for any of the purposes herein provided for on account of the Navy Department in the District of Columbia, including personal services, except as herein expressly authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendments have now been completed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next I shall offer an amendment to the pending bill, and perhaps a strict construction of the rule requires that I give notice of my intention to move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, so that I may offer the amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah gives notice of an intention to move to suspend the rule, which will be read.

The notice was read, as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of Rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I will move to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, the following amendment:

That the President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments with which the United States has diplomatic relations to send representatives to a conference to be held in the city of Washington, which shall be charged with the duty of formulating and entering into a general international agreement by which armaments for war, both upon land and sea, shall be effectually reduced and limited in the interest of the peace of nations and the relief of all nations from the burdens of inordinate and unnecessary expenditures for the provision of armaments and the preparation for war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, upon the convening of the Senate, I shall ask the Senate to proceed with the further consideration of the pending bill. Before moving an executive session I yield to my colleague.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], from the Committee on Commerce, I wish to report two bills. First, I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4133) granting the consent of Congress to the State of North Dakota and the State of Minnesota, the county of Pembina, N. Dak., and the county of Kittson, Minn., or any one of them, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak., and I submit a report (No. 961) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bills do not involve any question such as we had up between New York and New Jersey?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; they do not. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4133.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, lines 9 and 10, to strike out the words "and that the time for the commencement and completion of such bridge," and on page 2, lines 3, 4, and 5, to strike out the words "shall be commenced within one year and completed within three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of North Dakota and the State of Minnesota, the County of Pembina, N. Dak., and the County of Kittson, Minn., or any one of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the City of Pembina, N. Dak., and in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS BIG SIOUX RIVER.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Also, on behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (S. 4131) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Sioux City, Iowa, and to Union County, in the State of South Dakota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Big Sioux River at a point 2½ miles north of the mouth of said river, between section 14, township 89, range 48, Woodbury County, Iowa, and section 15, township 89, range 48, Union County, S. Dak., and I submit a report (No. 960) thereon. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator from Washington if he has personally examined these bills.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I looked over the bills. They are in the usual form.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, before the word "two," to insert "suitable to the interests of navigation, about" and in line 8, before the word "between," to insert "and"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Sioux City, Iowa, and to Union County, in the State of South Dakota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Big Sioux River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, about 2½ miles north of the mouth of said river, and between section 14, township 89, range 48, Woodbury County, Iowa, and section 15, township 89, range 48, Union County, S. Dak., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON TUBERCULOSIS AMONG NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

Mr. SPENCER. I submit a report on tuberculosis among the North American Indians by a committee of the National Tuberculosis Association appointed October 28, 1921. I ask that this report be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be so referred.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 23, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 22, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We thank Thee, our dear heavenly Father, that Thou art still within the shadows keeping watch above Thine own. The blessing of a great comfort is ours, as we are reminded again that the divine love extends to the very bounds of creation; that all mortals, over whom the skies bend in solemn silence, are within the folds of the Father's arms. The Lord God bless, direct, and endow with great wisdom the House of Representatives. May goodness and truth always be defended against the wrong. We bless Thee that this day is ours. To-morrow and all the future may we leave to Thee, without anxiety and unhappy contemplation, for our times are in Thine hands. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 11903, a bill covering what is known as the Ford proposal to take over Muscle Shoals.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, in asking the unanimous consent of the House to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with H. R. 11903, the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs recommending the adoption of the Ford proposal, with slight modifications, to take over what is known as the Muscle Shoals property, is the indulgence in a practice which I have been careful to avoid during my service in the House of Representatives, always preferring to say whatever I desire to say from the floor of the House. However, in this short session of Congress, in view of the vast amount of legislative work to be done, I fully realize that time should not be taken by Members to discuss legislation which is not before the House at that particular time for final action, and having this in mind I asked for and was granted the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD on this proposition. It is understood by the membership of the House that as acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I submitted the report and the recommendations contained therein accompanying H. R. 11903. A copy of this report undoubtedly can be procured by anyone desiring to study it, either from the document room or the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. In reporting this bill I earnestly endeavored to bring out the facts in connection with this great project without prejudice or favoritism, being impressed with the gigantic undertaking involved and the necessity for carrying out the development and operations at this particular place, to the best advantage of the people of our entire country, and I am at a loss to know what I could add to the reasoning set forth in my report that would tend to aid the Members of the House in coming to a conclusion as to the best method of disposing of this very important matter.

I am not unmindful, nor have I been at any time, of the great diversity of honest opinion in relation to this subject. It is a matter of such far-reaching importance, involving questions of public policy and the establishment of a precedent on which men may honestly differ. There is one point on which I am satisfied, and on which all unprejudiced men will agree, and that is that this question should be definitely settled in some manner and removed from the field of discussion.

It has not been my purpose to assume any pride in the adoption of the particular ideas contained in my report on this matter, and I have at all times stood ready to cheerfully accept any proposition, that at least on its face, guarantees more to the people of our country, than does the proposal submitted by Mr. Henry Ford.

I am prompted to make this extension of remarks as a result of a short speech delivered on the floor of the House, on December 14, 1922, by my colleague on the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. KEARNS, of Ohio. In this speech he proceeded to say that there had been much misleading information concerning the offer of Mr. Henry Ford sent out through Congress and otherwise, "information that is indeed very misleading to the American people," and among other things he says:

Those who favor the Ford offer have attempted to gain the sympathy of the farmer by pretending to him that Henry Ford, if his offer should be accepted, would use this gigantic plant at Muscle Shoals and the water power at Dams Nos. 2 and 3 for the manufacture of fertilizer. Mr. Ford in his proposition to the Secretary of War has not agreed to make one pound of fertilizer at Muscle Shoals unless he can make it at a profit to himself.

And further says:

Even if he can make fertilizer at a profit to himself, he only agrees to use one-tenth part of that power in the manufacture of this very much needed commodity. The Ford propagandist never, for reasons obvious, tells the country this fact. This is concealed from the public.

In all fairness it may possibly be said, that certain gamblers and land speculators interested in the development of the territory adjacent to the Muscle Shoals project may have made absurd and far-fetched misrepresentations, as is usually the custom with exploiters of that type, hoping to be able to induce people who are not well informed to invest their savings in property contained within imaginary cities which it is assumed will spring up as a result of the acceptance of Mr. Ford's offer by their Government. For all such people who endeavor to exploit their fellow men and to misrepresent the Government under whose protection they are privileged to live, I have but the utmost contempt. It is equally unfair for anyone to make charges against the men in Congress or elsewhere, who have no pecuniary interest in this matter, and whose only desire is to see it finally determined to the greatest advantage of the Government from the standpoint of national defense, and it is also unfair to charge Members of Congress with an attempt to mislead the farmers of the country when their only desire is to secure the greatest advantages possible in the economical production of fertilizer which in turn may be sold at a reasonable price, with additional benefits which will flow to the country generally.

In answer to all of this criticism let us simply analyze the statements made in the light of the facts as set forth in the proposal of Mr. Henry Ford as modified by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and contained in H. R. 11903.

The following extract from the proposal now pending before the House is submitted for the careful consideration of the Members in order that every Member may determine for himself whether or not the language, which was carefully passed upon by your committee and which was submitted to and approved by the representatives of the great farm organizations of the country, does or does not provide that Mr. Ford or his company shall produce annually a certain amount of fixed nitrogen, to wit, 40,000 tons, or its equivalent, and whether or not the 8 per cent net profit mentioned in paragraph 16 of the proposal of Mr. Henry Ford dated May 31, 1922, and in section 15 of H. R. 11903 is not a limitation on the amount of profit which may be enjoyed, and whether it in any way curtails or relieves Mr. Ford or his company from the annual production of the amount of fixed nitrogen, to wit, 40,000 tons, as prescribed in paragraph 15 of the proposal and in section 14 of H. R. 11903, which is now on the calendar for consideration:

FORD'S OFFER.

15. Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitutes one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant within a reasonable time to its former capacity and further agrees:

H. R. 11903.

SEC. 14. Since the manufacture, sale, and distribution of commercial fertilizers to farmers and other users thereof constitute one of the principal considerations of this offer, the company expressly agrees that, continuously throughout the lease period, except as it may be prevented by reconstruction of the plant itself, or by war, strikes, accidents, fires, or other causes beyond its control, it will manufacture nitrogen and other commercial fertilizers, mixed or unmixed, and with or without filler, according to demand, at nitrate plant No. 2 or its equivalent, or at such other plant or plants adjacent or near thereto as it may construct, using the most economical source of power available. The annual production of these fertilizers shall have a nitrogen content of at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, which is the present annual capacity of nitrate plant No. 2. If during the lease period said nitrate plant No. 2 is destroyed or damaged from any cause, the company agrees to restore such plant, within a reasonable time, to its former capacity and further agrees:

FORD'S PROPOSAL.

16. In order that farmers and other users of fertilizers may be supplied with fertilizers at fair prices and without excessive profits the company agrees that the maximum net profit which it shall make in the manufacture and sale of fertilizer products shall not exceed 8 per cent of the fair actual annual cost of production thereof. In order that this provision may be carried out the company agrees to the creation of a board of not more than nine voting members, chosen as follows: The three leading representative farm organizations, national in fact, namely, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, or their successor or successors (said successor or successors to be determined, in case of controversy, by the Secretary of Agriculture), shall each designate not more than seven candidates for said board in the first instance, and thereafter, for succession in office, not more than three candidates. The President shall nominate for membership on this board not more than seven of these candidates, selected to give representation to each of the above-mentioned organizations, said nominations to be made subject to confirmation by the Senate, and there shall be two voting members of said board selected by the company: Provided, That not more than one shall be nominated by the President from the same State; that if the Senate shall not confirm all of said seven nominees the President shall send additional names from the said list of candidates until the Senate shall have confirmed seven: Provided further, That if either or any of said farm organizations or its or their successors, by reason of the expiration of its or their charter, or ceasing to function or failing to maintain its organization, or for any cause or reason should decline, fail, or neglect to make such designations, then the Secretary of Agriculture shall make such designation or designations for such or all of said organizations as may so decline, fail, or neglect to make such designation; and if such designation is made by the Secretary of Agriculture for only one or two of said organizations, then such designation shall be made so as to give the remaining organization or organizations the same right and in the same proportion to designate candidates for said board as in the first instance, and just as though all of said organizations were making such designations: Provided, however, That a failure to make designations at any one time shall not thereafter deprive any organization of its original rights under this section: And provided further, That the terms of office of the first seven candidates nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate on the designation of said farm organizations shall be as follows: Two for a period of two years, two for a period of four years, and the remaining three for a period of six years, and thereafter the nominations for membership on said board made by the President, except for unexpired terms, shall be for six years each. None of the members of said board shall draw compensation from the Government, except that any which may be nominated and confirmed on the designation of the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions hereof shall receive from the Government their actual expenses while engaged in work on said board. A representative of the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, or its legal successor, to be appointed by the President, shall also be a member of the board, serving in an advisory capacity without the right to vote. The said board shall determine what has been the cost of manufacture and sale of fertilizer products and the price which has been charged therefor, and, if necessary for the purpose of limiting the annual profit to 8 per cent as aforesaid, shall regulate the price at which said fertilizer may be sold by the company. For these purposes said board shall have access to the books and records of the company at any reasonable time. In order that such fertilizer products may be fairly distributed and economically purchased by farmers and other users thereof, the said board shall determine the equitable territorial distribution of the same, and may in its discretion make reasonable regulation for the sale of all or a portion of such products by the company to farmers, their agencies or organizations. If and when said board can not agree upon its findings and determinations, then the points of disagreement shall be referred to the Federal Trade Commission, or its legal successor, for arbitration and settlement, and the decision of said commission in such cases shall be final and binding upon the board.

tion of the Secretary of Agriculture under the provisions hereof shall receive from the Government their actual expenses while engaged in work on said board.

A representative of the Bureau of Markets, Department of Agriculture, or its legal successor, to be appointed by the President, shall also be a member of the board serving in an advisory capacity without the right to vote. I submit that if under the language of paragraphs 15 and 16 of Mr. Ford's proposal and of sections 14 and 15 of the bill now pending before the House it is not broad enough to require the production of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually, regardless of the question of profit, and that, further, the 8 per cent net profit so often criticized is merely a limitation of profit and in no way could be construed as qualifying the amount of the minimum production, then, I am frank to say, I do not comprehend the English language. But happily for those of us who do take this position that Mr. Ford must produce 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually, I submit the Judge Advocate General's testimony before the committee (p. 179):

Congressman HULL. You [Colonel Hull] had something to do, as I understand it, with the drafting of this contract?

Colonel HULL. It was drafted in the office.

Congressman HULL. Then I presume you know something about the liability of Mr. Ford under that contract?

Colonel HULL. Yes, sir; it has been studied.

Congressman HULL. Would he be bound to produce fertilizer under that contract, if it was found possible?

Colonel HULL. As now drafted?

Congressman HULL. As now drafted he would have to produce at least——

Colonel HULL (interposing). To the maximum capacity of plant No. 2.

Congressman HULL. There would not be any question about that?

Colonel HULL. There is not any in my mind.

The CHAIRMAN. Under what section?

Colonel HULL. Section 14.

Congressman HULL. Suppose he could not produce it; that it was found physically impossible to produce the fertilizer compound in paying quantities; what would be the result, so far as the contract with the Government goes?

Colonel HULL. If the Government insists, a court of equity would grant relief, and not compel the performance of the impossible.

Congressman HULL. What section of the second contract with Mr. Ford covers that?

Colonel HULL. Section 14.

Congressman HULL. If it was found impossible to produce this fertilizer, I presume, of course, he would be enabled to take the hydroelectric power that was supposed to go into the production of the fertilizer and use it or sell it as he saw fit?

Colonel HULL. Yes; but, of course, he would be obligated to maintain his laboratory and experiments and try to produce.

And further, on page 200 of the hearings, Congressman GREENE asked Colonel Hull, the Acting Judge Advocate:

* * * for the purpose of producing this ingredient necessary for the making of fertilizer at a specified capacity, with this exception, in language set out, "except as it may be prevented by strikes, accidents, fire, or other causes beyond its control." It is reasonable to assume, of course, that notwithstanding Mr. Ford's production of this sulphate of ammonia for fertilizer purposes under this contract, other concerns, chemical laboratories, and similar industries would be at work on all sorts of methods for accomplishing the same thing. That is something which we are always trying to provide for. If in the course of a few years it is demonstrated that this ingredient of fertilizer can be produced through ordinary commercial sources, and if it becomes as common a staple as many other commercial products, it would manifestly not be to the business interest of Mr. Ford to continue the manufacture at his nitrate plant. It becomes a market condition which is one of the causes looking toward its control. Would you think he would be justified then in ceasing to manufacture this ingredient?

Colonel HULL. No, sir. I do not think the conditions which you outline would be construed by any court as another cause beyond his control as specified by this contract. That is a technical question and that is the reason I give you the answer that that language among lawyers would mean that it would have to be something that is set forth.

Mr. GREENE. He must keep apace with the developments in the outside world for 100 years?

Colonel HULL. He is obligated to do that by the contract.

Mr. GREENE. That you think is quite clear?

Colonel HULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREENE. Whatever may be the change in the manner of the outside world producing this product or its equivalent he must meet it, and we are assuming that the laws of chemistry will not change, and it will be this ammonium sulphate?

Colonel HULL. It might be an entirely different compound.

Mr. GREENE. Then he must meet that compound?

Colonel HULL. He would have to meet that proposition to produce fertilizer, because that is covered in the very next clause in regard to maintaining a research laboratory and to keep on experimenting to get the products in a cheaper and more feasible way.

Mr. GREENE. He would have to follow the thing all through the transmutations of chemistry?

Colonel HULL. He has to produce to the maximum given capacity.

Another criticism which might be misleading, and which is an oft-repeated one, is that Mr. Ford or his company agrees to use but one-tenth of the power developed at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of the products necessary in the making of fertilizer, and in this respect the farmers of the country are being deceived.

Now, the truth is that there is not a single sentence in any paragraph of the proposal or in the bill now before you that will substantiate the statement that Mr. Ford or his company proposes to or agrees to use but 10 per cent of the power developed at Muscle Shoals in producing fertilizer.

What he does agree to do is to use the most economical source of power available to produce fertilizer, with a minimum production of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually, mixed or unmixed, according to demand; and to comply with this provision in his offer, Mr. Ford will have to use more than 100,000 horsepower, for this amount is required to produce 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen at nitrate plant No. 2, and in order to manufacture fertilizer, mixed or unmixed, according to demand, Mr. Ford will have to use such additional power over the 100,000 horsepower required to produce a minimum of 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen at nitrate plant No. 2 annually as will be necessary to produce an amount of fertilizer that will contain at least 40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen, together with other plant foods, mixed or unmixed, according to demand.

If, for example, the market demands require the production of a mixed fertilizer known to the trade as "2-8-2," which carries 2 per cent nitrogen, 8 per cent phosphoric acid, and 2 per cent potash, the annual production of such a fertilizer would be 2,000,000 tons, and it is not conceivable—indeed, it will be impossible, according to all the information I can get—to produce this tonnage of fertilizer without the use of this necessary additional horsepower, and as to the amount of additional power it will require, I can not say.

I do not feel that it is a fair assumption to say that Mr. Ford's offer in any way gives color to the suggestion that he will use nine-tenths of the power developed at Muscle Shoals in the manufacture of products which he may deem most profitable to himself unrestrained by any authority. Even if he did enter the field in some other activity, he would be subject to all of the Federal and State laws now controlling the manufacture of like products.

If, for example, Mr. Ford or his company deemed it to their advantage to sell power in Alabama for public utility purposes or for general manufacturing, he or it will be regulated and controlled as to rates and service under the same laws and regulations as the Alabama Power Co. or any other company engaged in a similar enterprise, by the Public Utility Commission of Alabama.

Another criticism of the Ford proposal which is put to the front in all general criticisms is the fact that Mr. Ford's proposed contract with the Government is not drawn and will not be governed under the provisions and regulations prescribed in the so-called "Federal water power act," and particular stress is placed upon the fact that his proposal is to extend over a period of 100 years, while the limitations on water-power grants under the aforementioned act are but for 50 years.

It is true that in many respects the proposal of Mr. Ford is unique and without precedent. However, I believe that sound reasons can be given for excepting his plan from the provisions of this act and for the extended period of 100 years instead of limiting it to 50 years as provided in the water power act. In connection with this point, I desire to quote briefly from pages 44 and 45 of the report, No. 1084, which I submitted as acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, covering this proposal:

The proposal of Mr. Ford to form a corporation and to take over the property for a period of 100 years, during which long period he agrees to maintain and keep in readiness for the production of nitrogen to be used in the manufacture of explosives, to the full capacity of nitrate plant No. 2, as a matter of national defense is a thing of far more importance than the payment of a few millions of dollars. And his second continuing obligation, that during peace times he will run to its full capacity the said plant for the production of the elements of commercial fertilizer, in the interests of the farmers and other users of fertilizers in this country, is perhaps an equal if not a greater undertaking than the maintenance of such plant as an element of national defense. Taking these two propositions together, and in addition thereto his obligation to pay 4 per cent annually on the cost of the completion of Dam No. 2 and the construction of Dam No. 3 and on the cost of the flowage rights for the lease period, and in addition thereto to establish a sinking fund which, accumulating during the lease period, will amortize the Government for the entire expenditure for the completion of Dam No. 2 and the construction of Dam No. 3, in connection with the several minor obligations which he assumes, gives his proposal commanding attention, and one to which the Congress of the United States may well give its early and most earnest attention.

Other criticisms are that Mr. Ford or his company declines to put his or its money into the construction of the proposed hydroelectric plants, but asks that the Government advance the money for the construction of the dams and certain other facilities, and that he be permitted to carry on the construction without a profit and that when completed he is to pay 4 per cent annually on the cost of construction, and further proposes a plan of amortization which at the end of a period will reimburse the Government for all of the expenditure in construction on Dams Nos. 2 and 3, and, furthermore, that he will pay annually the sum of $55,000 toward the maintenance of these dams.

On this last point Mr. KEARNS in his statement on the floor of the House used the following language:

> And yet every engineer who appeared before our committee testified that the minimum estimate is 1 per cent of the cost of construction for the upkeep of the dam and the maximum cost of upkeep 3 per cent, and the cost of construction would be $67,000,000. So it would cost the American people to keep up the dams for 100 years $670,000 per annum less $55,000 of this sum to be paid by Ford. That is the minimum cost, and if it should reach the maximum cost of 3 per cent it would be three times that amount, or $1,845,000, for repairs alone.

However, my colleague is mistaken as to the facts in this particular instance, for the testimony taken before our committee does not confirm this statement at all; and there is no evidence which I have been able to discover that will corroborate the foregoing statement relative to the cost of maintenance made by an engineer or any other person appearing before the committee.

All of these proposals have been criticized: (1) That 4 per cent is not a sufficient return on the investment; (2) that his plan of amortizing the principal is unsound; (3) that $55,000 will not take care of the maintenance of the dam from year to year.

In the judgment of responsible men who have given this matter earnest consideration the rate of interest fixed at 4 per cent on the cost of construction and the acquiring of the flowage rights is a fair consideration for the privileges granted coupled with the other obligations controlling the contract; and it has been doubted by some as to whether or not the power so produced will be cheap enough to permit the use of it in the manufacture of commercial fertilizer to be sold at a reasonable price, which we all understand is one of the principal elements entering into the proposed plan.

It may be conceded that the plan of amortization is novel, but if it results in the end in making the Government whole, then why criticize the plan?

On the question of maintenance, Major General Beach, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, testified "that the amount mentioned, $55,000, would be ample," and, further, in a letter under date of August 15, 1921, to Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, said:

> Average annual cost of maintenance and repairs for both Dams Nos. 2 and 3, for dams, locks, and gates during lease period is estimated at $50,000 per annum. This estimate of $50,000 per annum relates to about $32,000,000 worth of masonry and $3,135,000 worth of gates and machinery, the balance of the cost being in temporary constructions which could not be maintained after the dams are completed.

I desire again to call to the attention of the Members of the House the criticism relative to the length of the lease period, which in my humble judgment is one of the most important and beneficial provisions of the whole plan in working to the advantage of the Government.

Long lease periods of 100 years or more are not unknown in our country. A case in point is the great Keokuk Dam across the Mississippi River, which was constructed by private enterprise under a perpetual lease, and it is one of the strange things brought out in the investigation of this proposed plan that the distinguished engineer, Col. Hugh L. Cooper, criticizes the proposed term of 100 years to Henry Ford and in his same statement volunteers the information that he is vice president of the company operating the Keokuk Dam under a perpetual lease.

To my mind, one of the conclusive tests to be applied to Mr. Ford's proposal in connection with the foregoing criticism is the fact that no individual or corporation has submitted a more remunerative and practical proposal to the Government. And why?

If the Government is giving so much to Mr. Ford under this proposal, it is strange indeed that with all the splendid, energetic captains of industry and men of financial ability none have appeared before the Secretary of War and urged him to give them an opportunity to compensate the Government in greater measure than Mr. Ford proposes in his offer. Why is this? Let the critic of Mr. Ford's offer give us the answer.

I will assume that you are all familiar with the character of the offers made by the Alabama Power Co., Frederick E. Engstrum, and Dr. Charles E. Parsons, all of which are propositions for leasing the power developed or operating the plant for the Government when constructed, and in some instances asking a fee for superintending construction.

It was the judgment of the committee that as a solution of this many-sided problem, which includes not only the element of national defense but the manufacturing of a commercial fertilizer, the improvement of navigation, and the maintenance of Government property, that the proposal of Henry Ford was the one above all others worthy of serious consideration.

Several bills have been introduced in the House and Senate by different members, aiming at a solution of this problem, but they all, in my judgment, contain the fatal defect of either Government operation or operation of a Government plant by lessee. The only clearly defined proposal, in my judgment, is the Ford proposal. Its terms are plain and easily understood. It proposes action, definite and continuing, and safeguards the vital interests of the people. All of the other proposals contain many elements speculative to a large degree, so far as results are concerned, and all of them leave the burden of maintenance upon the Government, which we all know would be very large and never ending and probably increasing.

We who have in a large measure given our approval to the Ford proposal, as modified by the Committee on Military Affairs, have been criticized and accused of an attempt to deceive the great agricultural interests of our country. Personally, I have the honor of representing one of the greatest agricultural districts in the world. I was born on a farm. I am familiar with the toil of the farmer, from years of experience, and while I have not succeeded in being advertised all over our country as an honorary member of the farm bloc, I am positive that I can give without question my earnest support to any measure which in my judgment will be of practical value to the men and women engaged in agriculture, and I have been amused at times at the frantic efforts of some people to "swear in" on every occasion as "the friend of the farmer" or of the laboring man.

I do not know that in my service here I have ever been able to get more than a 50-50 record as a friend of labor from those who compile reports for their organizations, and this may be due to the fact that I, like many others who have a deep interest in labor and agriculture, have not seen fit to be continuously reiterating and publishing our loyalty to both of these great classes of our citizens.

However, we now have before us pending on the calendar the Henry Ford proposal, as modified by the Committee on Military Affairs, which, in my judgment, carries with it the most vital and momentously potential elements for the benefit of both the farmers and the laborers of our land of any proposal heretofore submitted for our consideration. Where do the friends of labor and agriculture stand on this matter? Are you with us, or do you feel that the farmers are being deceived? Permit me to suggest that the wide-awake farmers and the intelligent laboring men of this country are not deceived on this matter, statements to the contrary notwithstanding.

The farmers of this country have not forgotten the lesson received by Government operation of our railroads for a brief period, and they are still paying and suffering from its results. Do you think for a moment that they have any hope of getting cheap commercial fertilizer produced at Muscle Shoals by political henchmen operating a great industrial plant, or even as suggested in some of the bills presented to Congress, an experimental station to furnish information for the benefit of the great commercial fertilizer interests? Oh, no, my colleagues! The farmers are not being deceived in this matter. They understand just what it would mean for the Government to undertake to maintain those great plants down there even in a "stand-by" condition, and they furthermore understand the difficulties which would confront the Government if it should undertake the manufacture and sale of electric current in a territory now controlled with a network of transmission lines, the property of the great Alabama Power Co. No; they are not deceived! They know what they want, and I agree with them, that rather than undertake Government operation of this plant, and making it a bone of political contention, it would be infinitely cheaper for the Government to pay tribute to the Chilean nitrate barons and purchase annually large quantities of fertilizer and give it to the farmers.

It is not my purpose to enter a special plea for Henry Ford. I do not know Mr. Ford. I have never looked upon him as a philanthropist, and in the splendid section of the country from which I come we have not as yet learned to worship him. We still worship God in my section, and we are not so familiar with Mr. Ford as my colleague on the committee, Mr. QUIN, of Mississippi, who stated in the hearings:

> We think a good deal of Mr. Ford down in our country; we call him Uncle Henry.

To be serious is my intention and purpose. This is not a question of Mr. Ford or any particular corporation. It has been my intention to deal with this matter as a cold-blooded business proposition, forgetting personalities, geographical locations, and all the distracting influences brought to bear on this subject.

I am frank to concede that if the bald statement were made by an opponent of the Ford proposition to an American audience that we propose to give to Henry Ford $106,000,000 worth of Government property for the paltry sum of $5,000,000 or less, this statement, standing unexplained, would no doubt bring a negative response from such audience. But when fully explained in all of its details there is little doubt in my mind but what the vast majority of people would approve and recommend the adoption by Congress of the proposal as modified by the committee.

It is always conceded that in considering great problems, especially involving many figures and estimates, that there are many chances for misunderstanding, and it is always possible for one so inclined to juggle the figures in such a way as to frequently mislead the reader. I have avoided the use of figures as much as possible in this extension of remarks on account of the fact that under this privilege opportunity to ask questions is not possible; and it is not my purpose at this time to discuss details or figures but rather call attention to the principles involved in this proposal.

In conclusion, let us just stop for a moment and see if we, in our imagination, can get a clear perspective of the meaning of this whole matter. Muscle Shoals is located on the Tennessee River, one of the great rivers of our country, in the northern part of the State of Alabama. Stretching for hundreds of miles to the south and east, as far as there is land, are the great cotton fields which have clothed America for years, and from that continuous cultivation which has been demanded all of these years the soil has become impoverished in fertility. To the north and east for hundreds of miles stretch the lands which have been cultivated for three centuries, and this soil also has become impoverished to a very large extent. Turning to the north and westward are the great fertile plains of Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin, and the Dakotas, which have not yet been so impoverished. In the cotton fields of the South and in the agricultural districts of the North and Northeast commercial fertilizer is a necessity. Gradually but surely the virgin elements of the fertile plains and prairies of the great West and North are becoming depleted in fertility, and, in fact, are now requiring more and more fertilizer as the years go by.

It is no idle statement to assert that the time is coming when commercial fertilizer will be largely, if not universally, used by the agriculturists of our country. It is inevitable that as the soil becomes impoverished the demand for commercial fertilizer will keep pace. While the far-seeing farmer knows this, no one knows it better than the great commercial fertilizer manufacturers of the country, and they can see very clearly that as the task of the farmer becomes more burdensome and less remunerative on account of soil depletion the flow of profits into their coffers, due to the direct necessity for commercial fertilizer, increases. Therefore it is not strange that this class of people, having in mind their personal welfare, should be found arrayed against the Ford proposal to manufacture "40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually, mixed or unmixed, according to demand," which is equal to 250,000 tons of Chilean nitrate, an amount equal to all of the Chilean nitrate used in American agriculture before the Great War.

Are the farmers deceived as to this? Are the farmers of the country so unsophisticated that they can not see that without doubt, with the increased demand, there will come greater cost for the needed fertilizer? Most assuredly not. Is it not natural and perfectly proper that they should favor any proposition that will tend to stabilize and keep within reasonable bounds the cost of this product so vital to their interests?

But what does the Ford proposal offer as a remedy for the existing situation and a hope in the future? To me it is plain. Here at Muscle Shoals is this mighty water power awaiting development. Mr. Ford, with one of the greatest industrial organizations in the world, proposes to establish a plant, the details of which I will not discuss at this time, and he will for the period of 100 years produce "40,000 tons of fixed nitrogen annually," with a limited profit of 8 per cent, and I am informed that the 2,000,000 tons of 2-8-2 fertilizer, for which this would furnish the nitrogen, would amount to more than 38 per cent of the fertilizer consumption of the United States in 1921. Does anyone doubt that this would have a tendency to stabilize and control prices, or at least prevent the boosting of the fertilizer market? If one has any doubt, let him ask some manufacturer of this product. And in the event that the competitors of Mr. Ford would lower the price of their goods to a point where it might even be unprofitable to manufacture the product at Muscle Shoals, the farmer would again be the beneficiary.

Finally, let me reiterate that there has been no effort on the part of the men most earnestly desiring a solution of this problem, in or out of Congress, to mislead or deceive the farmer or laboring people of the country, and I am fully convinced that they are not deceived, but have a much clearer conception of the vital and far-reaching policies involved than we might without consideration give due credit for, and I am further convinced of the fact, and I wish to call it to the attention of my colleagues, that these two classes of our people can not quite understand why it is possible for Congress to find hours and days in which to discuss the problem of paying a subsidy to men to put our flag on the seas for the purpose of competing with other ocean carriers in the transportation of the small fraction of our products which must find a market abroad, or in the taking up of valuable time in the discussion of a proposition to call an international economic congress to be held in Washington to consider the relief from impending bankruptcy of the nations of Europe who would buy the small fraction of our products remaining for export from the farms of our country, while a problem which deals directly with and affects the millions of our own people at home hangs on the House Calendar with danger of being entirely omitted from consideration by Congress during the present short and busy session.

Surely, my colleagues, it is a pertinent question, and if I could arouse a sentiment that would bring about prompt consideration of this measure, which is fraught with so much of benefit for the entire people of our country, before the 4th day of March next, I am sure that the farmers and laborers of this country, in the event this proposition is given favorable consideration, would join in glad acclaim that their Representatives are still responsive to the wishes and best interests of the men and women whom they represent.

Let me express the hope that H. R. 11903 may be given early and favorable consideration, and permit me to admonish you that in my judgment if it is not we will awaken to the fact that the farmers have not been deceived, but have been denied the one thing above all others that they hoped for at our hands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3275) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers and sailors, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows."

STATISTICS OF THE FOREIGN COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 276).

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill, S. 3295, to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

J. W. FORDNEY,
W. R. GREEN,
W. C. HAWLEY,
JNO. N. GARNER,
J. W. COLLIER,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. L. JONES,
KNUTE NELSON,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to consolidate the statistics of the foreign commerce in the Department of Commerce. It was a Senate bill passed in the House with three amendments, made necessary owing to the time that had elapsed since the bill was first introduced. The Senate at first disagreed to the House amendments and asked for a conference. The conference was granted, and the Senate receded from its disagreement, and I present the unanimous report of the conferees on the bill as it left the House.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

I want to congratulate the gentleman from Iowa in his handling of the bill as the head of the conferees and his success in getting the Senate to recede from its disagreement to the amendments.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I believe it is the first time on record that it has been done.

Mr. GARNER. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] have permission to insert in the RECORD resolutions passed by the farm conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. JONES] may extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution of the farm conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a letter from Carl Williams, acting chairman of the National Council of Farmers Cooperative Associations, inclosing copies of the report of "rural credits" committee and also the committee on resolutions at the recent Washington meeting.

In view of the vast importance to the entire Nation of the questions discussed at this meeting I think these reports should be printed in the RECORD, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the communications which I received, together with the resolutions and report.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF FARMERS' COOPERATIVE MARKETING ASSOCIATIONS,
Dallas, Tex., December 19, 1922.

MY DEAR SIR: The National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations held in Washington, December 14, 15, and 16, was attended by delegates representing more than 100,000 farmers, grouped in 80 of the largest associations, doing an active business of more than $1,000,000,000 per year in the marketing of farm crops.

These business organizations are the groups which, above all others, will be specifically affected by any rural credits legislation which Congress may pass at this session, therefore, their interest in the matter is acute.

You will find inclosed herewith the report of the "rural credits" committee, unanimously adopted by the council, and also the report of the committee on "resolutions," which was similarly adopted.

We sincerely hope that the suggestions contained therein may be of some value to you in your deliberations on these various measures.

Sincerely yours,

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF FARMERS' COOPERATIVE MARKETING ASSOCIATIONS, CARL WILLIAMS, Acting Chairman.

To Hon. ROBERT W. BINGHAM,
Chairman Conference National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations:

Your committee on rural credits beg leave to submit the following report:

The committee on rural credits of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations has made a survey of the subject of farmers' credits and the legislation proposed on such rural credits.

Your committee recommends as follows:

1. That this national council announces as a general policy that the primary reliance of the farmer for credits for production or for marketing should be upon the local banker, and that under normal conditions the local banker is likely to meet the greater part of such needs.

2. That the Federal reserve system should be modified so as to meet the special requirements of farm credits and to permit the financing of farmers and farmers' cooperative marketing associations conveniently and efficiently through normal banking channels.

3. That such modification involve primarily the extension of the maturity of agricultural paper to a maximum limit of nine months, with the fixing of cooperative marketing for loans on such agricultural paper to any one cooperative marketing association to be fixed as 50 per cent of the capital and surplus of banks members of the Federal reserve system, subject to the State laws wherever applicable, and that encouragement and inducement be made to have more State banks exercise the privilege of membership in the Federal reserve system.

4. That adequate opportunity be presented for the creation of agricultural credit corporations with sufficient minimum capital to purchase or discount ordinary agricultural paper with a maximum maturity paper of nine months and live-stock paper with a maturity of not more than three years, with rediscount corporations adequately capitalized to purchase such paper from agricultural credit corporations, with the privilege of rediscounting any such paper with its indorsement through Federal reserve system.

That the maximum basis of loans from farm land banks be raised from $10,000 to $25,000.

5. That a farm credits department in the Federal land banks established in each of the land banks with a capital of $5,000,000, making a total of $60,000,000 capitalized, against which credits may be issued to the extent of approximately $600,000,000; and that these farm credits departments of the Federal farm banks be authorized to discount or purchase agricultural paper in a broad sense and to make loans or advance directly to cooperative marketing associations and agricultural cooperative credit organizations.

6. That the right of the Federal land bank to purchase production credits shall be limited to production credits where the note of the individual is indorsed by the cooperative credit association, or is secured by a chattel mortgage on implements or animals, or both, and indorsed by the local banks, or where the note or draft itself is made by a cooperative credit association of producers, and that any Federal land bank may exercise any of the powers herein granted in any section or district of the United States.

And your committee further recommends that the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House and Senate be requested to consider these suggestions and to combine them, if possible, into a rural credits act, to be introduced in such way as the committee may deem advisable.

Your committee recommends that the council announce as its policy that the cooperative marketing associations do not ask anything from the Federal Government except that legislation be enacted to permit farmers and farmers' organizations to have the same access to the Federal credits system, adapted to its needs, that all other industries now possess, and to make provision for unforeseen emergencies by setting up a last reserve in such a manner as is above suggested in the farm credits department of the farm land banks.

Your committee further recommends that this council take action through every individual member representing every cooperative association to make immediate personal contact with the Senators and Congressmen from each State to urge that a rule be secured setting aside consideration of other bills until this legislation is secured, and that all of the farm organizations be asked to unite in support of legislation as generally outlined above.

Respectfully submitted.

JAMES C. STONE, Chairman.

Miller, Pennsylvania Farmers' Cooperative Federation; E. C. Weatherby, Cooperative Orange League Federation Exchange.)

To the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Association:

Your committee on merchandising, after careful consideration of our common problems in the distribution and sale of cooperatively marketed products, begs leave to submit its conclusions with reference to certain difficulties by which we are now jointly confronted.

1. As the primary endeavor of a cooperative organization is to render better service to the producer in the marketing of his produce, and as experience has taught us that we best serve ourselves by serving the consumers who purchase our products, we believe every effort should be made to improve and standardize the quality of our respective outputs.

Since the American public is so largely guided in its buying habits by the confidence and the assurances of dependability vouchsafed by reliable producers through their established brands, we believe every effort should be made to fully and honestly indicate exactly the nature of all products offered for sale and the point of origin of such products.

There are annually imported into this country great quantities of fresh and dried fruits, eggs, tobacco, nuts, beans, butter, cheese, seeds, and many other agricultural products extensively produced in this country. The value of these importations runs into many millions of dollars.

Some of these goods are of excellent quality, but a great percentage of them do not conform to American standards of production and pack. In many instances it is impossible for the consumer to distinguish by mere exterior appearance either the good qualities or the defects of such foreign goods. In a great many cases foreign goods are repacked in this country and offered for sale without mention being made of the foreign origin or exact quality of the products.

Equally in the interest of the producers and consumers of foodstuffs we consider it desirable that there be afforded the protection of a law or laws requiring that all containers of any form for foreign agricultural products imported into this country shall be conspicuously marked in English to indicate definitely the following:

(a) The name and nature of the contents of the package.
(b) The name of the country of origin.
(c) The date of original packing.

Further, that in the event of repacking in this country, where the contents are transferred from the original container, that the new container shall bear the same information as that displayed on the import container.

Therefore, we recommend to the council the initiation of requisite action to provide for the necessary legislation.

2. As it is obvious that the continued and increased success of cooperative marketing must be predicated upon a much more complete understanding of the fundamental purposes thereof by the consuming public and by all factors in the business fabric of the country, it is most important that these interests be educated as to the benefits they will derive from the enlargement of this great economic evolution.

We recommend, therefore, to all cooperatives that in every practicable way they consistently and persistently emphasize the beneficial bearing of their operations upon the commercial, financial, educational, and social structures of our country, in order that the ultimate goal of this movement, which is the cooperation of producer and consumer, may be more quickly attained.

Respectfully submitted. E. M. DE PENCIER, Chairman.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS.

Your committee begs leave to report the following resolutions, with the recommendation that they be adopted by the Farmers National Council of Cooperative Marketing Associations:

1. This conference completely indorses the principles of cooperative marketing as most fully offering the opportunity for self-help by farmers. We further desire to express our appreciation of the most friendly attitude toward the cooperative movement that is now being shown by the President of the United States and the executive and legislative branches of our Government.

2. High freight rates have proven an excessive burden to the producers and consumers of the country, and we urge the Interstate Commerce Commission immediately to hold a hearing for the purpose of opening the whole question of revision of the rate structure now in effect with a view to lessening, if possible, the burdens now borne by shippers of primary commodities. But we suggest to cooperative organizations that the development of orderly marketing by farmers themselves will perhaps be the most serviceable method of adjusting transportation tie-ups and embargoes which generally prevail during the usual dumping seasons.

3. We believe that the cooperative marketing and purchasing organizations which farmers have created and are rapidly multiplying need trained executives and employees. There is also need of a wider knowledge among the members of the principles of cooperation and marketing. We therefore express the earnest hope that all of our agricultural colleges, State universities, and the Federal and State departments of agriculture will create more adequate facilities for research work in and the teaching of cooperative marketing and farm management.

4. We called to the attention of all cooperative organizations the investigational work done and the reports issued by the Joint Congressional Commission of Agricultural Inquiry bearing upon the present disparity of prices as between the commodities that the farmer sells and those which he buys. We believe that a full understanding of the facts as set forth in these reports will be greatly serviceable in helping farmers to help themselves. We request the Congress to continue such investigations.

5. In recent years there has appeared on the market compounds made of skim milk and coconut oil, which look, taste, and smell like genuine evaporated whole milk and can not be readily detected from whole evaporated milk except by a chemical analysis. Some of the world's greatest authorities on nutrition have denounced those compounds as being harmful to children and generally injurious to the public health. We therefore urge the passage in this session of the Congress by the Senate of the House bill H. R. 8086, intended to prohibit the manufacture of such compounds within the possessions of the United States and their movements in interstate and foreign commerce.

6. We favor careful but progressive Federal legislation looking toward the establishment of uniform standards for containers of farm commodities used in interstate and foreign commerce.

7. We believe that this conference has been one of the most helpful meetings of farmers which have been held during our experience. We desire to commend the foresight of those agricultural leaders who so wisely suggested and initiated this meeting and to thank them most heartily for their service to the cause of cooperation and to the cause of civilization. We also desire to render acknowledgment and thanks to the daily press of the United States and the farm and trade papers who have assisted in promoting this conference and carrying the news of its deliberations back to the public on the farm.

Respectfully submitted.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMITTEE ON TEMPORARY AND PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

The committee: John D. Miller (chairman), Herbert Foss, Bush Allen, W. D. Farris, W. L. Walker, Gen. A. H. Woods, E. M. de Foncier, Aaron Sapiro.

At the request of Mr. Sapiro, Mr. John D. Miller acted as chairman of the committee.

The committee unanimously recommended that this National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Associations be made a permanent organization; that the purpose and scope of the organization be to consider and handle the problems that are common to and directly affect cooperative marketing associations (which will not parallel or overlap the activities of any other farm organization), but will act as a mouthpiece for the cooperative marketing associations, and confine all publicity, announcements, and operations to their own particular members; and that will maintain contact with the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce in behalf of such cooperative associations.

The committee further recommended that a committee of 15, the names to be here suggested, be approved and appointed by this convention with authority to prepare and submit a written plan for such a permanent organization of commodity marketing associations for the consideration of each of them, and to mail out such plan and request the said association to pass thereon at the earliest possible date; and to assume that any association which shall not have noted its written approval and adoption thereof by May 1, 1923, is not in accordance therewith, and that thereafter all membership in the National Council of Farmers' Cooperatives shall be by application to the executive committee thereof and approval by such committee; and, further, that this said committee of 15 shall sit until May 1 for this convention and for the purpose of carrying out the instructions thereof, and after May 1, 1923, shall act as the first regular executive committee of the said national council, and that each member of the said executive committee must be a person delegated or named by the member cooperative marketing association, and that any person whose association has not joined by May 1, 1923, shall be deemed to have resigned from the said executive committee.

And, further, that the said permanent organization shall meet the expenditures of the present convention and operations therefor and the expenses of the national council and its operations during the coming year out of a per capita membership fee to be charged against each member association on the basis of the number of persons included in the membership of each said association; and the committee here estimates that the national organization will include in its membership cooperative marketing associations with a minimum estimated membership of 300,000 persons, and therefore suggests and recommends that the per capita membership fee shall be 5 cents per member for each member of each such association, payable on May 1, 1923, or upon joining the organization thereafter, and that the minimum for any one organization shall be $10, and such fee shall be the fee for 1923 and thereafter annually, unless changed by the action of any future general meeting of the national council.

And, further, the committee recommends that the executive committee here named, in its discretion, select and engage a secretary to act as its representative at the headquarters at Washington on such terms as the executive committee may deem proper; and, further, the committee recommends that the executive committee be authorized to take such actions as it may deem advisable in the name of this national council to carry out any of the resolutions and to secure the enactment of any of the legislation here approved or adopted at this session of the National Council of Farmers' Cooperative Marketing Association.

The committee suggests and recommends to the national council as the said executive committee the following:

Robert W. Bingham, Louisville, Ky., chairman; Carl Williams, Oklahoma City, Okla., vice chairman; Milo D. Campbell, Coldwater, Mich., vice chairman; M. G. Coykendall, San Jose, Calif.; J. N. Barber, San Francisco, Calif.; John D. Miller, New York; E. N. de Poncier, Norfolk, Va.; Aaron Sapiro, New York, N. Y.; C. H. Foss, Maine; F. B. Chaney, Arkansas; Dr. B. W. Kilgore, Raleigh, N. C.; George C. Jewitt, Portland, Oreg.; Howard Leonard, Chicago, Ill.; G. A. Norwood, North Carolina; Dan G. Wallace, St. Paul, Minn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Wyoming state the program he has in mind for next week?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that we might conclude the Interior Department appropriation bill and the Post Office appropriation bill by the last of next week. I am not certain that that can be accomplished. We do not have in mind any other legislation, and I have said to the gentleman from Tennessee that we would not take up anything that was in anywise controverted next week, unless there may be something in these two bills that is in controversy. I know of nothing in either bill on which there is any very serious difference of opinion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Do I understand that it is the purpose of the gentleman next week when the House adjourns on Saturday to ask unanimous consent that it adjourn until Tuesday of the following week, January 2?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; to adjourn until Tuesday of the following week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the proceedings under the calendar Wednesday rule on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with the proceedings under calendar Wednesday rule on Wednesday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question before he takes his seat? I was not present at the colloquy between the gentleman and the gentleman from Tennessee. Suppose there should be some sharply controverted matter arising during the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I trust that there will not be any such question. If there was anything that involved a question that was in anywise partisan I should ask to have the matter go over, or if there was anything in regard to which there was a very sharp difference of opinion.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I only asked the question because I understand there will be a matter that is in the field of contest, and perhaps the contest will be very sharp. I do not mean that it is in anywise partisan.

Mr. MONDELL. What is the matter that the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. With reference to the Geological Survey.

Mr. MONDELL. As to the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; as to the amount of the appropriation to enable work to be done that is considered by some Members as very important.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not imagine that we will have such a difference of opinion on that item that it will necessitate putting it over. It is a question whether appropriations should be increased somewhat, and I think we can come to an understanding about that.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13481, the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday there was an amendment pending, and without objection the Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 24, strike out the figures "$2,877,600," and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000,000."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan increases the amount stated in line 24 on page 18 from $2,877,600 to $4,000,000. Immediately following that is the provision for the distribution of that fund, the statement of the bill being—of which $850,000 shall be set aside for administration and operating expenses, and $2,027,600 for the payment of indemnities.

According to the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN], it is not intended that the amount to be used for administrative purposes shall be increased. It will be necessary that this distribution, as at present stated in the bill, shall be changed in order that it may be thoroughly understood how the money is to be applied if the increase proposed carries.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It was my intention to include in my amendment an addition of $1,122,400, on line 1, page 19, and it seems to me that if the amendment that I did offer inadvertently leaving out the matter on line 1, page 19, should be agreed to, that as a matter of course the amount on page 19, line 1, would be increased.

Mr. TOWNER. That will be true, and that can be taken care of by a subsequent amendment. I was going to suggest that the gentleman should offer a subsequent amendment, if this were adopted, to change the amount.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be modified by adding an amendment, on page 19, line 1, to strike out "$2,027,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,150,000."

Mr. ANDERSON. That would make the total amount of the increase the gentleman proposes applicable to indemnities?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. To indemnities only.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 24, strike out "$2,877,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000,000," and in line 1, on page 19, strike out "$2,027,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,150,000."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, that makes the amendment complete, so that it can be thoroughly understood that this money, in addition to the amount contained in the bill, shall be purely for the purpose of indemnities, and that no additional cost will be incurred for administrative purposes.

I think we will all agree that we should hesitate before increasing these amounts that have been approved by the Budget Committee, and especially that have been subsequently approved by the subcommittee on agriculture of the Committee on Appropriations. It is not for the purpose of making a demonstration or a show of loyalty or a bid for the farmers' support that this amendment is asked. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the increase suggested is a very moderate amount considering the tremendous interests involved and considering the consequences that will follow unless we fully appreciate the situation that confronts us. Tuberculosis is the most dreadful of all human diseases, dreadful not only to the animals which are affected by this provision in the bill but dreadful also to humankind. More human beings die every year from this awful disease than from any other known to the human family. That is not the only thing that makes it important that we should act now in this regard.

Disease is a thing which sometimes can be prevented, sometimes can be stamped out, and at other times can not be, but there is certain demonstration of the fact that tuberculosis can be stamped out. It is absolutely known that by the preventive measures that may be taken tuberculosis and its increase can be prevented as well in animals as in human beings, and when stamped out and prevented in its spread through animals that will be one measure which will lead to its eradication as a death-dealing disease to human beings.

There is only one method of prevention of tuberculosis among animals; one method that is practical, that is efficacious, one method that always under trial brings certain results; and that, of course, is a drastic measure. It is a measure that costs money. It is the destruction of the animals that are contaminated. That is the most efficacious; and is, in fact, a certain and is probably the only preventative of the spread of the disease. If we want to make it efficacious, it is not sufficient to stamp it out in one locality, in one county, in one section of the State, in one State; it must be stamped out generally. There must be a great increase of these efforts made by the persons who are interested in this work to stamp out the disease in the United States among the animals of the United States. This amount is inconsiderable, considering the tremendous character of the undertaking, but, of course, in and to the extent that it is applied it will have its effect. It would be a blessing, it would be an act of economy, if we should amend this bill and make it $10,000,000 instead of $4,000,000. It would be something that would benefit not only the human family, because of the prevention of the spread of disease through animals and mankind, but because economically it would immensely increase the production of foodstuffs in the United States. From every possible standpoint of health, of human life, of economy, we should remember the tremendous nature of this undertaking and the absolute certainty of the benefit and the efficacy of the proposal just made for its eradication when we come to consider the question of the adoption of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. Is there any evidence that the department has been handicapped during the last year in its work along this line? I understand the amount which the bill carries is the same given last year.

Mr. TOWNER. This method, of course, depends upon the application, either by the authorities in a locality or the State, or by individuals, and there are thousands more applications now than there were before. This is beneficial because it enables the remedy to be applied and made efficient.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Is it not true that this appropriation has to be met by an appropriation from the various States?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. And is it not also true that in the State of Illinois the State had funds but the Federal Government did not have funds with which to meet them?

Mr. TOWNER. I understand that is true. I understand the State of New York has appropriated $1,500,000 for this purpose.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. And I think the State of Iowa this year will appropriate a million dollars. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Has anybody ever complained about the Government of the United States not supplying enough funds when they were wanted?

Mr. TOWNER. I think——

Mr. CLARKE of New York. If the gentleman will permit I will answer that.

Mr. TOWNER. It is absolutely certain that this appropriation, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, can not supply the demands that will be made next year.

Mr. MADDEN. This is all the Government is asking for in the administration of this work.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I will answer the gentleman if he wishes an answer.

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield the floor.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. As far as the State of New York is concerned, it waited not alone one year but in some particular instances, in several of the different counties in our State, waited two years for the Government to meet the appropriations of the State of New York for carrying on the eradication of tuberculosis in our dairy herds. What we want at this time is an appropriation large enough to meet the essential needs and assure continuity in this work and not do it by spasmodic piecemeal.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wonder if we can arrive at some agreement in regard to time on this item?

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to have a few minutes. I am perfectly willing the opposition have all the time it desires.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes, one-half the debate to be in favor of the amendment and one-half in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close at the end of 20 minutes, the time to be controlled one-half by those in favor and one-half by those opposed to the amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the fact that this amendment seeks to increase the appropriation from $2,877,600 to $4,000,000, which is an increase of $1,122,400, which amendment was argued extensively yesterday evening, without any argument against it, and all that has been said about it this morning was in favor of it, and if the gentleman in charge of the bill expects to keep out any part of this extra appropriation he is placing himself at a disadvantage by this request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan, if he cares to be recognized in favor of the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, it would seem now that a well-defined policy has been determined by Congress in investigating the eradication of this dread disease of tuberculosis in animals, Congress should not hesitate to make appropriations adequate to meet the demand and bring about the results desired. I believe its importance commercially is recognized by all; besides it affects the public in general. Now, the situation is this: Unless additional appropriations are made the work can not be continued as it should be continued. If we are to eradicate tuberculosis in animals, let us go at it in a systematic and businesslike way.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I understood that the department was not asking for more money.

Mr. HAUGEN. If the gentleman will read the testimony of those in charge of the work, he will find that the work will most likely have to stop before the 1st of May if further sums are not appropriated. As pointed out by Doctor Mohler, there are 40 State legislatures soon to convene in session, and additional appropriations will be provided for by the States. The State of New York, as has been said, made an appropriation of a million and a half; and, as Doctor Mohler states, we are trying to match these State appropriations that are going to be made with our $2,000,000. The appropriations of the States will probably amount to six or eight million dollars. I take it my State will appropriate at least a million dollars this coming session of the legislature, and that six or eight million dollars will be appropriated by the States. It goes without saying that you can not match $8,000,000 with $2,000,000. Evidently the amount suggested will not be adequate to meet the State appropriations, but it will at least give assurance and evidence that Congress desires to carry out the policy it has adopted.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAUGEN. In one moment. The policy of the department, first, was to ask small appropriations of $50,000 or $100,000. Some of us of the Committee on Agriculture did not approve of the piecemeal way of handling it and suggested the policy of paying indemnities. The department has adopted this policy, which is definite and undoubtedly effective if adequate funds are provided. Congress, having approved the policy, should now act in good faith by providing adequate appropriations to carry it into effect and thus assure the country that that policy will be carried out. The $4,000,000 undoubtedly will not be adequate, but it will be a step in the right direction.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I think the gentleman's explanation is entirely satisfactory and upon his reply I shall support his amendment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I shall vote for the gentleman's amendment, but can the gentleman state what the deficiency has been in the past in this appropriation? I know in my State there is a deficiency where certain animals were destroyed.

Mr. HAUGEN. We appropriated for a deficiency last year—my recollection is that it was $300,000. We now propose to show the sincerity of Congress by increasing the proposed appropriation to carry out the policy approved by Congress. I feel certain that more will be required, but we will at least make a showing with this increase.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed four minutes. The Chair will recognize the opposition if the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] desires to be heard now.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would like to close the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for three minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, of course, we are all interested in the prevention of disease. Everybody is interested in that. But this bill carries every dollar requested by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Now, who knows more than he does about what we ought to do in connection with this matter? He is presumed, more nearly than any other one man in the Government, to speak for the farmers of the Nation.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not time to answer questions in three minutes.

Now, if the Secretary of Agriculture does not speak for the farmers, who does? And if the Committee on Appropriations complies with his request on this matter and other important agricultural problems, why should that request be changed without any consideration whatever? That seems to be fair. No study has been given to the problem except by the Secretary of Agriculture and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], who has had charge of this appropriation. We have never yet refused to grant an appropriation for this class of work. Every time they have run out of funds they have been given a deficiency appropriation. There has been no denial of assistance where that assistance meant dollars recommended to be granted by this committee.

Now, I plead with you gentlemen here not to overload the appropriation bills. You are not accomplishing any good purpose by adding without limit to the appropriation bill, no matter how meritorious the purpose may be. I do not deny the merits of the purpose for which the money is to be expended, and I am in hearty accord with every movement that will aid in the eradication of this disease among the cattle of the country. We want to cooperate along intelligent lines with the Secretary of Agriculture. He, through his scientific men, knows more about this question than all of us put together. If we denied the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, there might be good grounds for the amendment which has been proposed, but we have not done that. We not only have not done it but we have given him every assistance we can, not only in this bill but in other bills. Whenever he has come for a deficiency appropriation for this work we have been enthusiastic in our support of his request. Now, do not embarrass the Department of Agriculture by imposing on the department funds which it does not need. When I say it does not need them I assume that if it did need the funds it would ask for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] for six minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how much the Secretary of Agriculture asked, hence am not able to say whether or not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is right. But I do know that Doctor Mohler, the chief of the bureau, says—as appears in the hearings—there is a probability of having to close the work by the 1st of next May unless more money is provided. He says he will try to spread it over the entire year, but it is evident that he has no hope of being able to do that.

Now, whether the Secretary of Agriculture has asked for more money or not, the country is asking for it. Almost every State in the Union is complaining that the Government of the United States is not appropriating money enough to enable either the Government or the States to carry on the work or comply with the law in the matter of paying indemnities. The States are anxious to do their part and are urging appropriation enough to enable the Government to do its part, as by the law it has promised. So others have spoken and are entitled to be heard, besides the Secretary of Agriculture. I doubt very much if the Secretary has requested simply the small amount carried by this bill.

There was not money enough last year. As the chairman of the committee says, there was a deficiency of $600,000 asked for and allowed. My understanding is the amount of the deficiency was only $300,000. But the amount, whatever it was, was not enough. There is evidence that the cases are rapidly and steadily increasing in number, practically doubling each year, and it appears also that there were and still are unpaid claims against the Government for indemnity running into the thousands, where inspections had been made and private property destroyed. The Government of the United States had obligated itself to pay these indemnities, but sufficient appropriations were not made to meet them. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] says—I can not find it in the RECORD, but I am sure his statement is reliable—there are thousands of cases, many of them in the State of New York, where the owners of the property destroyed had to wait not one year, but two years, to have their claims paid, or the portion that the Government of the United States ought to pay on them. They had to wait until the Government was ready and able to pay.

It is urged, Mr. Chairman, that if the amount available for indemnity is increased, the amount available for administration should also be increased. My answer to that is that with the amount of money the bill provides for inspection the agents of the Federal Government are doing, and will be able to do, fully as much as they ought to do, and that the remainder of the work ought fairly to be done, and will be done, by the States. It never was urged to the Committee on Agriculture when this work was first provided for, and I have not heard it reasonably urged since, that agents of the Government should themselves do all the actual physical work of making the inspection and themselves lay the foundation for the issuing of certificates, the destruction of the animals, and payment of indemnities.

There never was an idea in the mind of anyone who took part in the starting of this work but that the Federal Government would make tests and inspections only as far as they could reasonably be expected to do this kind of work; would give instructions, make demonstrations, and advise and assist to the proper extent, but in a limited way, after all, because the entire country can not be covered by Federal agents going out and doing all the actual physical work.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it a fact—I think it is an important fact, bearing on this question, if it be a fact—that tuberculosis is on the increase among the dairy herds?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I may not quite understand the evidence that has been offered and the data and statistics that I have seen, but my impression is that tuberculosis in dairy cattle is decreasing, but it is increasing in swine and in poultry.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The evidence before the committee was that tuberculosis is increasing in dairy herds. My colleague from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] asked in regard to that, and the statement was that nearly every dairy herd in Texas was reported with tuberculosis.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Just a word more on the line of the States doing a reasonable amount of this work in cooperation by and with the assistance and advice of the Federal agents. There was a time when the inspection and testing for tuberculosis was neither skillfully nor honestly done by the States. Therefore, it was necessary for the Federal Government to send its agents out in order that proper and honest work might be done. If we had continued on the old line—that is, providing money enough to enable Federal inspectors to go out and do or take part in all the inspecting—the States would have continued in their careless method of doing business, to use no harsher term; but now the States realize that they must come to the front and do this work and do it right, and evidence of their desire to do that is seen in the immense appropriations the States are now making. The States should properly do their part of this work, and the money here provided for administration is enough to enable Federal agents to do all they ought to be asked to do. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] for two minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we are all in sympathy with this class of work, but we must all realize that the appropriations for this or any other useful and helpful work must be kept within some reasonable bounds. The Federal appropriations should not be increased tremendously at any given time because in some States there may have been an awakening of interest in the matter. I am wondering what has become of all the resolutions from the farmers' organizations protesting against the matching of the Federal dollar as applied to a thing of this kind. Does that class of resolution, of late so general, apply to this sort of expenditure?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I have only two minutes. Does that kind of resolution apply only to classes of appropriations that those resolving do not approve of and not apply to appropriations that the resolutor does approve of? Let us be consistent about the matter. Let me suggest to the gentlemen most interested that we make the best progress in the long run in matters of this kind if we proceed along lines of reasonable and logical expenditure, and that the most certain way to bring a reaction against just such appropriations as this is to expand them beyond reason and beyond the recommendations of those who have studied the matter and who are in a position to know how much is needed and how much may be reasonably expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] for five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt whatever that this motion has been offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], and that it has been supported by the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of it in good faith. They have no greater interest in this work than I have. I have supported it from its inception, and I am anxious that it should go forward as rapidly as the condition of the Treasury will permit. After all, the question for us to decide is not how much we ought to appropriate in order to bring this appropriation into some relation with what the States are supposedly going to appropriate, but how much ought we to appropriate for this activity in its relation to what we are appropriating for other activities of the Government and in its relation to the requirements of the Treasury for all purposes. I do not think the gentlemen who are supporting this amendment quite understand the situation. As this appropriation now stands, it is the largest single item in this bill. I think the Federal Government has done pretty well on this item. It started with an appropriation of $500,000 in 1919. It was increased to $1,500,000 in 1920, annd now it stands at $2,877,000. In four years it has increased by about 400 per cent. It seems to me we have done pretty well.

Now, what is the actual condition, so far as this appropriation for the current year is concerned? There has been some discussion here of a deficit in the appropriation which would result in the inability of the department to take care of the demands under this work. Now, the demands of the States are not merely for indemnities. They want the Federal Government to put up its proportion for inspectors to do this work, and on the basis of expenditures so far this year there is a possibility that there will be a small deficiency in the fund for administration; but do these gentlemen propose to supplement that fund? Not at all. Now, on the indemnity side we have spent this year, up to December 1, $851,000 for indemnities. That is at the rate of approximately $170,000 a month, and if the expenditures for the rest of the year are approximately on the same basis as for the first five months of the year the appropriations for indemnities in this bill will just about cover indemnity expenditures incurred at the present rate of administration.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. In just a moment. I want to finish this statement first. The bill for the current year is $150,000 less than it will be for next year, because the item for this year made $300,000 immediately available, and $150,000 of that was spent last year instead of in the current year. So that as it now stands this appropriation is $150,000 more than it was last year. There has been no word said by anybody who has spoken upon this increase which has shown one single reason for increasing the indemnity fund. There has not been any testimony here that there is a deficiency in the fund for indemnities now. No gentleman here has suggested any reason for increasing the indemnity fund. I could see some reason for it if it were proposed at the same time to increase the fund for administration, but no such suggestion has been made.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. It is true, however, that this money is allotted by the Secretary and that the amount not used by any one State still remains unused, and some other State that is in need of the money will not be able to get the amount that it requires. Is not that true?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the gentleman is mistaken there. Of course, there is an attempt at the beginning of the year to allot the money to the different States on a definite basis of expenditures.

Mr. DOWELL. Does it not go further than an attempt? Has it not been already done?

Mr. ANDERSON. But it does not follow, because one State does not use its proportion of the fund, that the money is not available for expenditure in other States, as is the case with the fund for road construction.

Mr. DOWELL. I think the gentleman knows that there is more than an attempt to allot, and that the actual allotment is made, and that no money can be used by a State except its allotted amount.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, they attempt to allot at the beginning of the year, but the States get no vested right under that allotment. It is to be used wherever it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were 32 ayes and 47 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representative was requested:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 30.

Whereas Joseph Battell, late of Middlebury, county of Addison, State of Vermont, deceased, in and by his last will and testament devised to the Government of the United States of America about 3,900 acres of land situated in the towns of Lincoln and Warren, in the State of Vermont, for a national park; and

Whereas said lands were devised to the United States of America upon certain conditions, among which were the following: That the Government should construct and maintain suitable roads and buildings upon the land constituting such national park for the use and accommodation of visitors to such park, and should employ suitable caretakers to the end and purpose that the woodland should be properly cared for and preserved so far as possible in its primitive beauty; and

Whereas it is deemed inexpedient to accept said devise and to establish a national park in accordance with the terms thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the acceptance of said devise so made by Joseph Battell in his last will and testament be declined by the Government of the United States, and that the estate of the said Joseph Battell be forever discharged from any obligation to the United States growing out of the devise before mentioned.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all necessary expenses for the eradication of southern cattle ticks, $660,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of animals or in the purchase of materials for or in the construction of dipping vats upon land not owned solely by the United States, except at fairs or expositions where the Department of Agriculture makes exhibits or demonstrations; nor shall any part of this appropriation be used in the purchase of materials or mixtures for use in dipping vats except in experimental or demonstration work carried on by the officials or agents of the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When we reach page 54, line 20, I shall offer the following amendment:

Page 54, line 20, strike out the sum of $502,240 in line 20, on page 54, and insert "$652,240: Provided, That of the sum thus appropriated $150,000 may be used in California."

Mr. Chairman, so that there will be no delay, I ask that I may insert in the RECORD a letter received from W. P. King, secretary of the California Wool Growers' Association, together with a copy of the resolution passed by the California Wool Growers' Association November 17, 1922, relating to predatory animals. I would like to have them in the RECORD when the matter comes up to-morrow for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to include certain documents he has mentioned in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter and resolutions follow:

CALIFORNIA WOOL GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,
San Francisco, Calif., December 11, 1922.

Congressman JOHN E. RAKER,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN RAKER: We have recently sent you copies of resolutions concerning the depredations of predatory animals which were adopted by the California Wool Growers' Association in convention assembled at Stockton, Calif., November 17, 1922. This convention was truly representative of the sheep industry of California. We are again sending you copies of these resolutions and would appreciate it if you can give the matter your earnest consideration.

Predatory animals have cost the live-stock interests of California the loss of millions of dollars annually. Predatory animals, and particularly the coyote, have put many sheepmen out of business on account of the great losses due to these animals. Cattle, hog, chicken, and turkey raisers have also suffered losses year after year due to the constant depredations of the coyote.

During the past few years the Biological Survey Division of the United States Department of Agriculture has been able to effectively control the depredations of the coyote in sections where their men have been working. In some Western States the United States Biological Survey has secured appropriations for those districts from the Federal Government so that they can actively go on with their campaign, and, as a result, they have materially decreased and in some sections exterminated the coyote. California has not secured sufficient appropriations from either the Federal or State Governments, up to the present time, to actively go on with this work. The old bounty law, which has been in operation for 50 years, is still used. As one woolgrower said at a meeting held to discuss this situation at Corning, December 9: "Forty years ago I could run my sheep in the mountains, and the herder could go fishing or spend a night or two away from the sheep, and when he came back they would be all right. We had the bounty law then. It has been in operation for 50 years. We have it now. To-day if I leave my sheep for half an hour without a herder I would suffer losses due to the coyote. I have never seen the situation so bad as it has been this last year, and we have had the old bounty system for 50 years."

In another section of the State, and this is a section where sheep are practically the only live stock that can be raised economically, the number of sheep have dwindled in 20 years over 75 per cent.

One grower in Mendocino County stated that 20 years ago there were over 400,000 sheep in the county. To-day there are only 66,000. Coyotes are responsible for the decrease. Well-informed men from Mendocino and Humboldt Counties say that the county is only adapted for sheep, but that they can not raise sheep as long as the coyote is king and are, as a result, in the cattle business to a limited extent, and are losing money every year.

It may interest you to know that in this coast section from Sonoma to Humboldt County the best wool of California is produced. It always commands the highest price. It would be a shame and a disgrace to California if this section had to go out of the sheep business, which it will do unless the coyote is controlled and exterminated within the next few years.

The same situation exists in many other sections of California. In Tehama County the growers have had four meetings within the last two months to discuss this situation.

Our resolutions ask that the Federal Government appropriate $150,000 for this predatory animal control work in California. It is only by systematic control that we can eventually exterminate the predatory animals. The Government system has proved effective and the growers are anxious that this system shall be adopted.

Besides asking the cooperation of the Federal Government, the association has secured the cooperation of the State of California and also of the counties where coyotes are causing damage.

We are only asking the Federal Government to do its share. The county will do its share and the State will do its share.

California, at the present time, has more sheep than any other State in the United States with the exception of Texas. There is no reason why California could not produce a million more sheep if predatory animals were controlled.

If we can count on you to back us up in this matter and to help us secure this appropriation, it will certainly be appreciated and you will be doing a real service for the live-stock interests of California.

It may interest you to know that the live-stock industry in California represents an investment of over $400,000,000.

May we have the benefit of your suggestions in regard to the matter?

Very sincerely,

W. P. WING, Secretary.

Whereas the depredations by coyotes and other predatory animals upon sheep in California cause losses to the woolgrowers of this State amounting to millions of dollars annually; and

Whereas the steps toward the systematic control and suppression of these predatory animals by the State Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the United States Bureau of Biological Survey have been extremely valuable and effective, in so far as available funds would permit; and

Whereas it is recognized that the systematic and concerted measures employed are superior to a system of bounty payment to accomplish the necessary protection: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the California Woolgrowers' Association in convention assembled at Stockton this 17th day of November, 1922, That the State department of agriculture be requested to continue this work undiminished, and if possible greatly augmented, in order to safeguard the sheep industry of the State of California.

Submitted for approval to the resolutions committee for final transmission to the convention.

COMMITTEE ON COYOTE CONTROL.

Unanimously passed by convention, Stockton, Calif., November 17, 1922.

W. P. WING,
Secretary California Woolgrowers' Association.

Whereas the menace to the sheep industry of the State of California by the depredations of predatory animals, particularly coyotes, is of serious consequence and has amounted to losses approaching millions of dollars; and

Whereas the United States Government through its Bureau of Biological Survey, in cooperation with the State of California, has been doing effective work, as is being done in other States, but wholly inadequate to meet even the partial needs to protect this sheep industry; and

Whereas every possible agency, including local associations, county and State governments, are exerting every effort to cope with this serious menace: Therefore be it

Resolved by the woolgrowers of the State of California in convention assembled, To ask assistance from the Federal Government through Congress for an appropriation, not less than $150,000 in amount, for the work in California, thus to make available for predatory-animal control a sum necessary for a much-needed protection.

Submitted for approval to the resolutions committee for final transmittal to the convention.

COMMITTEE ON COYOTE CONTROL.

Passed unanimously by convention assembled November 17, 1922, Stockton, Calif.

W. P. WING,
Secretary California Woolgrowers' Association.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has withdrawn his point of order and the pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the disease of hog cholera, and for its control or eradication by such means as may be necessary, including demonstrations, the formation of organizations, and other methods, either independently or in cooperation with farmers' associations, State or county authorities, $406,020: Provided, That of said sum $195,000 shall be available for expenditure in carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1913, regulating the preparation, sale, barter, exchange, or shipment of any virus, serum, toxin, or analogous product manufactured in the United States and the importation of such products intended for use in the treatment of domestic animals: Provided further, That of said sum $29,520 shall be available for researches concerning the cause, modes of spread, and methods of treatment and prevention of this disease.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to line 13, page 22, to strike out the figures "$406,020" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KETCHAM: Page 22, line 13, strike out the sum of $406,020 and insert in lieu thereof $500,000.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, this would increase the appropriation carried for this important work by the sum of $103,980, and would make the appropriation exactly as it was carried in the bill of last year. I have gone carefully over the hearings before the committee, and I find that those in charge of this very important work are reluctant to have a reduction made. I believe the seriousness of this disease and the peculiar conditions that surround its control and eradication will certainly warrant this very moderate increase. I have taken the pains to find out what the situation is in my own State, and present for the consideration of the committee the following facts: That for the year ending July 1, 1921, there were reported to the United States Department of Agriculture 116 outbreaks of hog cholera.

That does not mean that this represents anywhere near the total number, but it represents the number reported. The following year, ending July 1 last, the total number of outbreaks reported was 326, and for the first five months of the present fiscal year—and all of these years are fiscal years—the number of outbreaks reported was 221, which would indicate that so far as the reports are concerned—and I believe they fairly represent the real condition, so far as the disease is concerned—it is on the increase. I note also, and that is what brings me to offer this amendment, that the men in charge of this work here in the Department of Agriculture propose to limit the expenditure that shall be made in my own State. They refer to it as one of the "outlying" States. Naturally, I am a bit resentful that a State which is so varied and wonderful in its agricultural products should be so designated. When I learn that, notwithstanding the fact that they have had but three men in this work, the proposition is to reduce that number so that we will have still less, I believe the matter is worthy of a word of protest, and I do protest against this reduction and ask that the amount carried in the bill of the previous year be restored. I do not need to enlarge upon the ravages of this disease, what it does, and how necessary it is that the very best efforts shall be used to control it and eradicate it. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think probably no appropriation in the Agricultural appropriation bill has had more ups and downs than the appropriation for hog cholera. Some years ago we entered upon a program of attempting a complete local eradication of the disease. That program went on for two or three years and was finally abandoned. Then the proposition was reduced to an attempt to take care of local outbreaks as they occurred, and that is the basis upon which the work has been going forward up to this time. This is a job in which the methods are thoroughly known. There has been developed, as I suppose every Member of this House knows, a method of absolute prevention of the disease. The methods of sanitation are thoroughly understood. A Federal man can not do the work of immunizing hogs or the work of sanitation any better than a State man can do it, and the whole question is how much of the burden of doing this work of suppressing local outbreaks of hog cholera shall be done by the Federal Government. We feel, and I think the Bureau of the Budget felt, that this is a job in which a larger proportion of the work of controlling the local outbreaks of hog cholera could be put upon the States. The matter is far beyond the investigational stage. The methods are known. A State man can do it just as well as a Federal man. In many instances the farmer himself is capable of applying the serum and immunizing the hog, and in view of that fact we felt it was perfectly justifiable to reduce the appropriation by the amount we propose to reduce it in the present bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word to add to what my colleague on the committee has said. Hog cholera has been investigated by the Federal Government for a long time. The Government has finally developed an absolute cure for hog cholera, which cure is well known throughout the Union and is easily obtained and can be applied by a State man just as well as by a Federal man; can be applied by amateurs, with a little instruction or a little reading. The time has come for the Federal Congress to reduce this appropriation, not only to the amount that it is reduced here, but to cut it in half, and then to cut it in half again and finally to turn the administration of the method of injecting this serum into hogs over to State authorities and the owners of the hogs. We have accomplished our purpose, and I not only indorse this reduction, but would vote for a much greater reduction, notwithstanding the fact that we have a good many hogs in Texas and that there are a good many in my own district.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

For the investigation of diseases of orchard and other fruits, including the diseases of the pecan, $113,935.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The State of Texas produces now about 90 per cent of all of the commercial pecans raised in the United States. The department, out of an appropriation similar to the one just read, established, about four years ago, what is known as a pecan laboratory in the State of Texas. Just a few months ago, notwithstanding the fact, as I say, that about 90 per cent of the commercial pecans are raised in that State, some one connected with this bureau ordered that laboratory boxed and shipped to some other State. It was boxed up and ready for shipment before anyone knew anything about the proposed change. The pecan growers all over the State of Texas met and had a hearing and showed that in pursuance of the work of this laboratory many farmers and stockmen had planted pecan orchards. They had paid as high as $2 a plant in setting them out, and many of them a dollar and a dollar and a half a plant. In addition to that they have gone to quite a little bit of expense in grafting and budding native trees along the various streams where pecan timber is found in Texas. To ruthlessly take that laboratory away without any reason for it shows to me that poor judgment is not infrequently used in these various bureaus even in the Agricultural Department, and that something else sometimes enters into decisions rendered besides the welfare of the particular product for which we appropriate money.

I call attention to this because it may happen in respect to other items for which we appropriate money, for the benefit of different crops. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether the Bureau of Agriculture has asked for any additional money to establish additional pecan laboratories anywhere else?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know that they have asked for any money to establish an additional pecan laboratory, but there are increases in all three of the items relating to the pecan industry. There are three items, one of them relating to insects, one to the diseases of the pecan, and one to cultural methods. My recollection is that in all three of them we have carried a small increase.

Mr. BLANTON. I am very glad to hear that, because this is one of the most popular nuts raised in the United States. It is one of the most delicious nuts, and it is growing in popularity all of the time. It would be ruinous to the enterprise to have that pecan laboratory moved, and under no circumstances ought it to be moved. If it is needed somewhere in another State, we ought to grant an additional laboratory for the other State. I hope the department will cease to agitate the question of moving that laboratory.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the investigation, improvement, encouragement, and determination of the adaptability to different soils and climatic conditions of pecans, almonds, Persian walnuts, black walnuts, hickory nuts, butternuts, chestnuts, filberts, and other nuts, and for methods of growing, harvesting, packing, shipping, storing, and utilizing the same, $28,000.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Some time ago an appropriation was made for studying and combating the diseases of pecans and other nuts. When was this appropriation started for investigation of the adaptability of soil, and so forth, as carried in this item on page 30, beginning with line 15?

Mr. ANDERSON. What is the item to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Page 30, beginning line 15.

Mr. ANDERSON. That has been in the bill for some time, I think.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. How long? I do not remember it. It may be my fault.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will answer the gentleman's question in just a minute. It has been in since 1920, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It strikes me that diseases of some of these nuts have been so prevalent the growers and the bureau, too, found it very hard to combat them. The department had difficulty in getting money enough for that particular work. I should think it would hardly be advisable to go on and make an extensive search for soils and localities for the growth of these products when those that are already grown can not properly be taken care of.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the gentleman is making some assumptions which are not entirely justified. There are some diseases and some insect pests which are increasing the difficulties of the pecan grower, but there are also questions of soil adaptability and cultural methods.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is the gentleman entirely right about that? Has it not been found that these diseases affect all or most of these nuts wherever they are grown?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is not altogether true; no.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. That is my understanding.

Mr. ANDERSON. They are far more difficult to control in newly planted orchards carried on on a commercial scale than they are, for example, in the native——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Was that due to soil conditions or to localities?

Mr. ANDERSON. I would not say it was due to soil conditions.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Done on a larger scale than before?

Mr. ANDERSON. There are problems relating to the adaptation of varieties of pecans to different soils, the question of breeding, grafting, and all sorts of questions with reference to carrying on the industry on a commercial basis.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am inclined to think that we ought to adopt this proviso, particularly because of the importance of the nut industry in Texas.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What proviso?

Mr. LANGLEY. I am talking about the same one the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I was not talking about any proviso.

Mr. LANGLEY. I mean paragraph. I happen to know personally, as the gentleman from Texas has said, that the nut industry of Texas is of very vital importance and value, and if there is any trouble down there we ought to help the gentleman from Texas out.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman recognizes there is enough trouble with well-known diseases without going out to look for trouble, as this item provides. The bureau has been unable to find cures and preventives of diseases of nuts where they are grown and grown successfully and always have been grown.

Mr. LANGLEY. If a disease is not a trouble, the gentleman from Kentucky has been misinformed as to the meaning of the word.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not mean that, but this does not treat diseases or trouble. This is looking for trouble, and this is going to find it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROACH. I do not believe this paragraph deals with the treatment of diseases at all?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; it does not. There was trouble in getting an appropriation to deal with diseases. Since the appropriation was granted the department found difficulty in combating the diseases and overcoming them. Now they are going to find areas where they can grow more and more and more and increase and multiply their trouble, a trouble that they have made no progress in correcting.

Mr. ROACH. May I ask the gentleman if the item was first carried for the sole purpose of treating diseases, or for the purpose for which it is now carried?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. For the purpose of treating diseases, quite an old item; this is a new one.

Mr. ROACH. The purposes have been entirely changed?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No; there is another item for the diseases of nuts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. ROACH. This is a new item.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. A new item.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to strike out the last word. It is quite true that the most pressing problems of the pecan grower are problems of controlling insect pests and diseases. Recognizing that fact, the committee took $2,000 of the estimated amount of this appropriation and put it over into the disease item so as to provide some additional funds for taking care of disease work. However, the pecan industry, commercially exploited in commercial orchards, is a very new industry, and, as in any new industry, cultural problems arise. The question arises, What varieties of nuts are the best adapted to certain soil? There are questions involved in the best methods of grafting trees. There are questions arising in reference to adaptability of soils to one variety or another. The appropriation that is carried in this item is intended to cover the cultural problems arising in connection with nut production. There are two other items, one of which covers the diseases of the orchard nut plants and trees, and the other covers the insects affecting them. This covers only the cultural studies.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. On that point one of the most desirable things that has been sought to be ascertained by the pecan growers is why it is that they have lost from one to three crops by permitting their trees to be threshed. The pecan growers have learned that when they permit their trees to be threshed they will not grow pecans from one to three years thereafter in many instances. That is a very valuable thing they have learned.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is quite right. Another problem is this: These trees will produce a good crop one year, and may not produce a crop in the next year. Nobody knows just why that is so. That question is being studied in order to get a normal crop year by year, or at least to get a less fluctuation or a much more normal fluctuation in the crop from year to year.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the necessary improvements to establish and maintain a general experiment farm and agricultural station on the Arlington estate, in the State of Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 18, 1900, $20,500: Provided, That the limitations in this act to the cost of farm buildings shall not apply to this paragraph.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kentucky rise? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. I beg to say to the Chair that while he, kindly and as a friend, makes a facetious inquiry of me, I rise for a rather serious and important purpose, and that purpose is to offer an amendment to this bill which is very important to the people of this country. I desire to offer it as a new paragraph at the place indicated in the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk..

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LANGLEY. I propose to insert it as a new paragraph, as indicated at the top of the proposed amendment, which I now send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman proposes to insert it after line 16. We have not reached that part of the bill yet.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask the Chair's pardon. I thought we had reached line 16.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations in foreign seed and plant introduction, including the study, collection, purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of rare and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants from foreign countries and from our possessions, and for experiments with reference to their introduction and cultivation in this country, $125,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make a point of order. The Chair announced a moment ago that we had not reached the stage where a point of order was in order. I was going to try to ascertain whether a quorum of the committee is present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that point of order?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I was going to ask if the Chair could count people standing in the doorways. But I see there are enough.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, propagation, testing, and distribution of new and rare seeds; for the investigation and improvement of grasses, alfalfa, clover, and other forage crops, including the investigation of the utilization of cacti and other dry-land plants, $115,000: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $36,600 may be used for the purchase and distribution of such new and rare seeds.

Mr. LANGLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to apologize to the Chair and to the committee for mistaking the line, because some one called out to me at that time that it was line 16 that we had then reached. I desire now to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

The amendment offered by Mr. LANGLEY: Page 2, after line 16, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds: For purchase, propagation, testing, and congressional distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants; all necessary office fixtures and supplies, fuel, transportation, paper, twine, gum, postal cards, gas, electric current, rent outside of the District of Columbia, official traveling expenses, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same; for repairs and the employment of local and special agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required, in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $360,000. And the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to expend the said sum, as nearly as practicable, in the purchase, testing, and distribution of such valuable seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, the best he can obtain at public or private sale, and such as shall be suitable for the respective localities to which the same are to be apportioned, and in which same are to be distributed as hereinafter stated; and such seeds so purchased shall include a variety of vegetable and flower seeds suitable for planting and culture in the various sections of the United States; Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture, after due advertisement and on competitive bids, is authorized to award the contract for the supplying of printed packets and envelopes and the packeting, assembling, and mailing of the seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, or any part thereof, for a period of not more than five years nor less than one year, if by such action he can best protect the interests of the United States. An equal proportion of five-sixths of all seeds, bulbs, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, after due notification by the Secretary of Agriculture that the allotment to their respective districts is ready for distribution, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents, or mailed by the department upon the receipt of their addressed franks, in packages of such weight as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General may jointly determine: Provided, however, That upon each envelope or wrapper containing packages of seeds the contents thereof shall be plainly indicated, and the Secretary shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each Member may have seeds of equal value, as near as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents: Provided also, That the seeds allotted to Senators and Representatives for distribution in the districts embraced within the twenty-fifth and thirty-fourth parallels of latitude shall be ready for delivery not later than the 10th day of January: Provided also, That any portion of the allotments to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress remaining uncalled for on the 1st day of April shall be distributed by the Secretary of Agriculture, giving preference to those persons whose names and addresses have been furnished by Senators and Representatives in Congress and who have not before during the same season been supplied by the department: And provided also, That the Secretary shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quality and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase; but nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Secretary of Agriculture from sending seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, testing, propagation, and distribution of valuable seeds, bulbs, mulberry and other rare and valuable trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants."

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law, that it changes existing law. And I call the Chair's attention especially to one paragraph which is clearly unauthorized, and that is the paragraph which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make a contract for five years' time, which would go beyond the life of at least two Congresses. There is no provision of law that has ever been held to be in order that would authorize a five-year contract in that respect.

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the point of order for a moment, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LANGLEY. I request the gentleman from Connecticut to reserve it for a moment in order that I may make a statement.

Mr. TILSON. I will make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes a point of order on this amendment on the ground that it is legislation unauthorized by law, and also that it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make a contract for five years.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. LANGLEY. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is, word for word, figure for figure, without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i," what has been in previous Agricultural appropriation bills. The first time the point of order was raised against this the present occupant of the chair ruled that it was in order. The second time he decided that, in view of a difference of opinion existing, he preferred to leave it to the committee. That was last year. The committee by a decisive majority held that it was in order, and therefore that the point of order was not well taken. [Applause.] It is in the exact language of the other bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I should like to be heard, if the gentleman has concluded.

Mr. LANGLEY. I could not convince the gentleman from Texas if I talked 30 minutes, so that I am willing to quit.

Mr. BLANTON. I know, but it is the Chair we have to convince.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] has the floor.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am trying to talk to the Chair. I am sure, absolutely sure, that the Chair knows the amendment is in order. There is no question about it. He has already ruled on it himself; and, so far as I am concerned, I am entirely willing to leave it to the ruling of the Chair now and stop this debate. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to get the committee out of a tangle and at the same time perform a good service, not in arguing the point of order, because I believe that the Chair recognizes that this is clearly subject to a point of order. I think the present occupant of the chair ruled that way on one occasion, but at the same time that decision has been overruled by a higher power, the power of this House, and probably would be again immediately. So, taking the precedent of the House as being superior to that established by an ordinary occupant of the chair [laughter]——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. This is not an ordinary occupant of the chair. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Without any reflection whatever on the present occupant of the chair, it is evident that this paragraph creates a great deal of interest among the membership of the House. The attendance on the floor at this time proves that. Now, I am going to ask unanimous consent that this paragraph, with the amendment and point of order pending, be passed over——

Mr. LANGLEY. I object.

Mr. TILSON. To be called up at any time at the option of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. LANGLEY. I object.

Mr. TILSON. I should like to finish my request. The proposition I am offering in the form of a request for unanimous consent will insure a quorum of the committee, and perhaps of the House, in attendance during the remainder of the consideration of this agricultural bill and will be performing a very beneficial and effective service to the House. So I ask unanimous consent that this be passed over without prejudice, to be called up at any time not later than the completion of the bill by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] in charge of the bill.

Mr. QUIN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. BANKHEAD, and Mr. QUIN objected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. There is just one point in this amendment which has not been passed upon by the committee in overruling the former decisions of the Chair. That is the provision for a five-year contract. Never has either the Chairman or the committee overruling the Chairman held that the Secretary of Agriculture could make a contract extending over the life of at least two Congresses.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it not true that this exact proviso was before the House two years ago and again last year? And the House—another Chairman—presumably knowing every word in the amendment, decided that it was in order. The first year the Chair decided that it was in order, and the next year the same Chairman left it to the decision of the committee, and when upon the Chairman's request it was left to the decision of the committee the committee decided that it was in order. So what is the use of talking about it any further. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I want to leave it to the Chairman to decide whether or not a provision is in order which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make a contract for five years' time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chairman realizes that he is confronted by a rather complicated situation, especially in view of his personal opinion. If this matter were presented to the Chairman for the first time today, he would have no hesitation whatsoever in upholding the point of order, because in the opinion of the Chair the amendment is clearly subject to such an objection. Last year when the present occupant of the chair was presiding and when a similar amendment was offered he rehearsed this case rather thoroughly, giving the precedents and asserting his dissent to the propriety of the amendment. He will not do so to-day. In view of the conflict of rulings, and while the Chair felt the point of order should be sustained, he realized that the opinion of one chairman was not equal to the opinion of the committee itself. The Chair at that time felt that in all fairness to the committee and in order to establish a precedent for the future it was but proper to refer the matter to the committee itself, and the Chair did refer the matter to the committee and asked for its opinion as to whether or not the amendment was in order. When that question was submitted to the committee on March 9, 1922, the committee by a vote of 113 yeas to 40 nays voted that the amendment was in order. Therefore the Chair, basing his decision upon the verdict of the committee, even though it is contrary to his own views, holds this amendment in order and overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the Chair permit a parliamentary suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course, I do not propose to appeal from the decision of the Chair, but the Chair is backing himself up by the opinion of a court that is not now in existence. It was a last year's court that ruled that way.

Mr. LANGLEY. No; it was a decision of this House during the present year, on March 9, 1922.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. LANGLEY. No, Mr. Chairman; he does not appeal. My fellow Members will realize that I am speaking under difficulties, because I am suffering from severe laryngitis, but I will endeavor to make you hear me, if I can.

I want to call the attention of the committee to an article discussing this entire question which was recently printed in the Scientific American. I want to insert that article in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. That article shows not only that the Government is better equipped for testing the productivity of these vegetable seeds but that out of the number distributed there were planted 240,000 acres of garden lands, and that the approximate production from that planting was $192,000,000 worth of farm products. [Applause.] And a part of that productivity was due to the stimulation resulting from the distribution of garden seeds by this Government. I speak in behalf of both the agricultural and laboring interests of this country when I say I know they want the continuation of this distribution. If I had my way about it, and but for the inhibitions of the Constitution against class legislation, I would like to have an amendment to this provision that you gentlemen who are voting against garden seeds have your allotment taken away from you and equitably distributed to the real patriots in this Congress. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. No; I can not, much as I regret to be unable to show a courtesy to my friend from Minnesota which he deserves. But I make this prediction, based upon my past experience with him: After this amendment is adopted, as I believe it will be finally, you would not be able, even with a crowbar, to pry from him as much as a single package of "punkin" seed, so anxious is he to get more than his allotment of garden seed for distribution in his district.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to include in his remarks a certain article indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. BEGG. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. ASWELL. I move to amend that; that debate close now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEGG: At the end of the amendment add: "Provided, That the seeds, shrubs, etc., purchased by this money shall not be sent out under the congressional frank."

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Let the amendment be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that the amendment to the amendment be reported again?

There was no objection.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BEGG) there were 44 ayes and 75 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the committee divided, and there were 65 ayes and 69 noes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. LANGLEY.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 71 ayes and 74 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner that he asked for. I voted against his amendment for seeds, but I think he ought to have the privilege of extending his speech in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ABERNETHY. I object, unless the gentleman from Kentucky wants to extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I did not object, Mr. Chairman; I am in favor of letting the gentleman from Kentucky put his remarks in the RECORD. The gentleman from North Carolina said he did not object if the gentleman wanted to extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SNELL. I object.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to address the committee for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. LANGLEY. On this subject.

Mr. BEGG. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOREST SERVICE.

SALARIES.

Forester, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; chief of office of accounts and fiscal agent, $2,500; inspector of records, $2,400; 7 district fiscal agents, at $2,120 each; forest supervisors—1 $3,240, 1 $2,880, 8 at $2,500 each, 16 at $2,380 each, 44 at $2,180 each, 60 at $1,980 each, 5 at $1,780 each; deputy forest supervisors—1 $1,980, 4 at $1,880 each, 25 at $1,780 each, 28 at $1,680 each, 15 at $1,580 each; forest rangers—11 at $1,620 each, 23 at $1,520 each, 78 at $1,420 each, 288 at $1,320 each, 426 at $1,220 each; for additional forest rangers, guards, or scalers at the rate of $1,220 per annum for periods of 12 months or less, $200,080; clerks—3 at $2,100 each, 4 at $2,000 each, 20 at $1,800 each, 23 at $1,600 each, 9 at $1,500 each, 32 at $1,400 each, 9 at $1,300 each, 140 at $1,200 each, 96 at $1,100 each, 53 at $1,020 each, 30 at $960 each, 100 at $900 each, 2 at $840 each, 1 $600; clerk or compositor, $1,600; clerk or proof reader, $1,400; clerk or translator, $1,400; compiler, $1,800; draftsmen—1 $2,000, 3 at $1,600 each, 2 at $1,500 each, 9 at $1,400 each, 4 at $1,300 each, 16 at $1,200 each, 2 at $1,100 each, 3 at $1,020 each, 1 $1,000, 1 $960; draftsmen or surveyors—2 at $1,800 each, 3 at $1,600 each, 16 at $1,500 each, 6 at $1,400 each; draftsman or artist, $1,200; draftsman or negative cutter, $1,200; artists—1 $1,600, 1 $1,000; photographers—1 $1,600, 1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,100; lithographer or photographer, $1,200; machinist, $1,260; carpenters—2 at $1,200 each, 3 at $1,000 each, 1 $960; electrician, $1,020; laboratory aids and engineers—1 $1,000, 9 at $900 each, 2 at $800 each; laboratory helpers—1 $720, 1 $600; packers—1 $1,000, 1 $780; messengers or laborers—2 at $960 each, 3 at $900 each, 4 at $840 each, 4 at $780 each, 5 at $720 each, 6 at $660 each; messenger boys—5 at $600 each, 2 at $540 each, 3 at $480 each, 3 at $420 each; charwomen—1 $540, 1 $480, 1 $300, 11 at $240 each; in all, $2,471,000.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the Forest Service there are 1,177 statutory employees, of which number 351 are official, 826 forest rangers, and 676 are clerks, messengers, charwomen, and so forth. It seems to me that that ought to be a sufficient number of employees for that bureau to function properly, but it seems that they want more money and more men, although they do not say for what. On page 33, lines 4 to 11, they ask for additional forest rangers, guards, scalers, at the rate of $1,220 per annum for periods of 12 months or less, $200,080.

Now, I want to ask the chairman of the committee what is the necessity for that appropriation?

Mr. ANDERSON. If I may explain to the gentleman, this item does not carry any more money than it did before. The object of putting these 164 rangers under the lump-sum appropriation was to give more flexibility in handling them. As it stood before the rangers were annual employees and had to be paid the year round. Some economy could be made by employing them for a shorter period, and the object of making the change was to make it possible to employ the rangers for a shorter period than the entire year, which would make a net result of $8,000 or $10,000 saving in the appropriation in the sense of enabling them to utilize the appropriation to a greater advantage.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, this is simply another evidence of a system which has grown up in the Agricultural Department of illegally adding employees to the pay roll by getting lump-sum appropriations through the Appropriations Committee instead of making the recommendation and having a bill reported by the Committee on Agriculture. If the chairman of the committee thinks it is necessary this year I shall not object, although I believe this item would be subject to a point of order; but I am going to object to the Department of Agriculture, or any other department, illegally and without authorization adding to the pay roll of its bureau. This is the most expensive, arbitrary, and autocratic department of the Federal Government.

It is not worth its salt the way it is being run, and if they can not with 1,177 men run that department in the way it should be run the heads of the department ought to resign and some people be appointed who can. Of that number, you will see there is less than one-half forest rangers actually doing business. I think it is inexcusable; but if the chairman thinks it ought to be done, all right. Next year I shall make a point of order if it is included in the bill in this manner.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the chairman if these employees at less than a year will be paid at the same rate of salary?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. For the part of the time they labor?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. And they will be paid at the rate of $1,220 a year?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I suppose if they need more men, they will put them on; but they should employ those on the statutory roll to do the work that ought to be done.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I think it is fair to say in reply to the gentleman from California that here is a service where they are expected to cover 153,000,000 acres of land. We have $600,000,000 worth of timber, an enormous amount, and if there is any difficulty with this appropriation it is that it is not enough rather than it is too much.

Mr. CURRY. They had better discharge some of the clerks and charwomen and appoint rangers. One-third of my State is under forest reserve. My State increased in population over 1,100,000 during the decennial between 1910 and 1920, and during the same time that portion of my State covered by the forest reserve decreased over 100,000 in population. The arbitrary and unreasonable rules and regulations of the Forestry Bureau were responsible for that decrease in population. I was one of the first conservationists in this country. I believe in conservation and use, not in paralysis and disuse.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES, FOREST SERVICE.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to experiment and to make and continue investigations and report on forestry, national forests, forest fires, and lumbering, but no part of this appropriation shall be used for any experiment or test made outside the jurisdiction of the United States; to advise the owners of woodlands as to the proper care of the same; to investigate and test American timber and timber trees and their uses and methods for the preservative treatment of timber; to seek, through investigations and the planting of native and foreign species, suitable trees for the treeless regions; to erect necessary buildings: Provided, That the cost of any building purchased, erected, or as improved shall not exceed $1,000; to pay all expenses necessary to protect, administer, and improve the national forests, including tree planting in the forest reserves to prevent erosion, drift, surface wash, and soil waste and the formation of floods, and including the payment of rewards under regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture for information leading to the arrest and conviction for violation of the laws and regulations relating to fires in or near national forests, or for the unlawful taking of, or injury to, Government property; to ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated; to transport and care for fish and game supplied to stock the national forests or the waters therein; to employ agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor required in practical forestry and in the administration of national forests in the city of Washington and elsewhere; to collate, digest, report, and illustrate the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service; to purchase necessary supplies, apparatus, office fixtures, law books, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington, and for medical supplies and services and other assistance necessary for the immediate relief of artisans, laborers, and other employees engaged in any hazardous work under the Forest Service; to pay freight, express, telphone, and telegraph charges; for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and official traveling and other necessary expenses, including traveling expenses for legal and fiscal officers while performing Forest Service work; and for rent outside of the District of Columbia, as follows:

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present. This bill is so important, even without the garden seeds in it, that we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman let me make my point of order first?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-four Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having under consideration the bill H. R. 13481, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, when 206 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the RECORD.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the following language, on page 35, commencing on line 18, after the word "forests," and down to and including a part of line 22:

and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forest to be exported from the State or Territory in which said forests are respectively situated.

That is clearly legislation on an appropriation bill, an attempt to vest power and authority in the Secretary of Agriculture not now vested in him by law.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I think, offhand, I should have been disposed to admit the validity of the point of order, but I find that the act of August 10, 1912, chapter 284, provides as follows:

and the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests, except the Black Hills and Harney National Forests in South Dakota, to be exported from the State, Territory, or District of Alaska, in which said forests are respectively situated.

That seems to be legislative authority for the language carried in this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, certainly it may be exported from Alaska without this wording. It is so exported now. Nearly all of the timber that is cut in Alaska is exported to foreign countries. We appropriate money for the purpose of protecting timber in the United States, and last year between 1,000,000,000 and 2,000,000,000 board feet of lumber were exported to foreign countries, with the result that lumber used in the Middle West was increased in cost three or four times what it ought to be. The Secretary of Agriculture does need this authority, if he has not it already, to do what he wishes to do. He recognizes the fact that legislation is necessary by having this matter brought before the Committee on Agriculture. The Committee on Agriculture is functioning and has not yet reported on this proposition. I think it is clearly out of order to legislate authority to a Cabinet officer on an appropriation bill. I do not see how the Chair can do anything else than hold it out of order. It is possible that the Agricultural Department may have fooled the Committee on Appropriations. They have not the authority they wish, and they are trying to get it in this indirect manner.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota please give the Chair the reference which he read a moment ago?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I read from the act of August 10, 1912, chapter 284, and at the time I read it I was under the impression that that was a legislative act. As a matter of fact, it was an appropriation act, which, of course, would not give it the sanction of law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels, in view of the fact that the law read by the gentleman from Minnesota was contained in an appropriation act, and therefore terminated when that act terminated, that it does not make this law at the present time, and the Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fighting and preventing forest fires, $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 of this amount may be used in meeting emergencies caused by forest insects.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Line 16, on page 38, I move to strike out the figures "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 38, line 16, strike out the figuress "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$300,000."'

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, some time ago, in connection with another item, I offered an amendment to increase the appropriation, but it was outvoted because of the fact it would not be a saving of money. The amendment which I now offer I trust will meet the approval of the chairman of the subcommittee, because it is clearly an amendment which will save money, although it is an increase in the appropriation. I want to call the attention of the members of the committee to the hearings, which are very interesting on this subject. It developed that the loss year before last in connection with the forest fires—and these figures are found in the hearings on page 213—were $212,000, and for the year closing June 30, 1922, the amount of loss was $322,000.

In that same connection the testimony of the chief forester is to the effect there was about 80 per cent efficiency in the fighting of those fires, but that the great loss occurred in the additional 20 per cent which they were not able to control. My amendment would appropriate $50,000 in addition to the amount carried in the bill and, by increasing the efficiency of the fire patrol, would make a saving of one-half the value of the timber that was lost in those two years. The chief forester says that with all the work they can do they do not expect to cut this down to below one-tenth of 1 per cent, whereas the loss is now two-tenths of 1 per cent. This would accomplish a saving of from $100,000 to $150,000, according to the losses of those two years. More than that, there is an additional reason, I trust, that will cause this amendment to prevail. If you will read page 213 of the hearings you will find this language:

The feature of our fire protection that disturbs me most is our emergency expenditures and the fact that we are still on a deficiency basis in meeting these emergencies. In the summer of 1921 we had to spend $536,000 in emergency expenditures for fire fighting, and we had to go to Congress for a deficiency appropriation. During the summer just closed we had to expend $539,000 for emergency fire fighting, and must again go to the Committee on Appropriations for a deficiency.

It strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that the opportunity to save an actual loss in timber of from $100,000 to $150,000 and save in the appropriations at least the very substantial amount of $500,000 is a real economy, and therefore I trust that the chairman will agree to this amendment and that it will prevail.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I am against all increases about forests when you come and strike down the little amount for garden and field seeds to which the farmers of this country are entitled. Talk about economy now! That is not any economy. Instead of fooling around here beating the farmers out of a few field seeds and garden seeds, we should give them some marketing system by which they can get their farm products to the market without being robbed of that to which they are entitled by the middlemen of the country. You should give some reasonable transportation, so the products of their toil can reach the ultimate market without the farmer, the wealth producer of this country, being robbed. You might give the farmer of this country some fertilizer at a reasonable price, whereby he might put it on the soil, and whereby he can produce the food products necessary for man and beast. [Applause.] Yet what are you doing to bring that about? You have had the Muscle Shoals proposition of Henry Ford before you ever since May, 1922, and here we are on the verge of Christmas and not a thing has been done. [Applause.] Who is opposed to it? First, the great railway systems and the water-power trusts of the United States, together with the automobile trust and the other trusts which have combined and pooled their interests against Henry Ford and the farmer on this question.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I will yield.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this speech is very interesting to the membership of the House and to the country, and I think we ought to have a quorum here to listen to the gentleman from Mississippi. I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

During the count,

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the Chair ought to announce the result instead of delaying the announcement and sending out for Members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was busily engaged in the counting of a quorum.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the Chair is going to do that, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw the point?

Mr. LANGLEY. Why, certainly, if the Chair is going to wait and send after men to get a quorum, what is the use of my making the point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw it?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; I do. I have got sense enough to know what is going on. I think the Chair has succeeded in seeing a sufficient number of Members here to listen to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, and so I withdraw my point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws the point of no quorum. The gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, the Republicans have not said a word about getting the Henry Ford proposition through this Congress to get the farmers fertilizer so they can make a crop to feed the people and animals of this country. They talk about the salaries of officials, they talk all the time about nonessentials, about items that have been here ever since the Civil War, when the great burning question before you and the farmers through their organizations from one end of the United States to the other ask, What is the matter with Congress considering the Henry Ford proposition? You men know that ramifying from one end of this country to the other to-day the influence of the great money power of Wall Street is shoving aside the Henry Ford proposition that the Committee on Military Affairs reported to this Congress. All of us who believe in legislating in aid of the farmers want it considered and enacted into law.

Not one word can be heard of it, and yet the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] has introduced a bill here and inspired newspaper items calling himself "the head of the farm bloc," and nobody ever heard of his being recognized as a friend of the farmer, hardly, so far as this Congress is concerned. [Laughter.] He said that the matter had been repudiated by the farm bloc. Who is he calling the farm bloc? Is he calling J. Pierpont Morgan the farm bloc? Is he calling the Steel Trust the farm bloc? Is he calling the railway combine interests of the United States and the great banking and manufacturing interests the farm bloc? If he is talking about that, of course it is true they have laid it aside, and do not propose that it shall be passed. But I want to say to the gentleman from Iowa that his bill is the very mouthpiece and the very offspring of the enemies of the Henry Ford proposition, and he knows it. [Applause.] He knows that the bill he has introduced was introduced for the special purpose of laying in the grave the proposition of Henry Ford to operate and control Muscle Shoals for the benefit of the farmers. Yet he sends out his pictures in the newspapers and announces that the farm bloc has gone back on Henry Ford, when he himself is the author of a bill that has got more poison in it for the proposal of Henry Ford than all the other conspiracies that have been conjured up to defeat the Ford proposal for Muscle Shoals. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to present a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANGLEY. I do not think the country or the House can afford to miss this inspiring speech of the gentleman from Mississippi, and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEGG. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Too late!

Mr. QUIN. I thank you, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Ohio can have all the time. He has spoken in this House almost every other five minutes in the last two days, and yet when I am telling the truth here he rises to object to my having five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio was on his feet objecting at the time the announcement was made. The Clerk will read.

Mr. QUIN. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Ohio can not get anywhere with that. I will be here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and four Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in behalf of the amendment that has been offered to provide additional funds for fire protection and fire patrol for the national forests. This is to the national forests the same as a fire department is to the city of Washington or our home towns. There is no economy in providing for half of a fire department. The time to fight fires is when the fire first begins, and the testimony adduced before the committee shows that if the fires are taken in hand while they are very small they are one-man fires and they are quickly suppressed, and no serious damages are done and no additional expenses are incurred. But where there are not sufficient fire patrols these fires spread and it becomes necessary to seek and organize fire fighters and transport them long distances, meanwhile the fire gets under way. A single fire may destroy in some cases hundreds and even thousands and in some cases tens of thousands of acres. The direct and indirect cost is enormous before the fire is suppressed. We have been paying out from $500,000 to $750,000 annually for emergency fire fighters in addition to the regular appropriation.

Now, there is no economy in paying out this amount for emergency fire fighters when with better fire patrols we can prevent this enormous expenditure annually and can prevent the destruction of a large amount of valuable timber. So I earnestly urge the serious consideration of every Member to the amendment that has been offered. Especially do we need additional funds in order that there may be an air patrol over some of the larger national forests. Many of these fires, as I stated to you yesterday, result from lightning, and they occur at very inaccessible points, not readily discovered except by an air patrol. Where the air patrol has been in use it has been found very effective. It discovers the fires in their incipiency and makes it possible to extinguish them without the loss of large areas of timber and without the employment of a large number of emergency fire fighters. I ask the support of the committee to this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. QUIN. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. Does the gentleman from Minnesota move?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. QUIN. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks for tellers. Those who favor taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until their names are counted. [After counting.] Not a sufficient number. Tellers are refused. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi objects to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What would be the effect if the objection to the vote, on the ground that there is not a quorum present, is sustained in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. There would have to be another vote on the amendment. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-three Members are present—not a quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise; and on that I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee do now rise, and on that he demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. QUIN to act as tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Those in favor of the motion that the committee do now rise will pass between the tellers and be counted.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 4, noes 77.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee declines to rise.

Mr. QUIN. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is sustained, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 13481, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he directed the roll to be called, when 172 Members, a quorum of the committee, responded to their names; and he handed in the list of absentees to be printed in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division upon my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that the parliamentary situation is that the committee will take a vote from the beginning on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. In order that the Members may be informed as to what that amendment is, without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. KETCHAM: Page 38, line 16, strike out "$250,000" and insert "$300,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. KETCHAM) there were—ayes 17, noes 51.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing, and the testing of such woods as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, for investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States, and for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest and fiber products, and for commercial demonstrations of improved methods or processes, in cooperation with individuals and companies, $350,800: Provided, That $15,000 of this amount shall be used for the investigation by the Forest Products Laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture of flax straw as a source of supply for the manufacture of pulp and paper.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee why the provision for the preservative treatment of timber is included in this item, when it was also included in the former item, on page 35, in line 3?

Mr. ANDERSON. The item on page 35 is not an appropriation item at all. It is simply a general statement of the functions of the department which it has been customary to carry in the case of each bureau for many years.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Provision is made for it, is it not? In line 17, on page 41, we find an aggregate stated—

In all, general expenses, $4,112,582.

Mr. ANDERSON. The statement to which the gentleman refers, of course, is simply a total of the appropriations. It is not an appropriation of itself.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Do we not find a total for Forest Service, $6,583,586, at the close of this paragraph? Does that include the former aggregate stated on page 41?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Why the repetition of the provision?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is merely a matter of record and convenience in the appropriation bill. It makes possible a quick ascertainment of the total for each bureau.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Has the chairman of the committee any information as to what progress has been made in these tests? The chairman of the committee knows that the methods of preserving wood are well known to the great corporations of this country, and the best methods of preserving wood are well known to practically every farmer in the United States. I think that is not an extravagant statement. They are being used constantly on the farms and by the corporations which use timber. Are we getting something new out of this?

Mr. ANDERSON. It may be that the farmers know all that could be known about the preservation of wood.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. They know what I said.

Mr. ANDERSON. But the industries that are asking for these appropriations frankly admit that they do not know very much about it and they are anxious to have these investigations made. In point of fact, a good many of them contribute part of the sums which are spent in making these investigations.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow another question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Surely. The gentleman is speaking in his own time.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Can the gentleman state that the processes which are being employed and the investigations which are being conducted by the Government are adding anything to the knowledge now in the possession of the corporations that are using these processes daily and the farmers who are using them?

Mr. ANDERSON. I should say they were adding a great deal. For example, the present methods of kiln-drying lumber have reduced the time required to dry it very considerably, and have greatly reduced the cost. There are a great many questions with reference to the use of paint and various other materials in the preservation of wood which still require a great deal of investigation.

Mr. SNELL. They are carrying on experiments in the manufacture of wood pulp.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; and we have not any really certain method of grading lumber. That is one of the things which is being investigated under this item. Millions of feet of lumber could be saved if it were possible to grade the lumber and to cut it at the mill with better relation to the consuming requirements. All of these things are done in this laboratory. Among other things, they have a machine for testing the strength of wooden boxes, and enormous savings have been made in the cost of making these boxes, as well as a great deal added to their strength and utility, through these investigations. I think this is one of the most valuable items carried in this bill.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. It may be so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I recognize the fact that this science of the preservation and treatment of timber and wood, and so forth, is very interesting, but it is not as important as the necessity for producing food products in this country. The treatment and preservation of timber is a process that is being developed by the corporations that handle these products, and therefore should not be preferred over the productive process. You propose to appropriate $350,000 for this one purpose, $15,000 of which is to be spent in finding out about how flax straw will answer as a source of paper. Awhile ago we had a proposition to spend $360,000 for the furnishing of seeds to the children of this country and the people who have gardens for the purpose of producing something really tangible and worth while.

Mr. Chairman, there are at least 2,000 cottages in the mill villages of my district, which are lived in by cotton-mill people who are furnished with gardens and who are encouraged to produce those things that are necessary for the health and maintenance of their families. Yet a vote of the committee to-day denied them the right to have the seeds for which they continually ask me and without which many of them can not cultivate their gardens or avail themselves of the information which the mill corporations furnish them as to the beautifying and improvement of their gardens which are furnished to them.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will my friend yield to me for a question?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is it not true that the distribution of garden seeds to the people of the country by the Government is not for the benefit alone of the farmers, but that it is more for the benefit of the laboring people who have small gardens that they cultivate in their back yards?

Mr. STEVENSON. Those are the people for whom I am pleading when I say that if we are going to spend $350,000 to test the sources from which paper can be made for the paper industry of this country and testing the timber, especially foreign timber, that is provided for here for the people who deal in that kind of timber, we ought not to be denied seeds that the people in the factory towns, who are frequently not able to buy them and do not know where to get the best, and come to us because they know they can get the best, we ought to provide them with garden and flour seeds tested and approved by the Department of Agriculture.

There is another thing, there is hardly a school district in my district where they have an up-to-date method of school teaching that does not ask me for a package of seeds for every child in the district, and every child is encouraged to produce something for the maintenance of the family and which serves for the protection of the health of the people.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does not the gentleman think that that is the very highest order of patriotism, that it is the best line of education and help promoted by Congress?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I will underwrite any statement that the gentleman from Kentucky will make on that proposition. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I do not want to see the children of this country discriminated against in flower and garden seeds in favor of people who want $350,000 for the paper industry and the testing of timber, and hence I make a motion to strike out this paragraph, because it is rank discrimination against the school children and the factory people of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 39, line 16, strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations, independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States, and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forest and forest lands, $85,000.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: Line 23, page 40, strike out the figures "$85,000" and insert the figures "$110,000."

Page 40, line 23, strike out "$85,000" and insert "$110,000."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, it is very seldom that I make a motion to increase an item in an appropriation bill. But this is a matter that the people of the whole country are very vitally interested in. It has come to me in many ways that one thing the people are much exercised about at the present time is the fast-disappearing forests of the country and the products of the same. They are also all much interested in having the denuded and cut-over lands put back into production. They are of the opinion that the Federal Government should do as much as it can, in a reasonable degree, in the way of encouragement and spreading useful information throughout the country about the most improved and most scientific way to reforest and to put these lands back to producing timber, which we are in so great need of at the present time.

The present bill carries $85,000 for experimental stations. According to the hearings, I notice that we have six of them, and they are all in the States in the South and the southwestern part of the country. There is no question but that they are doing good work and should be continued where they are, but each section of the country has a different problem to work out—a condition that is entirely peculiar to itself—and therefore needs local stations to work out their problems. The Northern and Northeastern States have taken a great interest in the reforestation work; they have gone further in this than any other part of the country. They have spent much money, both individuals owning lands and corporations and States themselves, and they are making considerable advancement; but there is every reason in the world why there should be at least two more small experimental stations placed in the North and East. I understand from the Director of the Forest Service, Mr. Greeley, that if this was increased by $25,000 they could establish two more, one in a North Central State and one in the New England division.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am asking this question in good faith and for information that I really want. I have a faint idea of what "silvicultural" experiments mean, but I would like to have the gentleman explain, if he will, what "dendrological" experiments mean, and then I would like to have him tell the committee if he thinks these experiments are so much more important than the Government distribution of seeds for the laboring men, the farmers, and their children.

Mr. SNELL. I think the gentleman's question needs no special answer at this time. This appropriation is for experimental stations to show the people the best methods of further protecting against fire and the reforesting denuded lands and the general care and production of timber best adapted to the section.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I am not acquainted with what is being done by the Federal Government, but I know that some of the States are taking an advanced position on this matter.

Mr. SNELL. A great many of the States are taking up work along this line. Individuals and corporations are doing a great deal of work, but they need help and demonstrations to show them how to do it in the best way. The Federal Government has advanced ideas and knowledge on this that the States and individuals do not, and it should be given to them.

Mr. FESS. I understand that Pennsylvania has several million acres that they are expecting to reforest, and that they have a school of forestry maintained at Palo Alto. And I understand they have two or three places that are model forests where they are showing what can be done.

Mr. SNELL. New York has several schools of forestry and is spending a lot of money along this line and are much interested in this work as well as the whole country, and I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. It is perfectly manifest that there is no quorum present to listen to this most interesting and enlightening discussion, and I therefore make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, two or three of my closest friends have just assured me that they are deeply interested in the discussion of this item and are desirous that the discussion proceed, and in deference to their wishes I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I think I have about concluded my statement.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Forest Service, $6,583,582.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADMISSION OF CERTAIN REFUGEES.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank the membership for permitting me to make a short statement. I desire to present a very serious proposition which has to deal with a most serious and distressing situation. I hope the Members generally will assist in the study which is now going on. Every Member of the House knows of the great distress in the Near East, and of the enormous number of refugees in Greece and in almost all of that country known as Asia Minor and on the lands along the seas which touch parts of that region. As the result of a series of disasters, which culminated in the burning of the city of Smyrna, many appeals are coming to the Committee on Immigration for a lifting of the immigration-restriction quota in order to permit the admission of refugees who might come to the United States to relatives already here. These appeals vary in the quantity of relief that might be afforded, but even the most modest appeals are such as to be startling to those who stand for continued restriction of immigration. The committee has held extensive hearings in an effort to ascertain the number that might come, and the figures range all the way from 5,000 to 100,000, and even more. On the islands and shores of the Ægean Sea, including the Grecian mainland, there are 1,200,000 homeless people. In Anatolia and elsewhere in Asia Minor, Armenia, and Greece there are 1,000,000 Christians who have lost their homes or who are threatened with evacuation. In Constantinople Greek and Armenian Christian citizens to the number of 450,000 are refugees, and these figures do not include 50,000 or more refugees in northern Syria, reaching as far south as Damascus, Beirut, and Sidon, thousands of whom are orphaned children. Then there are from 250,000 to 300,000 Armenian refugees from Turkey who are now in Russian Armenia, including 30,000 orphans in that area cared for by the Near East Relief. A careful estimate of the number now homeless or threatened with exile in that part of the world brings the number to 2,500,000 people. It is staggering!

Therefore, when one looks carefully at the proposition, no matter how sympathetic he may feel—and I take it the whole people of the United States are in great sympathy with the situation and the people there—one realizes the futility of attempting to do much of anything in the way of relief by lifting the immigration restriction laws that we now have. However, I have thought that in lieu of the several bills pending, both in this House and in the other branch, looking toward great modifications that might admit 100,000 aliens to relatives or even more, we might at the present time be justified in agreeing by resolution that those countries with exhausted quotas, most of whom have very small quotas, be permitted to use now the quotas which would be coming to them for one year from July 1 next. That is to say, we might extend the right to use the quotas of one year in advance at the present time in an effort to grant what even then would be a very small part of the relief that must be given by the whole world. It is proposed that only relatives of citizens or declarants receive this relief.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does that contemplate an additional allowance?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; not one additional alien over the quota is to be admitted. The point is this: If there are, let us say, 300 aliens in Russian Armenia who are entitled to come under next year's quota, which begins July 1, some of whom are now refugees and who might come to relatives here, would there be any harm in letting them come in now or when ships can be had to bring them here?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Cutting off the equivalent to that next year?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend in the RECORD the text of the resolution which I am to-day introducing, and which I hope will be read and studied by all of the Members during the holidays.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may include as a part of his remarks the resolution referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
December 22, 1922.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington introduced the following joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 416) to permit the admission of certain aliens in excess of quotas and to be charged to the quota for the fiscal year 1924, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That whenever the Secretary of Labor finds, in the case of an alien of any nationality seeking to enter the United States, that the quota for such nationality under the percentage immigration act of May 19, 1921, as amended and extended, has been exhausted for the fiscal year 1923, and that the deportation of such alien would result in extreme hardship or likelihood of death, the Secretary of Labor may admit such alien to the United States, if otherwise admissible, upon the application of a citizen of the United States or an individual who has declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, if such citizen or declarant is a relative of the alien seeking admission. The number of aliens so admitted during the remainder of the fiscal year 1923 shall be deducted from the total number of aliens of such nationality admissible during the fiscal year 1924; but nothing in this section shall authorize any enlargement of the quota for that fiscal year.

SEC. 2. Whenever the Secretary of Labor finds that the operation of the 20 per cent monthly limit provided by section 2 of such act of May 19, 1921, is causing undue congestion in the ports of the United States, or extreme hardship to aliens, he may change or modify such limit to such extent as he deems necessary to remove such congestion or hardship, but nothing in this section shall authorize any enlargement of the 3 per cent yearly limit provided by such act.

SEC. 3. For the purposes of such act of May 19, 1921, the nationality of a minor child seeking admission to the United States shall be determined by the country of birth of either parent who, having custody of such minor, is entitled to admission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, personally this is as far as I have thought we could go at present. I offer the plan for what it is worth. I hope that later it may be accepted. It saves the law. It helps a little in the present misery.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. The gentleman is now discussing a resolution which he contemplates introducing. Does the gentleman mean to say that the resolution would be in substitution for any contemplated legislation along that line?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I mean to infer that so far as I am concerned, as one Member of the House and as one member of the Committee on Immigration, I shall not agree to any bill that will throw open the gates of the United States to a great uncertain number of the refugees of the world. Other propositions are too uncertain. I am proposing to go as far as I think the United States dare go in the face of this tremendous situation, where millions of people are moving, either through persecution or in search of food and shelter.

Mr. SNELL. About how many countries would this apply to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This would apply to the quota from Greece, which is 3,300 or thereabouts, from Armenia in Turkey, the quota for which is 2,300, and Syria, whose quota is 928, and to certain other countries which during the year and a half of operation of the quota law have invariably exhausted their quotas within the five months. The minimum is quite small.

Mr. SNELL. How many people would that bring in altogether?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think less than 10,000 altogether, and each one would come to a relative in the United States.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman's resolution refer to certain countries, or does it open the matter entirely?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. To certain countries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The resolution provides that from countries whose quotas have been exhausted and where there are persons who can make an individual showing of distress and that they are coming to relatives, they may be admitted and charged to the quota of next year.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that all of those countries have exhausted their quotas?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They all have very small quotas.

Mr. SNELL. But they have all been exhausted up to the present time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and the number coming which would be charged to the next fiscal year would be quite small; and inasmuch as there is this terrible distress, why not give this small measure of relief?

Mr. SNELL. How are you going to improve the distress by letting in 10,000, when there are millions in distress?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. How are you going to improve it if you let in 100,000?

Mr. SNELL. That is the point. I think if you let down the bars you will be in trouble.

Under leave to extend his remarks Mr. JOHNSON of Washington presented the following table:

QUOTA ADMISSIONS.

Status of the immigration of aliens into the United States under the percentum limit act of May 19, 1921, as extended by Public Resolution No. 55, Sixty-seventh Congress, approved May 11, 1922.

[1] After all charges against the annual quota have been deducted.
[2] Exhausted for year

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to the gentleman from California having five minutes, but I shall object to any further remarks out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, as a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which committee the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], who has just spoken, is the chairman, I have been listening for many days to the story of the Armenians and Greeks, in respect to the taking of territory from Greece by the Turks. It is a very harrowing story. The testimony shows that one side claims that the other side is to blame, and then when you hear all of it, you will conclude that both sides are to blame. The Greeks are to blame for a great part of it, and the Turks are to blame for a great part of it. This is as the testimony goes. Possibly no other catastrophe in the history of man has been as great as this one, particularly relating to the city of Smyrna and the surrounding territory. Practically all of the Christians, the Greeks, have left the territory and are being provided for now by various organizations. In the territory involved there are about 60,000,000 people, and from 1,000 years before Christ up to the present time this territory has changed hands every few years. Some of it has, the Government of East Silesia, lately. One witness who who had given much time and attention to it said that in the next 10 years the minorities of these various small countries, and we have been making more of them, over 25,000,000 of refugees, like the situation of the Smyrna people to-day, would be appealing for admission to the United States.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe that any man in his right mind would make a statement of that kind?

Mr. RAKER. The conditions now are such that, if we leave the doors open to those who are seeking admission, no one can tell the number; as the chairman says it may run into at least 2,000,000, if not more.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Does the gentleman know of any proposition to do that before any committee of this Congress?

Mr. RAKER. I will answer that in this way: Open the doors for this two and a half million, no limit placed upon them, who can honestly close the doors to those of like situation who may ask admission in numbers from 100,000 to 1,000,000 from Poland or 5,000,000 from Russia. It is an impossibility. It is asking something of this country that ought not to be asked. What can be done? We have hundreds of ships tied up at our wharfs rotting and decaying——

Mr. SNELL. Steel?

Mr. RAKER. They are not all steel, but the steel is rusting out. We have provisions that will go to waste which these people have been taking from the land. There is an opportunity where they can live, and if we send those products to them we will be able to take care of them——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman knows this arrangement does not add one person to any quota.

Mr. RAKER. I was talking about the letting in of an unlimited number of refugees.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to speak for five minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I said I would object to any further discussion out of order, and I feel compelled to object.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-three Members are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13481, finding itself without a quorum, under the rule the Chair caused the roll to be called, whereupon 165 Members answered to their names, and he presented the list of absentees for entry in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on a question of procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. For how long a time?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, some differences of opinion have arisen relative to some of the items of this bill, and we all realize that some of our Members are absent whom we would be glad to have here to aid us in the consideration of these matters. It has been suggested that perhaps some of our difficulties might be overcome and the way might be smoothed for action if it were understood that the final vote, after the committee rises, on this bill shall not be taken until about Wednesday, the 3d of January. As far as I am concerned, that would be entirely agreeable to me. I think that could be arranged.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I understand it is the purpose to read the bill through in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MONDELL. To complete the bill in the committee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. There is an item involving an appropriation of $50,000,000 to carry out the authorization of Congress heretofore made on roads for the year 1923.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is the last item. Does the gentleman think we could dispose of that proposition? There will be an amendment offered to appropriate the whole $50,000,000 for that year, which I desire very much to see adopted.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman from Wyoming will allow me to answer the question, I think I can state to the gentleman from Kentucky that this bill carries substantially $30,000,000 for roads. The committee on deficiencies is carrying $25,000,000 for roads in addition to this.

Mr. KINCHELOE. For 1923?

Mr. MADDEN. For 1923, yes, sir; and we worked the whole question out with the Roads Bureau of the Agricultural Department, so as to preserve the rights of every State and provide such money as may be needed to carry on any work that is in progress or obligated by any State.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I know, and the gentleman knows, but what is the reason we do not carry out the authorization of Congress and appropriate the $50,000,000 provided for the Roads Bureau for 1923 instead of their coming like a blind beggar with a cup in his hand and getting it by piecemeal?

Mr. MADDEN. That is not a fair statement.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is what will happen if the appropriations are brought in by piecemeal in a deficiency.

Mr. MADDEN. We are doing just exactly what the act which Congress passed last year provided. The act provided that allotments should be made by the Department of Agriculture to the States, and that contract obligations might be created by the States for which appropriations would be made from time to time as the States needed the money; and that provision is already provided for in the deficiency bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] is thoroughly familiar will all the details of that.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know whether Mr. McDonald has changed his mind or not, but he has stated in the hearings that it is absolutely essential that the estimate of $50,000,000 should be appropriated now and all at once.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that will be worked out to the satisfaction of everybody.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Wyoming state what the intended program is for next week, provided we put the final vote on the agricultural bill over until the 3d of January?

Mr. MONDELL. The program is to dispose of the bill up to some specific point for the consideration of the committee, and then take up the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. But not have a final vote on it until January 3?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. This bill will not be called up for a vote until the 3d of January?

Mr. MONDELL. Until Wednesday.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the 3d.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address an inquiry to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. Do we understand that the whole $50,000,000 which has been authorized will all be made available and that the contracts will be left intact?

Mr. MADDEN. It will all be made available, and the contract rights will be kept intact for three years, so that none of the States will lose any rights at any time in the next three years.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It will not interrupt the program?

Mr. MADDEN. No.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION. It is stated that the deficiency bill will carry $25,000,000 of the $50,000,000 authorized.

Mr. MADDEN. Forty-two million dollars more is made available.

Mr. ROBSION. I understand that; but what disposition will be made of the other $25,000,000?

Mr. MADDEN. That will be appropriated just as fast as they make obligations against it. They have said they have contracted obligations against it up to the 1st of July to the amount of $16,000,000, and only $1,000,000 of the total will be needed between now and the 1st of March. If any more is obligated and needs to be provided for before Congress adjourns at the end of the session we will be advised of it and appropriate in the general deficiency bill to meet any obligations that may accrue in the current fiscal year.

Mr. ROBSION. What will be done with the remainder?

Mr. MADDEN. It will be allotted to the States to which it applies.

Mr. ROBSION. How can it be allotted before the time expires?

Mr. MADDEN. It will be arranged before the time expires.

Mr. ROBSION. If we should bring that provision in on an appropriation bill it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. It would be in order if we got a rule. I think everybody will be satisfied with it, so that we shall not want a rule.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For conducting the investigations contemplated by the act of May 15, 1862, relating to the application of chemistry to agriculture; for the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances used in the manufacture thereof, including investigations of the physiological effects of such products on the human organism, $92,900.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 43, line 15, after the words "to agriculture" insert "and communicating to any person or making public the analysis of any food or drug product that is sold in the market, under regulations to be made by the Secretary."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the duty of the Department of Agriculture is to procure and diffuse and spread abroad—that is not the exact language—all information relating to agriculture in its broadest sense. At present, if they take hold of the question of food or drug products, they give no information.

If there is anything injurious, they stop it under the pure food act; but they do not give to the people of this country the information that they want. Let me give you an example. I have known a man who dealt in what he called crude spice, which was starch colored in various ways so as to look like spices. Nine-tenths of all the spices are made of some material of that sort which is not injurious, but I think people have a right to know whether they are getting the pure spice or whether they are getting an adulterated spice that is not so strong. This would enable them to do that.

We know that there are various baking powders on the market. I am assured that some of these baking powders that have the largest sale have a large percentage of alum in them, which is held not to be injurious. Other baking powders have no alum in them. No man dares spread that information from his own analysis for fear of an action for libel; but the public have a right to know whether baking powder is pure.

I had a young man write me the other day. He was using a tooth powder and he wanted pure precipitated chalk. He thought from the feeling of this tooth powder that it had a little grit in it, sand, and so on, and he wrote to the department and wanted that information. They put him off and said that was not their business.

So also with reference to drugs. Take the case of tonics. They tell the percentage of alcohol, but they do not tell the other matter in those drugs, and I think people are entitled to know. I do not think it ought to be done without regulation or without notice to the parties who are selling the article on the market. I think even as to beer they ought to have the right to know whether it is made of malt and hops or made of something else.

I am speaking of what is fair. The Secretary of Agriculture would make regulations which would prevent harm to any business, but I think the public has a right to know through the investigations of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Bureau of Chemistry what they are getting in the way of foods and drugs.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think all the preparations containing opiates have marked upon them the amount of opium which they contain as well as the amount of alcohol.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is true as to opium and alcohol, but I do not think it is true as to the other contents. I do not know whether they would want the Secretary of Agriculture to make that public.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It is true as to narcotics, that the narcotic ingredient is stated.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not know whether they would want to give information as to all those things; but speaking of spice again, I think people are entitled to know whether they are getting spice or starch, and I think the Secretary of Agriculture could do a good work in simply giving information as to what is in the things that are sold, and that information would make unnecessary a great deal of the rather tyrannical work that is done under what is called the pure food and drugs act in determining whether articles are injurious. I want people to have the right to know whether articles of food or drugs are adulterated or not, as well as whether they are injurious.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. On its face apparently this amendment is very innocent and harmless, but in its final analysis I want to call the attention of the committee to what it may mean to our country and to our Treasury. If you will notice the language, it says:

And communicating to any person the analysis of any food or drug product.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Under proper regulations.

Mr. BLANTON. But think of communicating to any person in the United States who calls on the Secretary of Agriculture. We have 110,000,000 people in the United States. Any one of them able to write a letter can send some kind of a commodity to the Secretary of Agriculture if it comes within the designation of foods or drugs and ask him to make an analysis of it whether there is any reason for it or not. How many extra employees would that require to give all the information?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will not the regulations take care of that? And as to the furnishing of the information, it could be done by a published bulletin, or it could be addressed to the man himself. There is an "or" in the amendment. It says the Secretary may either communicate to the person or publish.

Mr. BLANTON. There are hundreds of different kinds of canned goods. There are hundreds of different kinds of food products. There are hundreds of different kinds of drug products concerning any of which any individual could then write to the Secretary of Agriculture asking for an analysis. There is no restriction at all in this amendment. The Secretary could not make fish of one and flesh of another and fowl of another. He would have to treat them all alike, if there is any justice in this proposition, and every Tom, Dick, and Harry could go into the department and ask to have some product analyzed, and the department would have to do it, and it would require experts to pass upon the many requests. Every time you employ one of these experts you have to pay him a big salary.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would it satisfy the gentleman if I changed the words "any person" to "such person as the Secretary may deem proper"?

Mr. BLANTON. No; and I will tell you why. Then the big manufacturers and business men would take advantage of this amendment by making the Government do their research work. Not far outside of the city of St. Louis, as you go in on the Pennsylvania Railroad, you will see the big laboratory for which Libby & Co. have had to expend thousands of dollars. Instead of maintaining laboratories like that, the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey would see that some of his big manufacturers would send down here and get information from the Secretary of Agriculture for which they are now paying their own experts; and then when the little farmer from New Jersey wrote to the Secretary there would be discrimination. I say this amendment in its final analysis might cost this Government $100,000,000 a year in expenses if we really carried out the purpose of the words of the amendment as it is written, because it says any person is entitled at any time with reference to any kind of commodity that comes within the term "food or drugs" to write to the Secretary of Agriculture and have him make an expert chemical analysis of it and give it to him either privately or publicly. I say I do not believe the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey wants that done. Here is what has happened. One of his constituents has written the Secretary of Agriculture on some private matter and asked him to give him a chemical analysis and the Secretary has refused. It has made his constituent angry, and he has written the distinguished gentleman, and, just as is always the case, the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey is right on the floor here attending to his people's business. He is one of the Members always here; he is alert and faithful, and he is not going to let his constituents in New Jersey be turned down by the Secretary of Agriculture, and therefore he has attempted to put this amendment on the bill. But the amendment ought to be defeated.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were 5 ayes and 25 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collaboration with other departments of the Government desiring chemical investigations and whose heads request the Secretary of Agriculture for such assistance, and for other miscellaneous work, $14,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Forest Service, $6,583,582.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the next paragraph of this bill is very important and there are several important amendments to be offered, and I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.]. Fifty-eight Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13481, and finding itself without a quorum he had directed the roll to be called; that 120 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

Total, Bureau of Soils, $358,975.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to suggest to the majority leader that the best thing to do would be to take a recess until next Wednesday, and on Wednesday take a recess until the following Wednesday. We are just wasting time here. It is evident that we will be doing nothing but calling the roll next week, and I do not see why the record of those who have been regular in their attendance should be spoiled by having it appear that they have failed to answer to their names next week.

Mr. DOWELL. Does not the gentleman expect to be here next week?

Mr. LONDON. I expect to come here on Wednesday, in order to make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, the gentleman does not want to be here next week, and therefore he does not want roll calls without his being present. That is the fact, is it?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I am satisfied that there will be no further roll calls until the time when the gentleman from Minnesota concludes to rise this evening, and I think we will make excellent progress.

Mr. LONDON. I know, but I think you will find yourselves in the same situation to-morrow. Somebody will make a motion to amend an appropriation item by adding 67 cents, will be disgruntled because it is not agreed to, and will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. When we reach a serious controversy, if we do reach one, a little later, we will rise. In the meantime we are making very good progress.

Mr. LONDON. I think we will do no business at all next week.

The Clerk read as follows:

PREVENTING SPREAD OF MOTHS.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the continued spread of the gypsy and brown-tail moths by conducting such experiments as may be necessary to determine the best methods of controlling these insects; by introducing and establishing the parasites and natural enemies of these insects and colonizing them within the infested territory; by establishing and maintaining a quarantine against further spread in such manner as is provided by the general nursery-stock law, approved August 20, 1912, as amended, entitled "An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests, to permit and regulate the movements of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, and for other purposes," in cooperation with the authorities of the different States concerned and with the several State experiment stations, including rent outside of the District of Columbia, the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $531,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13481 and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 13559; Rept. No. 1315) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time and, together with the report thereon, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma reserves all points of order on the bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be allowed to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I desire to pursue my discussion of the subject of immigration, which was injected into the consideration of the Agricultural bill this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I very greatly regret that under the circumstances I feel I must object. I have so frequently objected to requests of that sort from the other side that, in fairness, I must object now. I think during the consideration of the Agricultural bill to-morrow the gentleman will probably have an opportunity to discuss the matter, and then there will be general debate upon the Interior bill following that.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. If I could have assurance that I might have time to-morrow, I would withdraw my request. I would like to discuss the matter during the consideration of the present measure.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is present, and I think he can assure the gentleman he will have time in general debate.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not sure that we will have any time to-morrow for general debate.

Mr. MONDELL. I mean when the bill is taken up.

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume that that will be the case.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES FOR THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MANN.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, January 14, 1923, be set apart for the holding of memorial exercises in honor of our lately deceased colleague, Mr. JAMES R. MANN.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askell;

H. R. 5349. An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels;

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case;

H. R. 8996. An act to amend section 5211 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 12174. An act to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary;

H. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening, in connection with lands opened or restored to entry, to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War; and

H. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to permit to remain within the United States certain aliens admitted temporarily under bond in excess of quotas fixed under authority of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3275. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, Army nurses, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, and to certain maimed soldiers, sailors, and marines.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. I make that request in order that we may conclude the consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill in committee at a reasonably early hour to-morrow. I think no other business will be taken up after that bill is disposed of.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Do I understand that the gentleman does not object to my request for unanimous consent?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I shall have to object to the gentleman's request to address the House at the beginning of the session for 15 minutes. I think the gentleman will have no difficulty in finding time to make his statement to-morrow, but in just that form I should have to object to his request in order to be fair to other gentlemen who have been denied similar requests.

Mr. CRAMTON. Would the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming indicate that in no event will the Interior bill be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if we could take the Interior bill up until late, and therefore I do not think that would be wise. I presume that the gentleman from Michigan does not desire to do that.

If we get through this bill at an early hour, I would like very much to take up the other bill, but I think it will take some time to conclude the consideration of this bill. To-morrow is Saturday and there is no doubt some Christmas shopping is still to be done.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether he has consulted with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not, but the suggestion was made to me by gentlemen on your side.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman just state the reason why we ought to be driven under whip and spur here on Christmas Eve?

Mr. MONDELL. We are not driving under whip and spur, it seems to me. We are meeting a little earlier in order that we may not be driven.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Surely a man is entitled to a little time to buy his children a wagon or make some preparation for the occasion. The gentleman has arranged a program here that will keep us in session all of next week.

Mr. MONDELL. Not until Wednesday. Wagons will have been bought and will be in use before that time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They will be repairing the wagon on Wednesday.

Mr. MONDELL. I expect to have such a job on hand.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not think the gentleman ought to push us so hard. It occurs to me our regular meeting hour is bad enough on a day which is really Christmas Eve.

Mr. MONDELL. May I again suggest that the request I have made came from the gentleman's side of the House.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will this bill come to a final vote to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. The bill is not to be voted on in the House to-morrow.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But the statement was made——

Mr. MONDELL. We contemplate complete consideration in the Committee.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Do I understand the request carries with it the agreement that the bill is not to be voted on to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. That agreement was made this afternoon.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It has been made in the Committee but not in the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, it is a gentlemen's agreement and it will be followed, whether made in one place or the other.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I did not hear it; I was out answering roll calls.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION.

Resolved, That JOHN PAUL, Member of Congress from the seventh district of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committees of the House as follows: The Merchant Marine and Fisheries and Labor.

The question was taken and the resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks on the subject of refugees which was discussed by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, myself, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent—

Mr. EVANS was granted leave of absence until January 10, 1923, on account of business.

Mr. MORGAN was granted leave of absence for two days, on account of important business.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ was granted leave of absence until January 10, on account of personal matters.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. SPEARS was granted leave of absence for three days, on account of death.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 23, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

852. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, with a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, a draft of proposed legislation authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to expend $35,000 from the funds held by the United States in trust for the Osage Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma for the purpose of paving portions of streets and alleys adjoining Osage tribal property within the incorporated town of Pawhuska, Okla. (H. Doc. No. 518); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOCH: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 12777. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the cities of Grand Forks, N. Dak., and East Grand Forks, Minn., or either of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Red River of the North; without amendment (Rept. No. 1312). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HOCH: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 13271. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State of North Dakota and the State of Minnesota, the county of Pembina, N. Dak., and the county of Kittson, Minn., or any one of them, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.; with amendments (Rept. No. 1313). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KNUTSON: Committee on Pensions. H. R. 13397. A bill repealing so much of an act approved September 22, 1922, granting pension to certain soldiers and sailors and their widows, as grants a pension of $24 per month to Carl Olsen, late of the United States Navy; without amendment (Rept. No. 1314). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee of Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13356) granting an increase of pension to Hyram Colwell, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 13550) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Elephant Butte irrigation district, of New Mexico, and the El Paso County improvement district No. 1, of Texas, for the carrying out of the provisions of the convention between the United States and Mexico proclaimed January 16, 1907, and providing for compensation therefor; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 13551) authorizing officers who were retired for incapacity resulting from an incident of the service before July 1, 1922, to be given the same pay, according to longevity, as if retired after June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 13552) to extend the provisions of the Federal highway act to Alaska; to the Committee on Roads.

6677. Also, petition of Mr. J. I. Hegge and 45 others, of Maddock, N. Dak., petitioning for the enactment of emergency legislation to stabilize the price of farm products to a level more nearly equal to the price that the farmer has to pay for articles which he purchases; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for the angels' song of peace and good will to men, and we long for the time when that peace and good will shall be realized in human hearts and lives, that men shall understand one another and man to man be true as a brother. We long to see the time when war and its desolating and destructive influences shall cease and nations shall learn war no more. O for the coming of those thousand years pledged.

And we do ask Thee that this day our hearts may be gladdened by the thought that each one of us can be the minister of peace and good will to tried and sad hearts, as well as to the children and youth of our day. We ask in Christ Jesus' name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3275. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, Army nurses, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, and to certain maimed soldiers, sailors, and marines;

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askeli;

H. R. 5349. An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels;

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case;

H. R. 8996. An act to amend section 5211 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 12174. An act to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary;

H. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing a preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War; and

H. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to permit to remain within the United States certain aliens admitted temporarily under bond in excess of quotas fixed under authority of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

SENATOR FROM CONNECTICUT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is in receipt of a communication from the Governor of the State of Connecticut, transmitting the certificate of election of GEORGE P. MCLEAN as a Senator of the United States for the term beginning March 4, 1923, which will be read and placed on file.

The certificate was read and ordered to be placed on the files of the Senate, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
Executive Department.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1922, GEORGE P. MCLEAN was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Connecticut a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1923.

Witness: His excellency, our governor, Everett J. Lake, and our seal hereto affixed at Hartford, this 20th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.]

EVERETT J. LAKE, Governor.
DONALD J. WARNER, Secretary.

SENATOR GEORGE W. NORRIS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was absent from the Senate Chamber yesterday, and he may be absent for several days. He was called away on a message informing him of the serious illness of a member of his family. He wished me to announce his absence in the event a vote was taken. I believe there was no vote taken yesterday, but as unanimous consent was asked and agreed to, to which possibly he might have objected had he been present, I wish the RECORD to show his necessary absence on yesterday, and the reason for it.

DEFLATION POLICY OF FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a few weeks ago the Wall Street Journal addressed 12 questions to me regarding the deflation policy of the Federal Reserve Board. I answered those questions, and the questions and answers have been printed in the Wall Street Journal. I ask to have them printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in 8-point type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SENATOR HEFLIN REPLIES.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.
October 3, 1922.

DEAR SIR: I thank you for printing in the Wall Street Journal of September 26, my letter to you of September 12, in which I believe I exploded the claim of ex-Governor Harding of the Federal Reserve Board, which had been printed in your columns, that:

"The Federal reserve banks in acquiring building sites and constructing bank buildings were making capital expenditures, consequently these operations do not diminish in any way the amount of franchise taxes payable to the United States Government."

I gave you figures which showed that the reserve banks had for the years 1918, 1919, 1920, 1921 charged off over $10,000,000 for alleged depreciation in bank buildings, most of which were as yet unfinished, and had also charged against net earnings about $4,000,000 more for furniture, equipment, vaults, etc.; but my statement was over-conservative, for I omitted important "charge offs" in the calendar year 1921, which would have brought the total of such charges against net earnings and profits up to more than $15,500,000. As a result of those bookkeeping entries the Federal Government was plainly robbed of many millions of dollars to which it was entitled, despite ex-Governor Harding's unwarranted assertion that the cost of land and buildings were "capital expenditures" and that "these operations do not diminish in any way" the franchise taxes due the Government.

You suggest that—

"Granting that the outlays for land and new buildings were right, sound banking and bookkeeping made these depreciation charge offs against earnings equally proper."

I know of no one who can defend the monstrous outlays which I and others criticized and condemned or who can show that either the expenditure or the charge offs were "proper." The absurdity and unfairness of the reserve bank methods of escaping payment to the Government of franchise taxes was well illustrated in the case of the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago, which purchased property in 1918 at a cost of $2,938,000, declared in the annual report for the same year that the old buildings were "not regarded as being of any value," but before the new buildings were completed the bank had charged off for alleged "depreciation" the sum of $3,024,062, a portion of which was charged against net earnings and a portion charged against "supersurplus."

BANK OF ENGLAND'S SITE.

I note your excuse that the "Bank of England" has written down to all its valuable site in the city of London; but this has been done in the course of 100 years or more, and let me remind you that the expenditures in connection with the New York Reserve Bank's banking edifices have been on such a scale that I understand that the amount paid out for commissions, fees, rake-offs of one kind or another to "architects, contractors, and engineers" in connection with that building exceed the total cost of both land and buildings of the great Bank of England, that classic structure so familiar to the banking world.

You ask that I answer for you 12 questions which you print, and I am pleased to comply with your request.

"First. Under the bank act, with limitation of dividends, are not the surplus earnings of the Federal reserve banks in effect the property of the people?"

Ninety per cent of the surplus earnings of the reserve banks, after the payment of 6 per cent dividends, belongs to the Government, are "in effect the property of the people," and when those earnings are reduced by extravagance and by improper bookkeeping entries the people are robbed.

"Second. Is not the main function of the Federal reserve system the sound underpinning of the whole financial structure?"

The main functions of the reserve system are to provide a scientific and effectual mobilization of bank reserves; to furnish a safe and elastic circulating medium; to furnish credit to member banks for the legitimate needs of those banks; and the country's business of all kinds impartially and promptly. If those banks are to have an "underpinning" of extravagance, extortion, favoritism, and incompetency, instead of being supported on the foundation stones of frugality, conservatism, impartiality, and broad statesmanship, the system is doomed.

REAL ESTATE AGAINST RENT.

"Third. Is it not sounder financial building to put surplus banking earnings into building construction, if rental charges against expenses are thereby reduced, than to use them in National Government expenditures?"

It is sound policy within certain limitations for a bank to own its banking house and thereby reduce its rental charges. But the official records show that no such excuse can be offered to justify the stupendous extravagance displayed by the reserve banks in the cases under discussion. This question is further covered in my anwer to your question No. 10.

"Fourth. Can you divide the capital and accumulated surplus of an institution and say which part has been put into the construction of a building except as a matter of bookkeeping?"

The Reserve Bank of New York in December, 1919, when the preliminary contract was given to contractors for its palatial banking quarters (originally estimated to cost about $30,000,000 and by subsequent estimate, in March, 1921, as shown in board's report to Senate October 31, 1921, reduced to $25,646,000), reported its paid-in capital at $22,387,000, and its surplus at that time, arising from the change in the Federal reserve act which enabled a reserve bank to accumulate a surplus equal to 200 per cent of its paid-in capital before paying franchise taxes to the Government, was $32,229,000. The cost of the building which it was proceeding to erect was therefore equivalent to 115 per cent of its capital, or approximately 50 per cent of the combined capital and surplus. It is immaterial whether the amount invested in banking houses is assigned to capital or to surplus.

"Fifth. Is not the substitution of building construction for rents a sound underpinning for the whole financial structure?"

The substitution of building construction for rents is not sound but a very rotten "underpinning" for the financial structure, when the yearly cost or output for its banking house is multiplied 500 per cent and more by such expenditure, and when these additional costs may involve impairment of the bank's surplus, if not of its capital. Some of the reserve banks, I am informed, are already operating at a deficit and are not making their dividends as a result of their gross extravagance, reckless management, and reduced earnings.

A QUESTION OF SERVICE.

"Sixth: Is not the soundness of the Federal reserve system, the increase of its facilities and abilities to serve the public, and the reduction of rental charges against earnings in the interest of the people and their business?

If a reduction of rental charges against earnings is "in the interest of the people and their business," the converse of that proposition suggests that such a reckless increase in housing costs as has been exposed may be regarded as distinctly against the public interest.

"Seventh: Is it anything more than a question of business judgment as to the proportion of capital or income that shall be put into buildings?"

The monstrous expenditures which have been sanctioned and are now under way, for the erection of banking palaces for some of the reserve banks, have been on such a scale that not the "judgment" but the good faith and sanity of the men who have authorized and directed some of these expenditures has been seriously brought into question. A doctor whose "judgment" impelled him to administer a dozen grains of strychnine to a patient, when only a small fraction of a grain was justified, would probably be either hung or sent to an insane asylum.

A leading and distinguished citizen of one of our large eastern cities recently declared in regard to these exposures concerning the reserve banks:

"If you think the Tweed Ring in their days and ways was any comparison with the Federal Reserve Board transaction, you misapprehend the size.

"I lived in those days, and I remember their sensations, which were tame when compared with these.

"If only the same men who got after Tweed could get after these, they would prove an ornament to the generation and have a life estate that would perpetuate the recollections.

"Then the sufferance was in one State, confined to the city of New York; now the dominion is vast, broadcast throughout the United States."

I am told that the money which it was planned to spend on the banking quarters of the New York Reserve Bank was twice as much as the "Tweed Ring" was charged with squandering in connection with the construction of the old notorious county court house in New York City.

WHO IS THE LOSER?

"Eighth. Might it not better be assumed that what is paid in taxes by the Federal reserve system is lost to the people and its Federal reserve system than to declare that building sites and bank buildings are 'actual losses which the Government has sustained?'"

It might be assumed, but it would be a false assumption. Every dollar of franchise taxes paid into the Treasury by the reserve banks reduces to that extent the amount of taxes to be paid by the people.

When money which would otherwise go into the Public Treasury is squandered on big palaces owned by the banks and not by the Government the Government is plainly the loser.

"Ninth. How can the Government or the people sustain an 'actual loss' by the substitution of construction for expenditure?"

The people did, for example, sustain an actual loss of over $6,000,000 when a few reserve banks charged against the expenses for alleged "depreciation" in bank buildings, not yet completed, over $7,000,000, over 90 per cent of which, or, say, $6,000,000, would have been paid into the Federal Treasury as franchise taxes. The Government has been deprived of millions more by their unwarranted charges made against earnings by the bank.

The people of this country also consider that the Government was unjustifiably deprived of revenues, and that public moneys were squandered when the 12 reserve banks increased their salary lists from $4,768,449 in 1918 to $19,478,250 in 1921. The board's report to the Senate also shows that one of these banks—the Federal Reserve Bank of New York—raised the salaries of about one-half of its 40 officers to more than 500 per cent of the aggregate of the salaries which they were receiving immediately before, or at the time of, their first employment by the reserve system. The official reports show that the salary of one of those 40 officers was raised to 757 per cent of the salary received immediately before employment by the reserve bank. Another was raised to 733 per cent; two more were raised to 694 per cent; and two other officers were advanced to 520 per cent of their old pay. Another was jumped to 454 per cent, and still another to 480 per cent of the salary which he was receiving about the time of his first employment by the bank. The record of a young man, originally employed by the reserve system at $3,600 as a law clerk, who was without practical banking experience, never having been employed by any bank as far as I can learn before going to the Reserve Bank of New York, but who had, in addition to his legal work, been frequently used by the Reserve Board as a lobbyist at the Capitol, was not long since rewarded by being made deputy governor of the New York reserve banks at a salary of $25,000 a year.

BETTER TO BUILD THAN SPEND.

"Tenth. Is it not better for an institution as well as an individual to build rather than to spend—to substitute a home for rents?"

According to the reserve board's reports to Congress, the total amount paid in rents in 1918 by four of the reserve banks, when business in their most important departments was far larger than it is now, or than it is likely to be for years to come, was $262,879, and in 1920, when rents were generally at their maximum, those same banks paid $590,109 for rents. Do you suggest that it is better and more economical to substitute for annual rentals of $262,879, or even $590,109, the expenditure of $49,878,914, which the board authorized those four particular banks to squander on their banking palaces upon which city taxes (if taxed at cost) and upkeep are alone estimated at over $1,500,000 a year, and the interest on the money so locked up at only 3 per cent per annum would amount to over $1,500,000 additional? If the business interests of the country generally should be conducted on any such basis as that, the country would soon become bankrupt. The money employed in those buildings would not have been taxable if loaned out on commercial or agricultural paper.

"Eleventh. Are not the post-office buildings a proper charge against postal receipts?"

No. Under our laws the Postmaster General could not use as much as $25,000 of post-office receipts to build a post office in any town or city, however greatly it might be needed, without special act of Congress. But until the reserve act was changed last winter—and I helped to have it changed—the reserve board and the reserve banks could spend any amount they pleased on banking palaces, and did actually authorize the expenditure of $25,646,410 for banking quarters for the Reserve Bank of New York alone. Furthermore, preliminary contracts for the monument of extravagance were let in December, 1919, about the very time that the New York Reserve Bank, as the records show, was borrowing from other reserve banks in different parts of the country over $100,000,000, and about the time that the Federal Reserve Board actually suspended its reserve requirements to aid the New York Reserve Bank, which in making huge loans to big speculative institutions had, in the opinion of conservative and well-informed bankers, trampled upon the most elementary precepts of prudence and sound banking. I can furnish particulars, if you want them for the information of the public.

"Twelfth. Does Senator HEFLIN approve of the post office paying large rents to private owners of property or running in debt for building construction? If not, is there any other prudent course to pursue than building construction and amortization of the cost from earnings?"

That depends upon circumstances and upon your definition of "large." Rentals of even $590,109 for four banks certainly and very obviously would not justify an expenditure of $49,878,914 for new buildings in order to avoid the payment of that rental.

I have answered frankly and, I think, fully the 12 questions which you propounded to me and printed in your columns of September 23, and I will thank you to publish my reply at your earliest convenience.

J. THOS. HEFLIN.

AN INJUSTICE TO THE SOUTH.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, on Thursday the Senate confirmed the nomination of an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and the nominations of certain members of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that south of the line drawn from Baltimore to San Francisco, which embraces the entire South and one-half of the country, there is no member on the Supreme Court, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and other commissions. I do not refer to this matter in any partisan or sectional spirit. I am sure that the Senators know that I have never uttered one word since I have been a Member of this body that would lead to partisan or sectional debate. I have given all my time to the important work of the Senate.

During the last administration I protested against the injustice done the South in the matter of these appointments. I do not expect the South to get many desirable political appointments, except those purely local, under this administration, and I have not tried in any way to influence the appointments for these positions nor do I intend to. I realize that the most desirable positions are given to the States which furnished votes for the election of President Harding, but I do think that on account of the conditions peculiar to our section we should have just representation on the Supreme Court, Interstate Commerce Commission, and other commissions.

The Supreme Court is the very foundation stone of our Government, and every section, regardless of politics, should have its fair representation. The commercial conditions in the South are different from other sections, and it is all the more important that we should have representation on the Interstate Commerce Commission, which fixes the rates for freight and passengers.

Until two years ago, when I joined several Senators and succeeded in getting the rates lowered from the Southeast, the railroad rates fixed by the commission from the Middle West to the southeastern ports were higher than to the eastern ports and discriminated against the Southeast. We protested against this injustice, and the commission lowered the rates to make them fair to all sections.

The South is discriminated against in the matter of ocean freight rates on cotton and other products. I have urged, and will continue to urge, that this injustice to the South be remedied. I have discussed this matter with several Senators on the other side of the Chamber—Republicans—and they agree that it is a great injustice to the South and should not remain so.

The South has for years been taxed many millions annually by the protective tariff. Our principal production, cotton, is exported and received no protection from the Government, while we must compete with the pauper labor of the world in producing it.

Our country has suffered in many ways from such injustice on the part of our Government. I am proud of the fact that there is no more loyal section of the United States than in all the territory I have referred to from the Potomac to the Rio Grande. It is the one section of our country where the President of the United States can go without any secret agents or bodyguards to protect him, and he is absolutely safe from all harm and danger, no matter what his politics may be.

In the Spanish-American War—I hope I may be pardoned for referring to the fact—Georgia, the State I have the honor in part to represent, sent more soldiers to the war, compared with her population, than any State in the Union. In the World War our section certainly did its full duty and always will. The danger to this country in the future will not come from the South, but from other sections.

Mr. President, I am sure that the records made by southern men in these important positions met with the approval of all the people of our entire country regardless of politics. To-day in the South there are men suitable for these positions who are the equal of Justice L. Q. C. Lamar, Chief Justice White, Justice Joseph R. Lamar, and others who made such a splendid record as members of the Supreme Court, and it is conceded by all that Judson C. Clements was one of the ablest and best men who ever served on the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Some days ago I wrote President Harding a letter, which I asked to be placed in the RECORD, which reads as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
Washington, November 29, 1922.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I wish to request your consideration of the vast section known as the South in connection with the appointments being made to fill vacancies on the United States Supreme Court and various Federal commissions. Recently two appointments have been made to the Supreme Court by naming citizens from Utah and Minnesota.

I have no desire to present any appeal from a sectional standpoint, but I feel that the people of the South should have representation on some of the courts and commissions through citizens who have a knowledge of their customs, needs, and economic relations to the whole country.

It is my information that the Interstate Commerce Commission does not have a single commissioner in its membership who comes from the entire section south of a straight line drawn from Maryland to California. The Federal Trade Commission has no member from the southern section.

I do not seek to secure any political consideration for any particular person, and I have no aspirants to suggest, but I know you will agree with me that the South can furnish splendid men with excellent knowledge of governmental and public affairs.

With high esteem, I am, very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM J. HARRIS.

GREAT PEE DEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce, in behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 4172) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Great Pee Dee River, S. C., and I submit a report (No. 963) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the bill.

Mr. DIAL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment was to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Marlboro and Darlington be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Great Pee Dee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation and at or near Society Hill, in Darlington County, S. C., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE COTTON-GROWING INDUSTRY.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Washington Post this morning contains an article from the Associated Press giving the amount of cotton exported for the month of November, and the amount consumed by the spinners of the United States for that month. The total exportation and home consumption amounts to 1,435,878 bales of cotton. At this rate of consumption by our spinners and including also the amount of exports, it would require nearly 2,000,000 bales of cotton more than the Government says the present crop will be. The Government estimates that the present crop will be less than 10,000,000 bales.

Texas is the largest cotton-producing State in the Union, and the commissioner of agriculture of that State has said that it costs about 25 cents a pound to produce the present crop for the State of Texas. I submit in the face of the fact that we have a crop too small to meet the world's demands, and in the face of the fact that it costs 25 cents a pound to produce it, that three-fourths of this crop has already gone out of the hands of the producer at a price less than 25 cents a pound. Much of it has been sold at unprofitable prices to the producer. There is only about one-fourth of it remaining in the hands of the producers and the price is now about 26 cents a pound.

There is no justification or excuse for the present price. The bear speculators are in control of the market and they are depressing the price and by their manipulation holding the price down which to-day, if the law of supply and demand was permitted to operate, would be 30 cents a pound and above.

I simply wanted to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate and the country so that they may know of this deplorable situation. Something has got to be done to enable the farmer of the South to produce cotton at a profit. If he had to-day a credit system under which he could borrow money on his cotton and hold it off the market, he could force the price up to 30 cents a pound. He could force it to a figure that would yield a profit. But not having a credit system responsive to the needs of agriculture he is at the mercy of the bear gamblers of Wall Street, who are to-day forcing cotton out of his hands at a price barely covering the cost of production, and after they get the cotton into their hands it will go to 30 cents a pound and perhaps higher. The speculator and foreign spinner will reap the benefit while the producer is robbed of the fruits of his toil. Senators, this situation is outrageous and indefensible. Something must be done before this Congress adjourns to free our distressed cotton producers from the clutches of market crooks and bear speculators. The business of the cotton producer must be put upon a sound and prosperous basis.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NICHOLSON:

A bill (S. 4230) authorizing the acquirement of a site and the construction of a building for a post office at Boulder, Colo.; and

A bill (S. 4231) authorizing the acquirement of a site and the construction of a building for a post office at Brighton, Colo.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

STATISTICS OF FOREIGN COMMERCE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce came over from the House a short time ago with some minor amendments, and I intended to move to concur in those amendments, but the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desired that the bill go to conference, so that he could investigate it. He made the investigation and has no objection to it. So the conference report was returned to the Senate. The House has acted upon it, and I ask that the conference report may be acted upon at this time.

The report was read and agreed to as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Christmas season is at hand and we are about to adjourn for the observance of Christmas Day. On that subject, I have a brief article from the Christian Observer, of Louisville. In this time of strife, contention, and unrest all over the world, when everybody is seeking peace and contentment and so many are not finding those things, I believe this to be an appropriate time to read the article in question, as expressive of a true sense of appreciation of the spirit of the occasion and as pointing the only true path to peace and remedy for unrest. With the indulgence of the Senate I shall read it:

CHRISTMAS—THE PINNACLE OF THE YEAR.

"Christmas is the pinnacle of the year. No normal heart in a land of light can completely escape the contagion of the Christmas spirit. Society, business, church, and home—all come under the spell of its mystic power. Like a great white flower, rich with foliage red and green, the Christmas season bursts through the snows of midwinter and fills the land with the fragrance of kindliness and with the beauty of happiness.

"There is a bit of magic in the air on Christmas Day. There is something that makes folk smile, whether they are wont to smile or not. There is unheard music that throbs in people's very pulses and warms their hearts and gladdens their countenances. There seems to be a bit more of Heaven in the earth. Yes, that is just it—there is more of Heaven in the earth! The Babe of Bethlehem is in the thoughts of men, and the angels' song is echoing in their ears. Let the joy bells ring!

"The birth of the blessed Jesus compels humanity's acclaim. The angels could not be silent when the manger of Bethlehem cradled Him; neither can men be silent when the circling year brings round the season of His advent. With shepherds and Magi and heavenly heralds, we must burst into praise. 'For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon His shoulder; and His name shall be called Wonderful Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace.' Mankind's chiefest need is the need of a Prince. Humanity's most pathetic want is the want of peace. Let the star shine far, and the angels' song be caroled in every land and tongue! For the Virgin's Child is the hope of the world!

"The world needs the Christmas spirit. For the Christmas spirit is a spirit of human brotherhood—'Peace on earth; good will among men!' For 2,000 years the proclamation has echoed in the skies. How long, O Lord, ere it shall echo in the hearts of nations, in the halls of state, and in the parliament of man? Let not hope and courage fail. The war clouds still are red, but the Prince of Peace must triumph. Had the carol of the heavely host found a truer echo in the lives of professing Christians, His coming had not been so long delayed.

"Every community needs the Christmas spirit. For Christmas is a festival of friendship and cheerful generosity. It is the season of God's greatest gift to men. None can enter into the real joy of Christmas without giving. They find the sweetest joy who give to those who can make no return. Such giving partakes most truly of the spirit of Him who gave gifts unto men, and who said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'

"Every home needs the spirit of Christmas. For the spirit of Christmas is a spirit of love and tender thoughtfulness; it is a spirit of self-forgetfulness, and the happy giving of one's self, in gentle ministries, to those with whom one lives. That is the spirit that creates a home. Jesus has taught us the spiritual secrets that make happy home life possible. He has sanctified wedlock and revealed the glory that belongs to childhood. Our ideal of the home has not come out of a king's palace or a lordly mansion, but out of a stable and a carpenter's cot. Christmas is the high carnival of the home. It is the season for sweet reunions and for love's most lavish expressions. It is a season also when homes should be opened to the homeless. Christmas is preeminently the children's festival. It is a day that ought to be filled brimful of joy for every child. But let the joy be sanctified by thoughts of the Holy Child Jesus.

"Thank God for Christmas! Thank Him again for the people who have Christmas in their hearts the whole year round!"

I ask that what I have just read may be printed in the regular RECORD type.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the order previously made, until Wednesday, December 27, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 23, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, O Lord, for earth's gladdest day! Thou wilt soon speak Thy deepest note of love! We bless Thee that in the new earth that He shall bring there shall be no hate, and in His Heaven there shall be no cloud. We thank Thee that Thou dost satisfy the hunger-cry of earth. Let the angels' song break forth and flood the unborn years with peace. Give unto all of us the spirit that fulfills the obligations of His mission. Spirit of God, descend upon our whole land and awaken the wearied hearts of men with Christmas cheer and good will. Bind our citizenship together in confidence and create in it strong desires for the things that ennoble our Republic. The Lord bless our President and fill all homes with the sweetest joy. Remember the children, and may they bring to their parents increasing comfort while the days go by. And O the loved ones not at home and far away and the families separated—gather them all beneath the shadow of Thy wing and keep us all strong and pure in the faith of our Heavenly Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS—REREFERENCE OF BILLS.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12157 and the bill H. R. 12545, omnibus pension bills, be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the two bills referred to, omnibus pension bills that are on the calendar, be rereferred to the Committee on Pensions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the proposed tariff on potash.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that before the recent tariff act became a law and while the bill was still before Congress an attempt was made to impose a small duty on potash imported for fertilizer purposes, to be limited to a period of three years, after which potash was to be placed on the free list.

It is a recognized fact that this country is dependent upon foreign potash for its supply for fertilizer uses, and that the producers in Germany and France practically have a monopoly of this business. This situation was brought home to American farmers with bitterness and to their great cost during the World War, and led to various experiments looking to the establishment of the potash industry in this country with a view to making us independent of the foreign monopoly.

Potash production got under way in America as a result of World War necessities and had already made considerable progress when this tariff duty on potash was proposed. It was not certain that the industry could be developed to that point where it would actually supply all the potash needed in the United States. Some people had doubts that it ever could be, while others were more confident. However, some very eminent authorities believed the experiment was worth trying anyway, and that, even if it did not turn out that we would be able finally to produce all the potash required for our domestic needs, we might succeed in producing enough to hold the foreign monopoly somewhat in check maybe and tend to stabilize the price at a reasonable figure.

At any rate, the tariff duty was to be kept on potash for only three years. If in that time the experiment of domestic production succeeded, well and good; the industry might take care of itself without the tariff after that, and the fact that potash was then to go onto the free list would prevent the establishment of a potash monopoly right here at home in the place of the foreign monopoly it was hoped to escape from by this experiment.

On the other hand, if the experiment did not work the tariff duty would have been imposed for only three years, and would cost the individual farmer very little, comparatively speaking—the average Vermont farmer about 75 cents a year—and agriculture and allied trades would then have definite proof that they had little or nothing to expect from a domestic product—in the immediate future, anyway—and would make plans accordingly. Meanwhile potash would be on the free list.

It was simply the same old common-sense proposition to employ the policy of a protective tariff for the purpose of establishing an American industry that would render the American farmer independent of a foreign monopoly—in one of his necessities, anyway.

Some of us voted for this proposition, but it failed to carry, and potash went onto the free list, leaving the country wholly at the mercy of the foreign potash monopoly.

In view of this fact no doubt the following letter from the Hon. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, will be of interest to many people, especially to our farmer neighbors. The news contained in it is only the first whiff from the potash beds of Germany and France since the free traders won out on this item. Here is the letter:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 13, 1922.

Hon. FRANK L. GREENE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am pleased to acknowledge your communication of December 11, wherein you ask for verification of information to the effect that potash prices in Germany have increased 250 per cent over the prices of October 1.

In reply you are informed that a cable report received in the Department November 11, 1922, from Commercial Attaché C. E. Herring, at Berlin, stated among other things that "inland potash prices effective November 3 increased approximately 250 per cent over those of October 1."

For your further information I might state that a cable report received a few days ago from Mr. Herring covering the month of November, 1922, advises that German potash prices effective December 1 were approximately 145 per cent higher than those of November 1.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13481, the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13481, the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13481, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this item carries the sum of $531,000 for the purpose of dealing with the gypsy and brown-tail moths. It has been but a few years since this disease was imported from foreign countries to the Eastern States.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman please state on which page the item is?

Mr. RAKER. On pages 50 and 51, beginning with line 21 on page 50 and ending with line 16 on page 51.

When the legislation was before the Committee on Agriculture a great effort was made to defeat it on the ground that there was about $100,000 worth of equipment all over the East held by foreign importers. In other words, the question of quarantine intervened.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOWELL. Was this paragraph pending last evening?

Mr. RAKER. That is a very legitimate inquiry. The RECORD shows, Mr. Chairman, that this paragraph was read last night, and I rose to be recognized. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] moved that the Committee rise, and the Committee rose, and we are now back to the consideration of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from California is entitled to be heard on the item.

Mr. RAKER. Each year there has been expended about this amount by the Federal Government. The State of Massachusetts and the State of New York, I think, have expended a large amount of money for the same purpose.

The only purpose that I have in calling the attention of the committee to this is that it shows what will be done and what can be done by our leniency in permitting foreign infected plants and bulbs to enter the United States, and the large amount of money required to eradicate them after they have once entered. I call particularly to the attention of our good friends from the East the fact that like or similar conditions that destroy the products of the West should be given consideration along with and in connection with the appropriation for the eradication of various diseases and pests in the East, and I therefore trust that when we reach certain items on the next page our friends from the East who are procuring such large appropriations will see that like consideration is extended to the protection of the crops in the various Western States.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PREVENTION OF SPREAD OF EUROPEAN CORN BORER.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to meet the emergency caused by the spread of the European corn borer and to provide means for the control and prevention of spread of this insect throughout the United States, in cooperation with the States concerned, including employment of persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and all other necessary expenses, $200,000: Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture $75,000 of this amount shall be available for expenditure only when an equal amount shall have been appropriated, subscribed, or contributed by States, counties, or local authorities, or by individuals or organizations for the accomplishment of such purposes.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over for the present. My colleague [Mr. HAUGEN] has an amendment which he desires to offer to this paragraph, and I make the request because he is not present at the moment. He will be here in a few moments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed over for the moment without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there are about 20 Members of Congress assembled here to pass this Agricultural appropriation bill. We have already agreed that we will not take the final vote on it until after the holidays. If we are going to pass over a paragraph from time to time to accommodate some particular absent Member, there is no use in holding these men here and keeping them from their Christmas shopping. I object. I think if we are going to pass this bill we ought to pass it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. DOWELL. I make this request, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that my colleague [Mr. HAUGEN] has prepared and desires to offer an amendment to increase the appropriation, I think, some $200,000. I move to strike out, in line 24, page 51, the figures "$200,000" and insert "$400,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DOWELL. I ask this in behalf of my colleague [Mr. HAUGEN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOWELL: Page 51, line 24, strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000."

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman know whether the Department of Agriculture wants this? I think we ought to give them every dollar they need to fight the corn borer, but if they do not need it, I think it is mere folderol and rot to appropriate more money than they ask for.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is correct; but my understanding is that this corn borer is spreading very rapidly and that more money is needed than has been appropriated in order to check the spread of the borer. I should like to ask if the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. ANDERSON] will report the information he has relative to this appropriation?

Mr. ANDERSON. I shall be very glad to make a complete statement of the situation in my own time, if the gentleman desires me to do so. I do not care to go into it piecemeal.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Doctor Howard, on page 315 of the hearings before the committee, says:

We ask for no increase there. The European corn borer spread into Rhode Island and Maine this past year and made a slight spread along the southern border of Lake Erie, but the work we are carrying on is the same as last year, and I do not know if you want any further work on it or not.

Mr. DOWELL. As I understand, this pest has spread into the State of Michigan and other States, and I would like to have the chairman of the subcommittee explain the situation, if he will.

Mr. ANDERSON. I shall be very glad to do so. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. The statement was made a moment ago that there were only 20 Members present. I want to correct that statement. There are 30 Members present. I have counted them.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, if there were any likelihood, if, indeed, there were any possibility, of eradicating the corn borer from the United States I would unhesitatingly be in favor of any appropriation, however large, to accomplish that purpose. The situation at present is this: The corn borer came to this country prior to the passage of the plant quarantine act, in a shipment of broom corn from some foreign country, if my recollection is correct. The first infestation was found in the neighborhood of Boston, Mass. It has never been possible to control that infestation, which has now spread to the neighboring States of New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island.

In addition to this infestation there is a smaller one in eastern New York and another larger one in western New York, northern Ohio, and southeastern Michigan, around Lake Erie. The infestation in the vicinity of Boston and in Boston is very intense. There the insect has two broods a year, whereas in the other places it has only one. I may say that in one stage of its life history this corn borer is a moth, and if during the season when it is in that stage there are high winds it spreads to very great distances.

The infestations in and around Lake Erie are very slight indeed, and practically no commercial damage is done there, the infestation amounting to about 1 per cent; that is, a worm in 1 stalk in 100. In addition to infesting corn this worm infests all kinds of hollow-stemmed plants and weeds. In the Boston district the weeds are full of them. It affects certain kinds of hollow-stemmed flowering plants. The consequence is that it is utterly impossible to eradicate it without destroying altogether all vegetation in the district in which it is located, either by gas flames or by chemicals of some sort. The impossibility of eradicating the worm and the insect in a district like Boston, where it infests the garden plots all through the city and the weedy spaces in the vacant lots and in the marshes, is perfectly obvious, and I do not believe there is a single entomologist in the United States of any repute whatever who believes it is possible to eradicate the corn borer from this country; because in addition to burning all vegetation in the district in which it is located it would be necessary to have the complete cooperation of everybody who grows anything in that district.

It has been very difficult to control the spread of the insect in and around Lake Erie because of the light infestation and the small commercial damage, which does not give the farmers the fear that would impel them to adopt the methods and give the cooperation necessary to eradicate the insect there.

There are two or three things which can be done to control the spread of this insect in this country. The first is by quarantine, preventing its spread by commercial shipments of corn or other plants which may be infested.

The second method is by clean-up measures in the cornfields and in the garden patches in the fall of the year, both of the stalks of corn and of the weeds in the fence corners, and so forth; that will destroy a certain proportion of the worms and thus retard the new growths.

The third method is by the introduction of parasites. The Bureau of Entomology is now engaged in a very thorough survey in the sections of Europe where this corn borer is found, studying the parasites with a view of reproducing in this country the complete environment of the corn borer abroad. It infests the corn-growing sections all along the southern Mediterranean, but there the parasites are so numerous that the commercial damage is practically negligible. More than a million of one species of parasites were liberated in this country last year, and it is expected that by the use of parasites in the infested sections of the country it will be possible to control the damage of the insect and in part to control its spread.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Just how does the insect operate, and to what extent does it damage the crops, and has the insect yet gotten into the large corn-growing sections of the country?

Mr. ANDERSON. As I say, in one stage of the life history of this insect or bug it is a sort of grub that infests the corn stalk and sometimes comes up through the end of the ear of corn. It is often confused with the ordinary corn worm that we find in the corn-growing sections of the country. It performs very much like it when it reaches the ear of corn. The commercial damage depends altogether upon the extent of the infestation. If the infestation is very heavy, it is sufficient practically to destroy the utility of the corn altogether, particularly sweet corn.

So far the borer has not reached any of the great corn-growing sections of the country. It has been found two townships west of Detroit, Mich. That is as far west as it has gone. It will probably not infest the corn-growing section of southern Ohio and Indiana, because of the divide there between the rivers running north into the Lakes and the rivers running south into the Ohio. If it should ever get over that divide, for example, if some corn stalks that were infested should be carried over the divide and float down the river toward the Ohio, there might be the possibility of infesting the corn-growing sections there.

Mr. MONDELL. Then, as I understand the gentleman who has given a great deal of study to this question, it is admitted by practically all the students of the habits of this insect and its infestation that it is impossible to entirely eradicate it, and the best that can be done is a reasonable control of it, and that can be done with the appropriation that is made in this bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. The appropriation as it stands is the amount recommended by the Budget officer and the amount recommended by the Department of Agriculture to the Budget. It covers the quarantine in part; it covers the control of the spread of the disease, the putting on of the campaign for the cleaning up of the fields, the scouting work that is being done to prevent the spread into new territory; and I think it is as large as can be economically used for the purpose.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. According to the statement of the gentleman, what is being done by the department is to retard the spread. There is no statement the gentleman has made to indicate that it is being eradicated. The gentleman says it is spreading constantly and that what is being done now by the department is merely to retard this spread.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Now, if the gentleman will yield, the spread of this insect eventually, according to the statement of the gentleman, unless something is done more than is now being done by the department, will extend into Indiana, Ohio, and through the Corn Belt of the Middle West. Is it not possible, if a sufficient appropriation is made, that this can not only be retarded but a great deal done toward blotting it out and eventually entirely destroying it?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it possible at all. I think it is probably inevitable that the corn borer will eventually reach the great corn-growing section of the country.

Mr. DOWELL. Does that mean destruction?

Mr. ANDERSON. No. It is altogether probable that we can introduce the parasitic environment of the insect, and the damage will be very slight if that can be done.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the gentleman comes to this proposition that after its spread into the Corn Belt we will proceed to blot it out.

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. DOWELL. As it stands now we will let it spread, making slight efforts to retard it, but eventually it will get where we will have to take hold of it in earnest.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; we will do everything that is possible to retard its spread, but my judgment is that any program based on eradication of the corn borer in the United States can not succeed and will simply be a waste of money. The $200,000 that the gentleman proposes would not be a drop in the bucket on a program of eradicating the pest. Ten million dollars would not be enough; you would have to burn up all the vegetation of every sort in the section in which the pest is working. You would have to compensate the owners, and you would practically have to clean up the whole area of vegetation for years.

Mr. DOWELL. But that is much cheaper than to have this pest spread into the Corn Belt and destroy corn growing in the future.

Mr. ANDERSON. You can not possibly destroy the pest in this country; you can not completely eradicate it.

Mr. MONDELL. The position of the gentleman from Minnesota is that there is no possibility of eradicating it by any effective means.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think that is the judgment of the entymologists of this country. It is certainly mine.

Mr. MONDELL. And we must simply introduce the parasites, the counterpests and the counterirritants that keep the insect under control in the land of its nativity.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; and prevent its spread.

Mr. DOWELL. According to the gentleman, it will spread into every part of the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think that is possible.

Mr. DOWELL. And according to the gentleman, it will spread into every section of the country; and is it not better and easier now to plan to blot it out, if we can possibly do it?

Mr. ANDERSON. It would be a sheer waste to spend a little more money on it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, in order that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] may present his amendment, I desire to withdraw my amendment, which was offered in view of the fact that the gentleman from Iowa was not then in the Chamber.

Mr. ANDERSON. I suppose I still have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one question. The chairman has explained what the Federal Government is doing under this appropriation and has stated that the amount of the appropriation is sufficient. Is it not a fact that in addition to what the Federal Government is doing there is a large cooperative work being done by the States?

Mr. ANDERSON. It has not been as large as it ought to have been, but it will be larger the next year by considerable.

Mr. DOWELL. Let me say——

Mr. ANDERSON. I believe I have the floor, and I would like to keep it.

Mr. DOWELL. I simply wanted to say that if it is not permitted to spread into the States, the States will not be required to make an appropriation.

Mr. McKENZIE. As I understand this appropriation, it is simply to pay experts to travel over the country to investigate, to ascertain, whether or not certain sections are infested with this pest.

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

Mr. McKENZIE. In other words, it does not carry with it any police regulation that would enable the expenditure of money in eradicating this pest, and if that is true, then $200,000 would not amount to anything.

Mr. ANDERSON. We have, of course, no Federal police regulations which would enable us to control the pest in any event. Police regulations are always enforced by the State boards, the bureaus of entomology, because they have police powers which we have not. I do not want to leave the impression, however, that all that is being done is to scout around and see where this bug is. A very strict quarantine is being maintained, and in addition to that, in cooperation with the States, a campaign is being conducted to clean up the pest, so far as that is possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask some other questions of the gentleman from Minnesota. At the present time there are but very few States that will contribute to the blotting out of this pest. There is not a State in the Union that is not just as much interested in the matter as is the State where the pest has already taken hold. Under this condition the States will contribute only a very small amount, and is it not better for the States all to contribute and stop this pest where it is than to leave it to the cooperation of two or three States that are now infected? All of the other States have very much interest in the matter.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman's question is like the question of the lawyer who asked the witness whether he had stopped beating his wife. Whatever you answer it is wrong. The assumption is wrong to begin with that it is probably possible to stop this pest where it is.

Mr. DOWELL. I think if we are going to assume that nothing can be done to stop this pest, then we must assume that it is already beyond control, and that it is too late to do anything.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Does the gentleman subscribe to the chairman's statement as to how this pest is spread; by high winds in the moth stage, as one of the commonest ways of spreading?

Mr. DOWELL. I know nothing of this. If it is spread in that way, there is not any question in the world but that it will spread all over the United States.

Mr. BEGG. Then any appropriation we might make will not stop it, except absolute eradication.

Mr. DOWELL. But it is much easier to stop it if it is in only two or three places than if it is in many.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in stopping this pest, and like the gentleman I would vote for any appropriation that would accomplish the result, but is not the gentleman afraid that some of this money might blow on the wind just like the borer is being blown?

Mr. DOWELL. I am assuming that the department will earnestly make an endeavor to do everything possible to stop the spread of this pest.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I rose also to make a more serious inquiry, and that is this: For what purpose is it proposed that this additional $200,000 shall be used? It is plain that it can not be used for eradication.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, in order that the gentleman may have a complete answer to his question, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment that I have offered, in order that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] may offer an amendment which he desires to offer to this section and which I favor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is there any difference between the amendment the gentleman has offered and the amendment that his colleague desires to offer? If there is not, why does not the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] take some time now?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not know what the gentleman's amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, that could not authorize an amendment that is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAUGEN: Page 51, line 24, strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000."

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is to increase the appropriation from $200,000 to $500,000. I was pleased to hear the chairman of the committee state that we should do everything in our power to restrict and eradicate this pest. I am heartily in accord with that. I take it that the only way to eradicate this pest is by clipping its wings, and the only way that you can clip its wings is to provide for adequate funds to stop the spread of the pest.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman believe that it is possible to eradicate this pest?

Mr. HAUGEN. I am not an expert on that, but whether it can be done or not it is our duty to do our best to stop it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. What I had in mind was to get whatever information the gentleman has obtained from his extended study of this question as to the possibility of eradication. It has been asserted by some that it is impossible to eradicate it.

Mr. HAUGEN. The information that I can give is that evidently adequate appropriations have not been made. It is now time that Congress does its duty and makes adequate appropriations to stop the spread of the pest. According to the testimony, the corn borer is not now in the Corn Belt west of the Mississippi. What I am trying to do is to stop it crossing the Mississippi River. It is bad enough that it should destroy the crops of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, and other Eastern and New England States.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman is not trying to draw the line at the Mississippi, I hope; some of us are east of the Mississippi.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is in the State of Wisconsin now; it has gone beyond Indiana. It is in Illinois. It is in the gentleman's State.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I want our State to be included in the stopping of this.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then, in that case, the gentleman should vote for the increase. It may be, as has been stated, that $500,000 is not adequate. I am perfectly willing to make it more; yes, $10,000,000 if the gentleman from Minnesota thinks it is necessary. I am interested in eradicating this pest.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman says that we are to blame for not appropriating enough money. Have we ever cut down the appropriation for the corn borer?

Mr. HAUGEN. We have been taking the advice of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BEGG. And the Department of Agriculture does nothing; is that the gentleman's contention?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; the representatives of the department are asking for an additional appropriation. I believe it should be granted.

Mr. BEGG. In the hearings which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] just read a few minutes ago it is stated that the department does not want any more.

Mr. HAUGEN. I can read from the hearings. Would that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. BEGG. I am not making the statement; it was the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HAUGEN. Here is the statement.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think we would all join the gentleman from Iowa in doing everything we can to eradicate this pest or keep it within certain bounds.

Mr. HAUGEN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and the honored chairman of that committee for many years, has it not been the policy of the Federal Government to make appropriations to employ experts and men well versed in all these lines to go out into the country and investigate and report on the best plan to eradicate or destroy any and all of these various pests that affect agriculture? Is not that true?

Mr. HAUGEN. The department submitted its estimate some years ago. We told the representatives at that time that the $250,000 asked was inadequate. We suggested that it make further investigation, and when it had ascertained the facts to tell us what would be required and we would make the appropriation, whether half a million or five million dollars. We felt in regard to it exactly as we felt in regard to the eradication of tuberculosis. The only way to eradicate this pest is to do what we did with the citrus canker. The department asked some $25,000 or $50,000. The committee held that the proper way to do it was not to appropriate $25,000 or $50,000 but to give whatever amount was required to stamp it out. The committee increased the appropriation over the estimates, and as a result of having adequate funds the citrus canker was stamped out. Had the same policy been pursued in the eradication or preventing the spread of these pests, we would have at least confined it to a small area and possibly have entirely eradicated it by this time. Now it has spread on. I have been told that it is in the State of Wisconsin, and according to the printed testimony it is in Michigan doing damage and in most of the States east of the Mississippi River.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask that the gentleman be given five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, following my first question on the policy of the Government, I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think it is possible for the Government with the $200,000 provided in this bill to employ a sufficient number of experts to determine on the best manner of eradicating this pest and then——

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly not. My friend, there is no question about it. We have given only $200,000, and as a result, with the appropriations made, the corn borer has been steadily moving on from the New England States to Wisconsin. What we want to do is to eradicate it, if possible to do so, rather than to only study and investigate it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then the gentleman will admit that $200,000 more would simply mean nothing at all?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not admit that. It is possible that $500,000 is not sufficient. It may be necessary to increase that amount. The corn crop for 1917 was more than 3,000,000,000 bushels, valued at more than $3,900,000,000, three times the value of the wheat crop of this country, twice the value of the cotton crop of this country. Are we going to stand by and allow that crop amounting to 3,000,000,000 bushels to be destroyed by this pest?

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. If I may have more time. First, I want to put in the RECORD exactly what representatives of the department stated, so there will be no mistake about that. I think the testimony will satisfy the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I would like to read one paragraph.

Mr. HAUGEN. I prefer to read it.

According to the testimony of Doctor Howard and Mr. Walton of the department, printed in the hearings, as before stated, that insect is spreading. I read from page 307 of the hearings:

> There has been a general spread to the northeastward, in the general direction of the prevailing wind. * * * The spread there this year equals the entire area of infestation that had occurred during previous years.

Doctor Howard asked:

> There is extraordinary damage in New England this year, is there not?
> Mr. WALTON. In New England we have a great increase of injury to garden crops. * * * There was a great deal of early sweet corn raised in the eastern New England area, and as the injury by the insect increased, farmers began to discontinue growing it, because it was unmarketable, and the consequence has been that the corn borer spread to these other crops—celery, beets, beans, and rhubarb—and at the present time the infestation in these crops is very heavy. There has been a good deal of commercial injury this fall. * * * The injury to corn was so heavy that the sweet-corn farmers have practically ceased producing it, except for local consumption. * * * The insect spread * * * to the center of New Hampshire, and they have flown along the Maine coast for a long distance. There is the heaviest infestation in Massachusetts and New England this year that ever has existed. * * * We are merely attempting to maintain quarantine, scouting, and limiting the area of the infestation (p. 308).

CANADA.

> Mr. WALTON. A very intense infestation of the corn borer was discovered near St. Thomas, in southern Ontario, in 1920. * * * There was very severe injury to corn. Some of the flint-corn fields were an entire loss. Since then either the insect has spread, or the scouting work has been much more effective, and it has been found that practically the entire southern half of the Province of Ontario is infested with the insect (p. 309).
> Mr. ANDERSON. Have we got a prospect of getting this bug all over the United States in due time (p. 309)?
> Mr. WALTON. It looks that way, although perhaps the spread will be slow.

(Page 307.)

> Mr. WALTON (referring to Michigan). There is some apparent injury; for instance, one shipment of sweet corn was taken to a canning factory which had 7 per cent of the ears infested, but that was from a single farm.
>
> Doctor HOWARD. We are making a more intense study of European parasites than ever before.
> Mr. WALTON. The New York people are doing what they can in the way of education, and we are receiving active cooperation from the State people, the New York and Massachusetts people.
> Mr. ANDERSON. Is there any clean-up work?
> Mr. WALTON. The commissioner of Massachusetts is endeavoring now to secure funds for that purpose. He thinks he can get $100,000, but he wants the Federal Government to help him. * * * In Massachusetts the funds are insufficient for that purpose.
>
> Mr. WALTON. The States furnished this year, for the cooperative work, a total of $49,700. This is distributed as follows: Michigan, $4,000; Ohio, $11,000; New York, $15,000; Massachusetts, $15,000; New Hampshire, $2,000; Maine, $2,000; and Vermont, $700.
> Doctor Howard is thoroughly scared now.
> Mr. WALTON. Without the conduct of a thorough scouting work in the Mississippi Valley States, which should be done to determine whether the insect is present or not, that we can not do with the present funds. We had to neglect that during the present fiscal year.

That is what representatives of the department had to say about its importance. Is it not worth considering?

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I prefer that the gentleman discuss it in his own time. Is not the testimony of those in charge of the work of importance and worth considering?

I think there is sufficient evidence here to show that it is spreading. The gentleman from Wisconsin states that it is in Wisconsin, and the gentleman from Indiana stated that it is in Indiana. Virginia, Maryland, and other Eastern States are full of it. The question is whether we are going to stop its spread or allow it to spread all over this country? It is now up to the Mississippi River. Are we going to allow it to cross? I for one am against allowing it to cross the Mississippi River. I am in favor of driving it back.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Does the gentleman agree with the chairman of the committee that the eradication of this pest is impossible?

Mr. HAUGEN. No. If nothing can be accomplished in that direction, then the $200,000 proposed would be a waste, too. I think a more determined effort should be made than is suggested by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] opens up a wide series of questions in regard to the work carried on under the Department of Agriculture. From time to time new pests injurious to agriculture appear, insect pests and plant diseases. From time to time pests and diseases that have been known from time immemorial increase their ravages and become very destructive. The question always arises as to the practical way of handling and disposing of such enemies of agriculture. It is quite natural that those who live in the regions where the pests or diseases occur, those whose crops are affected, should become very earnest about the matter and should insist that nothing be left undone, that there should be no limit to the expenditure to stamp out, to eradicate, the pests or diseases, as the case may be.

Now, what is the history and experience of that sort of endeavor?

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman had quite a bit of time. If the gentleman will permit me to lay down my proposition and make my statement, he can ask questions later. I am asking this question now in all good faith of the experts and gentlemen before me: Have we ever succeeded, with all our efforts, in eradicating any disease or any insect enemy of plant life that had become widely distributed in the country? Have we ever been able to do that?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MONDELL. I want an answer to my question.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think there is a single case where there has been a complete eradication. There have been cases where it has been practically complete, but not entirely so.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and where that occurs the gentleman from Minnesota will admit, or his experience will lead him to state at least, that the success we have had has not been so much in the direction of eradication by physical process—I doubt if we have ever done that—as eradication through the introduction of enemies of the disease, or of the insect, or the adoption of methods whereby we minimize the injury and destruction. Is not that true?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is quite true. The only exception I know of is the citrus canker, which we eradicated from commercial orchards. There is still some of it in privately owned orchards that are not run on what is known as a commercial basis.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Has not the cattle tick been eliminated from some areas?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; but there are still some cases in other areas.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not speaking of animals. You get into a different field when you speak of animals. There is a possibility, I think, of entirely eradicating certain diseases of animals; but we have quite a different situation to deal with when we get into the question of diseases and enemies of plant life.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Is it not true, however, that the Government has only just recently taken action with reference to the corn borer? Is not this just a recent pest that has taken hold?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] very wisely pointed out, we have employed experts, the best experts obtainable, for the consideration of these matters; and I think their judgment is rather better than ours as to the methods to be pursued and as to the work to be done and as to the expenditure necessary to do all that, in their opinion, can be done in a really effective way.

Now, you can spend all the money in the Treasury endeavoring to eradicate pests. My memory runs back much further than that of some of you young gentlemen gathered here. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I remember when we were asked to eradicate the Colorado beetle. I remember when there was a very great deal of excitement on this floor over the invasion of the Russian thistle, and I recall the tremendous effort put forth to eradicate that weed or keep it limited within certain sections. It crossed the continent. It did its work. We got acquainted with it, and we finally began to utilize it as a stock food, and nobody is particularly worried or disturbed over the Russian thistle now. It grows everywhere. It is a common weed. No more harmful than the weeds it crowded out.

Mr. DOWELL. Is the gentleman trying to get an introduction to the corn borer that is destroying the corn? Is that the reason why he does not want it stamped out now?

Mr. MONDELL. I admit that I know little of the corn borer. I have never met one of them. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I have not had the benefit of this argument.

Mr. MONDELL. I am sorry the gentleman has not, because there has been 25 minutes of very illuminating discussion.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is the department getting what it has asked for?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; all it asked.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Would the $200,000 give them ample resources to employ all of the facilities they have at hand for this work?

Mr. MONDELL. They tell us so.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If then that be true, what are they going to do with the other $800,000, with no more facilities to work on?

Mr. MONDELL. We could spend $300,000, we could spend $3,000,000, we could spend $30,000,000 in attempting to physically destroy this pest. We could authorize any amount of expenditure for the destruction and burning of crops, for the burning of the vegetation in the territory infested by the creature, and the experts on the subject tell us that after that was all done it would be impossible to eradicate them.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If our appropriation utilizes the maximum facilities at our command, it seems to me we will have done all that can practically be accomplished.

Mr. DOWELL. If it costs the Government $200,000 annually with this pest now in only two or three States, and with the testimony here clearly showing that it is bound to spread all over the United States, what is it going to cost us after it has spread all over the United States?

Mr. MONDELL. It may not cost a dollar, and 10 years from now we may have forgotten all about it. Not being a prophet I do not desire to prophesy, but I should not be at all surprised if it was discovered that this insect will be comparatively harmless when it reaches the corn-growing region of the Mississippi Valley. It is an insect pest that has proved very destructive under certain conditions to sweet corn in the regions where field corn does not grow at its best. We have no information that it would be in any wise more injurious to field corn in the corn country than a score of other pests now in that section. It might take the place of some others that now trouble us.

I realize that the people in the Corn Belt, hearing of this pest in the sweet-corn region of the country, in the land not ideally adapted to the growing of corn, may urge appropriations running into the millions to keep this pest away from them. They may say, "We do not care how much you spend; we insist that you shall spend all the money that anybody may suggest in attempting to do something that the experts say you can not do." The probability is that we can only control this pest as we control other like pests, first by the introduction of its enemies. This creature came to America free from some of the conditions and some of the natural enemies that nature had brought into being to control it in its natural habitat. We can adopt methods minimizing the destruction, we can do many things in a reasonable, intelligent, scientific way; but this idea that you can go out into a country as vast as ours, and actually wipe out a pest that has infested not only the cornfields but all the vegetation of vast areas, is, if I may say so without being offensive—and I certainly do not want to be offensive—a ridiculous one. It can not be done.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. If the gentleman is going to stop this eventually by bringing in its enemies——

Mr. MONDELL. I did not say I was going to stop it.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the policy suggested. And if so, why is it not cheaper to bring in the enemies now than to wait until the pest has spread further?

Mr. MONDELL. We are learning about its enemies now with this appropriation, and we have given all they ask and all they want.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming be extended three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. I object, Mr. Chairman. I ask that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes—5 minutes to go to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], and 3 minutes to myself.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should just like to say that in Maryland we have 645,000 acres devoted to the growing of corn, with increasing production; but I want to say that I think the Agricultural Department has asked for and the committee has made the right appropriation, and I stand by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose that anyone interested in agriculture will want to be in the attitude of not being in favor of doing everything within human possibility to eradicate the corn borer, but I think we now have a real Department of Agriculture. There are some other items in this bill that my section of the country is interested in. Take, for instance, the Hessian fly, that works on wheat. I would like to be in a position here of having offered an amendment to increase by $300,000 or $400,000 the item carried for the eradication of the Hessian fly; but time has demonstrated that the only way to fight the fly is with its enemies, in the same way that the Department of Agriculture has decided that the only way to fight the corn borer is with its enemies. I remember my first experience on the Agricultural Committee, when they presented us with photographs of scientists out in the wheat patches with scissors cutting weeds to find the corn borer. They found him, and they have found the parasites that will fight him, and the department say they can use $200,000 successfully for that purpose. Now, what would they do with the other $300,000?

Mr. BLANTON. Waste it.

Mr. TINCHER. It would read good, it would sound good to the people in the Corn Belt. Suppose I should offer to increase the $170,000 provided for in this bill to fight the worst enemy that the breadwinners of this country have in the world, the Hessian fly. What would they do with the money if I should increase the appropriation?

Time has demonstrated that the Government can only fight the fly with the parasites which are its enemies, and they can buy more than there are for sale and they can provide more than there is any way of providing with that appropriation. I do not know who it is on the floor of this House that is in a position to say, "I am so well informed that I want a reorganization of the Department of Agriculture, and I want you to tell them to take more money than they are asking for to fight these pests." I want to compliment Mr. Wallace on the fact that he recalled the scientists and their scissors, and that he is asking for $200,000 to buy some bugs with which to fight the worms, and that is all he wants. I believe he is so interested in this subject, and comes from a locality that is so vitally interested in it, that if there were any possibility of using an extra dollar for this purpose the Secretary of Agriculture would be here demanding it. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, some of these speeches are very interesting. It would be more helpful to the House, however, if the statements of the gentlemen were borne out by the record or otherwise true. The speech of our distinguished leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is entirely similar to speeches he has made on every occasion when an attempt has been made to increase an appropriation. The gentleman's statement is not startling when he says he knows nothing whatever about the corn borer. I am willing to accept that as entirely true. He says also that the Department of Agriculture asked for this amount and no more, also that it could carry on its work with this money, and therefore did not ask for a larger appropriation. All who have had experience with the departments of our Government know that requests are made by a department largely, if not altogether, on the basis of what it thinks it can get. Where we find no affirmative statement by Agricultural Department officials requesting larger appropriations it is not at all fair to conclude that no more is wished or needed.

Now, the hearings on this proposition before the Committee on Appropriations are meager, but I find on page 310 some very significant statements, not at all in line with statements made by the gentleman from Wyoming. The chairman of the subcommittee asked, "Is the amount sufficient to maintain the work on the present basis?" The witness from the department, Mr. Walton, said: "Yes; without the conduct of thorough scouting work in the Mississippi Valley, which should be done to determine whether or not the insect is present." There is indubitable testimony to the effect that the corn borer is now in the Mississippi Valley States. He continues by saying: "That we can not do with the present funds; we had to neglect that during the present fiscal year."

We know the department does not ask for all it wishes or all it needs. We are able to get no information whatever as to the hearings, if they may be called such, before the Budget Bureau, or commission, or whatever it may be called. We are kept in ignorance of the demand made of the Budget. We do not know what hearings were had or what testimony was offered in support of any proposition in this bill or in any other bill.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman been able to learn whether or not the hearings before the Budget Committee are taken and transcribed?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No. It is a secret-chamber proposition, as far as I am able to learn. I have never seen any hearings. I think they are not published. Budget hearings have never been referred to on this floor. My impression is the representatives of the departments and of various branches of the Government go to the Budget Committee, make their statements, such as they are permitted to make, and no one outside of the walls of the room in which hearings, so called, are held, knows anything about them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Michigan out of my time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I have spoken of the principal effects as I see them. There is no doubt about the seriousness of this situation. Corn is one of our great crops and it is very seriously menaced. When the department started its work it did not know how to do it, and some of the early work was crude and ineffective. Stories of the efforts they made are really amusing, but they have worked out a better plan and are prepared to extend the work and do it efficiently, and in my judgment the appropriation ought to be increased to enable them to do so.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes; although my time is short.

Mr. KETCHAM. I wonder if my colleague has not missed one of the most important features of the testimony. I want to call attention to the reply of Doctor Howard in response to a question of the chairman of the committee. It was, "They do not seem to be very scared up there?" Doctor Howard replied, "Massachusetts is thoroughly scared now." Does not my colleague think that when Massachusetts gets scared on an agricultural proposition it is time for the rest of the people to wake up? [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Massachusetts is scared because of the actual infestation of that State by this terrible plague, and the reason the large corn-growing areas of the country are not now scared is because they have not been infested to the extent necessary to arouse them. But the pest is spreading and reaching the great corn-growing areas, and the time to combat it is now, when it is in its early stage.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, there were one or two statements that might give a wrong impression as to what the situation is which I want to correct. It has been indicated, perhaps unintentionally, that this infestation around Lake Erie and eastern New York came from Boston. As a matter of fact, all the indications point to the fact that these three areas were all infested at the same time, and consequently had we undertaken the eradication program in and around Boston as soon as the infestation was learned of, it would have been wholly without effect, because the infestations were in other parts of the country.

Another statement I would like to make is that notwithstanding what has been said about the inability of the department to present its needs, the fact remains that the department asked the bureau for an appropriation of $200,000, and that appropriation was agreed to by the Budget Bureau and the Subcommittee on Appropriations and the Committee on Appropriations. They all agreed to the amount of $200,000 as representing the amount which the department and the Bureau of the Budget finally agreed would adequately continue the work on the basis of such control of the disease as they believed to be possible.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HAUGEN) there were—13 ayes and 33 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the food habits of North American birds and other animals in relation to agriculture, horticulture, and forestry; for investigations, experiments, and demonstrations in connection with rearing fur-bearing animals; for experiments, demonstrations, and cooperation in destroying mountain lions, wolves, coyotes, bobcats, prairie dogs, gophers, ground squirrels, jack rabbits, and other animals injurious to agriculture, horticulture, forestry, animal husbandry, and wild game; and for the protection of stock and other domestic animals through the suppression of rabies in predatory wild animals, $502,240.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 54, line 20, strike out the sum "$502,240" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$652,204, provided that of the sum thus appropriated $150,000 may be used in California."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, that is placed there deliberately and for a good purpose. The general situation is that this amount of money allowed in the appropriation bill this year, as in previous years, covers the Western States as well as the Northwest, the Mississippi Valley, and other States where there are predatory animals and others of the character named in the bill. It covers a wide stretch of territory. In the western Pacific Coast States, known as the public-land States, a large amount of the land is in public ownership, and it becomes a breeding ground for these predatory animals. Owners of land in the various States referred to must eradicate most, if not all, of these animals when the local authorities ask them to do so. If they fail to eradicate them, then a lien is attached to the land and the land is sold, so that when you live in these communities you have to participate to the extent of a large sum. Your home is involved. This is the law in California.

All we ask now is that the Government meet the conditions as we find them there. Yesterday I had inserted in the RECORD a letter and some resolutions from the California Wool Growers' Association. I want to read a short extract from those resolutions to show the purpose of my amendment. It is to be found on page 881 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 22, 1922, and reads as follows:

Whereas the menace to the sheep industry of the State of California by the depredations of predatory animals, particularly coyotes, is of serious consequence and has amounted to losses approaching millions of dollars; and

Whereas the United States Government through its Bureau of Biological Survey, in cooperation with the State of California, has been doing effective work, as is being done in other States, but wholly inadequate to meet even the partial needs to protect this sheep industry; and

Whereas every possible agency, including local associations, county and State governments, are exerting every effort to cope with this serious menace: Therefore be it

Resolved by the woolgrowers of the State of California in convention assembled, To ask assistance from the Federal Government through Congress for an appropriation, not less than $150,000 in amount, for the work in California, thus to make available for predatory-animal control a sum necessary for a much-needed protection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. How much does the State of California itself appropriate for this same work?

Mr. RAKER. California has appropriated for this, but at this moment I can not give the exact amount.

Mr. SNELL. Is there any evidence to show what the direct appropriation of the State is?

Mr. RAKER. I shall get it and put it in the RECORD later. We have been appropriating money for this and other purposes right along, not only for the coyote, but for all other animals, and, as I stated before, every man's property in the State of California is subject to having a lien placed upon it and sold for the destruction of rodents.

Mr. SNELL. I do not find any evidence that the gentleman's State, through its legislature, has appropriated any money for this specific purpose.

Mr. RAKER. It makes general appropriations.

Mr. SNELL. I asked for the specific purpose.

Mr. RAKER. No more than the item I just called attention to a short time ago for the destruction of the brown-tail moth and the gypsy moth in the gentleman's State, where we appropriate five times as much as this.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman put in the RECORD the definite amount that California appropriates for the items that he wants to have increased?

Mr. RAKER. I shall try to get the information for the gentleman, and at a later date will insert it. I want to call attention to the hearings on this subject. I call attention to the testimony of Doctor Nelson, found on pages 319 and 320 of the hearings. From that it will be seen that $388,000 was collected by the department from the sale of hides that were obtained under and by virtue of this appropriation. Doctor Nelson says:

The $502,000 is not appropriated for the predatory-animal work alone. For the predatory-animal and the rodent work combined the Government puts up about $400,000, and the States are putting up approximately $1,000,000 in cooperative funds. They are contributing practically two-and-a-half times as much as the Federal Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I think we should settle first the point of order. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman in his increased appropriation desires to have $150,000 of it spent in the State of California alone, but the gentleman still has not any information as to what his own State has done in respect to this particular item.

Mr. RAKER. We find that the wool growers of California have met and have discussed this matter. They are familiar with it. Years ago they could put their sheep out, and they did not have to take the care and attention they do now, and they were not destroyed, but now, for the purpose of legitimately raising sheep, you must have a herder on the job; otherwise these animals are in your sheep, and you have lost a year's profit.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Why does the gentleman want to limit the use of the $150,000 extra to the State of California? There are other places where they raise sheep, where they have predatory animals, as, for instance, in New Mexico. They have public land there and lots of animals, and the animals have never been properly reared to recognize the State lines, and they get across into the State of Texas at times.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, we have coyotes and wild cats that pay no attention to State lines; and they come from Texas up into California. The reason why I am asking the $150,000 just before Christmas is that I have not had very much, and these people have not been provided for very extensively. This association is unanimously behind this. I hope the Congress will be open-minded enough to make this appropriation, to the end that the industry in the State of California may be protected and encouraged.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in eight minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is less reason for increasing this appropriation than there was for increasing the appropriation with respect to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] offered his amendment a short time ago. This more than the other requires complete eradication, if you are going to get any substantial benefit from the appropriation. But eradication is impossible. Take the State of Texas, for instance. It is 900 miles across it from east to west, and nearly 1,000 miles across it from north to south. Our sheepmen have learned that whenever they protect their flocks against coyotes they must do the eradication themselves on their own ranches.

They build wolf-proof fences, put one wire even under the ground so that the wolf can not get into the ranch. What could the Federal Government do toward eradicating even the wolves in Texas with the kind of an appropriation we annually carry? Why, it would take millions and millions of dollars to eradicate them in the United States, and unless we go far enough to eradicate them everywhere our money is wasted, for they breed almost as fast as white mice. It is a continual restocking.

I have come to the conclusion that on voting for a proposed increase of appropriations by way of amendments offered from the floor that I am going to hew to the line, first, on the Budget Committee's recommendation, and, second, the only time I am going to stray any beyond the Budget Committee's recommendation is when the committee itself comes in here and for some good reason asks for an increase.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. We have men on this Appropriations Committee who fully understand this question. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] knows about as much about the Agricultural Department's business as any man in the House. He is in charge of this bill on the subcommittee, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] knows about as much as any other man in the House on this subject. They have not seen fit to ask for an increase, they have not seen fit to ask for $150,000 extra to be presented as a Christmas present to the State of the distinguished gentleman from California——

Mr. HAUGEN. According to the gentleman's statement, why do not the rest of us go to our offices or go home and leave the chairman and the assistant and the ranking Member on the Democratic side here to run the business?

Mr. BLANTON. Because we have got to stay here and help keep the good fellows from increasing the appropriations; that is why. That is why I am here. My vote counts one. [Applause.] I am going to try to do my part as one Member to keep these appropriations within bounds.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from California is always modest, unusually so in this case. He only wants 60 per cent spent in California on this work as is spent in all the United States put together. If the State of California would abandon its policy of paying bounties for predatory animals and adopt the same policy which the United States Government has adopted it would not be necessary for the gentleman from California to ask for this $150,000. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserved the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proviso makes the whole amendment subject to the point of order because the proviso is clearly legislation unauthorized on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I have an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us dispose of the point of order first, if the gentleman will permit. The Chair, looking at this amendment, and especially the proviso, thinks it is worded in such a way as not to make it mandatory upon the department to spend the money in California. It is only an indication of where the gentleman proposing the amendment would like to have it spent, and is colorless and without force. It is not binding upon the department to spend it in that particular State; it could be spent anywhere, despite the proviso, and for that reason the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANSFIELD to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California: At the end of the amendment add the following: "Provided further, That the sum of $150,000 here appropriated for the State of California shall not be available unless and until the State of California appropriates a like sum for the same purpose."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California as amended by the amendment just adopted.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To investigate and encourage the adoption of improved methods of farm management and farm practice, $281,987: Provided, That of this amount $150,000 may be used in ascertaining the cost of production of the principal staple agricultural products.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I will say to the chairman of the committee if he does not know just where we are in the bill, it is on page 62, at the beginning of line 6.

Mr. ANDERSON. I have it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I notice the proviso that of the total amount of appropriation $150,000 may be used in ascertaining the cost of production of the principal staple agricultural products. I would like to know what progress has been made in that particular line of work and how the work is carried on?

Mr. ANDERSON. The work has been carried on under two systems; one of them the so-called survey method, under which quite a large number of farms keep account, and once a year those farms are visited by the representatives of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Their accounts are gone over and the results tabulated in accordance with the general plan of the bureau. The other method is a more intense method by which representatives of the bureau visit the farmers more frequently and in such cases give them assistance in keeping these records. Of course, the latter method is by far the most accurate and scientific. Cost studies are now being made in reference to the cost of producing corn-fed beef, and the cost of producing milk on dairy farms, the cost of producing cotton, the cost of producing wheat, and a considerable number of diversified farms in reference to the cost of the farm plant as a unit and the profit arising from it. I think the work is progressing very satisfactorily, indeed.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. How does the amount of money here made available compare with the amount last year and in previous years. The gentleman has outlined a very ambitious program if the department visits a very large number of farms and makes anything at all of an investigation a great deal of time is required and the employment of a very large number of men is necessary.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will say to the gentleman that these are practically all conducted in cooperation with States, and the total amount of expense in the course of the last three years—1922, $47,929; 1923, $85,027; and 1924, $85,037.

In none of these three years has a total amount of $150,000 been spent for this cost-of-production work.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman says the work has been carried on very satisfactorily. Does the gentleman mean that the work is done as carefully and skillfully as it can be done, or does he mean that results reached have been satisfactory?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think both things are true. Of course, the cost-of-production work is fairly new, and it is probable that an improvement of methods is being made all the time. But we are getting a very large volume of sound, fundamental information which is, or ought to be, valuable to the farmers of the country in connection with their problems of farm organization and farm management.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is not this along the same line as the investigation made some years ago by Doctor Spillman?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; but, of course, it is on a different basis from the work that was done by Doctor Spillman.

Mr. HAUGEN. It was practically abandoned at one time, was it not?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think it was practically abandoned at one time, but it has been going on under the present plan for at least three years.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Of course, the matter of crop-production costs is important, and if by any kind of investigation the department can reach satisfactory results, its work ought to be encouraged. There is, however, a wide difference of opinion as to whether results can be reached that will be at all satisfactory. I have always been in doubt as to the wisdom of this appropriation, not because it is not of interest to me, but because I am doubtful as to whether any kind of investigation will give tangible, satisfactory results as to the cost of production. The cost of production depends upon so many different things—the quality of the land, the manner in which the farmer keeps his soil fertilized, the manner in which he cultivates his crops, the time at which he puts in his crop, the time at which he harvests it, and the weather conditions, which are changeable and variable, affecting one part of the country favorably, perhaps, and another near-by part unfavorably; there are, I say, so many things upon which success depends that it seems to me difficult, if not impossible, to reach anything like an adequate conclusion as to what the production of any particular crop has cost or will cost.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can the gentleman tell us anything about the results reached by the department in investigating the cost of production within the last few years in selected counties in the State of Iowa, for example?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I can not give the gentleman the information he wishes. I am entirely willing, if you please, to have this work go on, because if satisfactory work can be done the results will be very interesting and helpful, not only to those who are engaged in agriculture but also to consumers, because prices that prevail and prices that ought to prevail are dependent largely upon the cost of production. The farmer ought to know what it costs; the buying public also ought to know.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Can the gentleman tell whether any of the reports that are made are available to the membership?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota is entirely right in saying that the work is satisfactorily done, and that gratifying results will be reached. I repeat that I am in favor of the appropriation, although I am in a class who doubt very much if satisfactory results can ever be reached.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. The reason why the Chairman stated that the work was being conducted in a satisfactory manner and "everything was all right along the Potomac" was the fact that the farmers themselves already know exactly what it costs to produce their various farm commodities.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I had not heard of that.

Mr. BLANTON. They do down in my country. They have found it out through sad experience. They know what it costs them to produce cotton, they know what it costs them to produce corn, and they know what it costs them to produce wheat, and wool, and sheep, and cattle, and hogs.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Has it been found out down there that the cost of production is the same on any two farms in the State?

Mr. BLANTON. They have found out exactly what it costs them to produce their commodities, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan. What the farmers down in Texas are most concerned about just now is the cost of production of their manufactured wearing apparel, their shoes, boots, and farm implements. They want to know why they used to be able to buy a good 3½-inch Studebaker wagon for $75, and now they have to pay $200 for it, and the same with all the farm implements. They would like to know something of what the cost of production is on those articles.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not blame them.

Mr. BLANTON. They would like to know what is the cost of the production of coal, for which they are now paying $16 and $17 a ton.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I do not blame them at all, inasmuch as the selling price of their products is down and going still further down, whereas the prices of the things they have to buy are up and still going further up.

Mr. BLANTON. If we were to follow the wise admonition of the President of the United States a few years ago, when Woodrow Wilson told us that there was only one way to solve this cost-of-production business, and that was to require stamped on the article the selling price of the wholesaler, that of the middleman, and that of the retailer, then we would be performing a service to the people of the country that would be valuable indeed. Then improper profits would stop. We are wasting time and money, so far as the spending of this $150,000 in this item is concerned, in order to tell the farmers what it costs to produce their products. They already know it, every one of them. [Applause.]

Mr. ROACH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question concerning the item on page 60, "For supervising the preparation, distribution, and use of picric acid" and other explosives. Are these explosives to be obtained on the application of individual farmers, or must they be obtained through some connection with an agricultural college?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the distribution is made through the State agricultural colleges as a rule to the county agents.

Mr. ROACH. The gentleman's information, then, is that the distribution is made through the agricultural colleges from the Agricultural Department here at Washington?

Mr. ANDERSON. The usual method, I think, is for applications to be concentrated with the county agents. Then they go through the State college or the State department of agriculture, and the distribution is made in substantially the same way.

Mr. ROACH. The distribution, in other words, is made from the Agricultural Department here to the various State agricultural colleges, and they in turn distribute it to whom?

Mr. ANDERSON. Usually through the county agents to the persons who make the appplication in the first instance.

Mr. ROACH. Then the information does finally reach the individual who made the application?

Mr. ANDERSON. Oh, yes; of course it does.

Mr. ROACH. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to say just a word on the cost of production work. As I said a moment ago, this is pretty largely new in its present form. It is probable that it has not had the value which it would have had if the conditions had been entirely normal so that comparisons of cost of production year by year could be made more accurately. In other words, to some extent, of course, the value of these studies for purposes of comparison is destroyed by the inflation which has taken place in the credit and currency of the country, which has had a very marked effect upon prices in general. But on the whole the cost of production studies are the basis of farm management and farm organization. As we progress with this study of farm costs it should be possible to demonstrate more thoroughly the better methods of agricultural practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting, compiling, abstracting, analyzing, summarizing, interpreting, and publishing data relating to agriculture, including crop and live-stock estimates, acreage, yield, grades, stock, and value of farm crops, and numbers, grades, and value of live stock and live-stock products on farms, in cooperation with the Extension Service and other Federal, State, and local agencies, $397,000: Provided, That $65,000 shall be available for collecting and disseminating to American producers, importers, exporters, and other interested persons information relative to the world supply of and need for American agricultural products, marketing methods, conditions, prices, and other factors, a knowledge of which is necessary to the advantageous disposition of such products in foreign countries, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, including the purchase of such books and periodicals as may be necessary in connection with this work.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and certify to shippers and other interested parties the quality and condition of fruits, vegetables, poultry, butter, hay, and other perishable farm products when offered for interstate shipment or when received at such important central markets as the Secretary of Agriculture may from time to time designate, or at points which may be conveniently reached therefrom, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, including payment of such fees as will be reasonable and as nearly as may be to cover the cost for the service rendered: Provided, That certificates issued by the authorized agents of the department shall be received in all courts of the United States as prima facie evidence of the truth of the statements therein contained, $275,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the proviso. I would like to ask the chairman is this the substantive law at the present date, that the certificate issued by authorized agents of the department shall be received in all courts of the United States as prima facie evidence?

Mr. ANDERSON. It has been carried in the appropriation bills for many years. As far as I know, there is no law on the subject.

Mr. RAKER. And does it work to good advantage?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; it would be almost useless without it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed Senate Joint Resolution 218, to create a commission to consider the proposal of a central building for art and industry in the District of Columbia, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3295) to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4131) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Sioux City, Iowa, and to Union County, in the State of South Dakota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Big Sioux River at a point 2½ miles north of the mouth of said river, between section 14, township 89, range 48, Woodbury County, Iowa, and section 15, township 89, range 48, Union County, S. Dak., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4133) granting the consent of Congress to the State of North Dakota and the State of Minnesota, the county of Pembina, N. Dak., and the county of Kittson, Minn., or any one of them, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting, publishing, and distributing, by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, timely information on the market supply and demand, commercial movement, location, disposition, quality, condition, and market prices of live stock, meats, fish, and animal products, dairy and poultry products, fruits and vegetables, peanuts and their products, grain, hay, feeds, and seeds, and other agricultural products, independently and in cooperation with other branches of the Government, State agencies, purchasing and consuming organizations, and persons engaged in the production, transportation, marketing, and distribution of farm and food products, $401,400.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman and my Christmas colleagues, this is a little Yuletide amendment; and I recall that it is written that even during such seasons, when a hundred are gathered together in the Government's name, they have authority to grant such legislative Christmas relief as is here sought. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it was evidently intended by the subcommittee which framed this bill that the market news service, which has proven of such great interest and importance to the agricultural and stock-raising sections of the country, should be carried on effectively and without curtailing or impairing its usefulness. It was thought at the time the figures in this bill were submitted by the department to the subcommittee that they represented a sufficient sum for the proper functioning of this governmental activity. It has developed subsequently, however, that in order for the southwestern part of the country to enjoy the continuous benefits of this service an increase of $25,000 in this appropriation is necessary.

In other words, the amount stipulated in this measure will assure to the western region the proper dissemination of market news for the full 12 months of the fiscal year, but in the southwestern section of the Nation, which is equally important in this regard and deserves similar consideration, Texas will be restricted to nine months of operation and Oklahoma will be entirely excluded. And so, I say, in that fair Christmas spirit which should preclude the possibility of discrimination among the gifts to the sister States involved, it behooves us now to play the proper rôle of Santa Claus and see that Uncle Sam displays an equal concern for the farmers and stockmen of the great Southwest.

The amount by which this amendment will increase the appropriation is not arrived at arbitrarily. I have had this matter up with the authorities in the Department of Agriculture who have administrative control of it, and the additional figure of $25,000 has been supplied by them after a careful analysis of the situation. I think the subcommittee itself is in possession of this recent information, and for this reason I do not anticipate any serious objection to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. COLTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. In what way is this discrimination made?

Mr. LANHAM. The discrimination is not intentional. It arises from the fact that it was originally thought that the sum specified in the bill would be sufficient to carry on this work in all the various sections where it is undertaken, but that now it is found that this additional amount will be necessary if the southwestern part of the country is to have the same service during the entire year that is accorded the West.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman explain how it is that the southwestern part of the country under the law, as it stands, is not to benefit from this appropriation for the whole year while the western part of the country is?

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman from Texas will pardon me, I will say that this wire service has only been extended to Texas within the last year, and the department went as far as they had the money to go and then stopped. It had been previously established at other places, and the service in those places is complete, but Texas having been the last place they went as far as they had the money to go.

Mr. LANHAM. That is correct. During the war Texas had such service, but after the war, on account of the great sum then necessary to carry on this work, it was discontinued. Within the last year it has been resumed, and the latest investigation of the department shows that the slight increase proposed in this amendment is essential to equalize the service in these various sections. The Southwest is very productive in fruits and vegetables and live stock and dairy and poultry products, as well as the other activities specified in this paragraph of the bill, and its farmers and stockmen, of course, are entitled to the full benefit of such information as the market-news service may afford.

For the information of the committee I desire to quote the following from the hearings on this measure, indicative of the increased demand for this service:

Mr. MARQUIS. During the past year there has been a strong demand for the market-news service. As we have observed the demand for market news is greatest when prices are low or failing. Farmers are not particularly concerned about prices as long as they are high and satisfactory. They are not searching for a market, and they are not so much interested in the choice of markets with reference to which will pay the best prices, but when prices begin to go down, then comes the call for more market information. The result is that we have had a greater call for information of this character during the past 12 months than in the past, due to the low prices. The farmers seeking markets wished to know the difference in prices at various markets, the best time to sell, and the danger of gluts; also to know the relative prices for various qualities of products. All of these things have tremendously increased the call for this sort of information, with the result that we have had frequent requests to extend this service into areas that are removed from our regular lines of communication.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is this service maintained with respect to all these various commodities—live stock, fruits, and vegetables—or only as to some of them?

Mr. MARQUIS. All of the four principal lines, live stock, meats, fruits, and vegetables, dairy and poultry products, and hay, feeds, and seeds are included, and that includes a variety of reports which go all the way from the spread in price quotations to market movements, the entire range of various kinds, grades, and qualities, and any other news that bears upon the market situation.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, as I have just stated, they have a leased wire to Fort Worth, Dallas, and Austin, but they can not make a complete use of it unless the appropriation is increased. It seems to me that as long as we have the service there the people of Texas and Oklahoma ought to have the full benefit of it, and therefore I do not oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 64, after line 18, add:

"Provided, That $500,000, or so much of that amount as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any unappropriated funds in the Federal Treasury for providing seed wheat for wheat growers in the drought-stricken area in the State of Washington: Provided further, That all loans contemplated herein shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate and shall become due and payable on November 1, 1923, and shall bear 6 per cent interest per annum."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is new legislation, not authorized by law.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman withhold it?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will withhold it for five minutes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the State of Washington has some of the best and most productive wheat lands in all the world. It also has some dry wheat lands. The farmers have been struggling for the past 15 years, some years making good crops and others very indifferent crops, but during the last five years the dry-land section has been very much reduced on account of drought. Especially has this been true during the past three years, and the year just passed has brought them down to the very minimum of production. Their credit is gone, they are mortgaged up to their ears, they are doing everything that they can do to remain on their farms and continue to grow wheat.

While this is legislation on an appropriation bill, it is nothing new for this Congress. Last year we appropriated for this same purpose for drought-stricken farmers in other States a million and a half dollars, and two years ago we appropriated $2,000,- 000. There was loaned to the wheat growers this present year for spring seeding in the State of Idaho $24,000; in the State of Montana, $756,000; in the State of North Dakota, $661,000; in the State of South Dakota, $37,000; and in the State of Washington only $1,730. In other words, the wheat farmers in the State of Washington have continued to grow wheat as best they could, although suffering from drought for the past five years in certain counties, without calling on the Federal Government for loans with which to buy seed wheat. What has been the result of these loans in the other States? This year they have produced the best crops that they have had for a number of years.

These farmers were enabled to remain on their farms, and have produced millions of bushels of wheat and are now able to continue their farming operations. The drought has now fallen farther west and one part of the State of Washington this year has been very hard hit. A careful investigation has been made, and it is found that there is almost 400,000 acres of ground plowed, harrowed, free from weeds, ready for seeding, but that can not be seeded unless Federal aid is procured with which to buy seed wheat.

Mr. SNELL. Has the State of Washington made any provision for an appropriation to take care of these farmers?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Our own State financiers have helped these farmers in the past, the banks have helped them, the merchants have helped them, everybody has helped them, until they have come to the point where it seems in justice to them, as compared with other farmers in other States, they are entitled to a little relief from the Federal Government.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will remember that when we passed these other appropriations, which I myself opposed, it was stated that the credit of the States was in such condition that they could not raise the money to help these people out.

The gentleman would not want to claim that the great, big, rich State of Washington is in such financial condition that it can not help these farmers, provided it desires to do so.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. No; I would not make that claim, neither would I make the claim that the great State of New York could not improve the harbor of the great city of New York or that Mississippi, Louisiana, and other States could not prevent floods on the Mississippi. Nevertheless, we appropriate Federal funds for these purposes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman should bring up a similar argument, and then I will meet him on it. Those are general propositions. Any specific request the State of New York makes from this Government, it will put up its proportionate share for, and it seems to me that a big, rich State like the State of Washington should help these farmers first, before they come to the Federal Government.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am stating that the State of Washington, and the financial institution of that State, have helped them over five bad years, and now everything they have is mortgaged and they are not able to procure seed wheat with which to seed the 400,000 acres of land on which they have expended from $4 to $5 an acre in preparing the seed bed. These farmers do not want to leave their farms. They are anxious to stay. If they vacate their farms, it will be difficult to find others to occupy them. The net result will be a loss to the whole Nation.

I have seldom looked upon a sadder sight than the empty homesteads that may be found in this section. Little empty shacks with unhinged doors, broken windows, the broken wheel at the well, and the general air of desertion bear mute evidence of blasted hopes and blasted fortunes. The fortunes may have been meager, consisting of only a few hundreds of dollars—their all. But when they went upon those homesteads, their hopes were as buoyant and impelling as ever surged through human breasts. They ate the dust of the desert for years. They fought the dreary, lonely battle of the dry-land homesteader, and lost. Without money, without credit, with crushed ambitions and without hope, many of these unfortunate homesteaders have gone drifting—we know not whither.

I am endeavoring to bring a ray of hope and to give one more chance to the dry-land farmers who still cling to their farms and wage an all but hopeless battle.

Weather conditions at this time are better than for many years past and there is every probability they can grow a remunerative crop this year if seed wheat is provided.

I am asking a loan which shall be repayable on November 1. I have provided that the interest shall be 6 per cent instead of 5 per cent, which was charged the farmers in other drought-stricken regions, so that if there is any difficulty in making any of these collections the excess interest collected on some may take care of the difficult collections in other cases. I hope the chairman of the committee, in justice to these farmers, will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the provision is legislation, and it is not germane at this point. It is a matter that has always been considered heretofore by the Committee on Agriculture and I am sure if the proposition is one where the Federal Government should appropriate, that committee will very promptly report the necessary authorization if the matter is submitted to them. It is not properly a matter that ought to be taken up in this way and put on an appropriation bill without consideration by the proper committee. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Was not the appropriation of last year incorporated in the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. My recollection is upon authorization by the Committee on Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment against which the gentleman from Minnesota directs a point of order on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and is not germane to the paragraph. The Chair feels that it is not germane to the paragraph; that it is an appropriation unauthorized by law and that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I can not in five minutes make a full statement of the facts which we probably will want to present to another committee. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, expenses, $1,891,660.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 64, line 19, after the word "all," insert the word "general."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, would not the total have to be changed to take into account the $25,000?

Mr. ANDERSON. At the proper time I shall ask that all the totals be corrected to correspond with the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMPLETION OF WOOL WORK.

To enable the Bureau of Agricultural Economics to complete the work of the domestic wool section of the War Industries Board and to enforce Government regulations for handling the wool clip of 1918 as established by the wool division of said board, pursuant to the Executive order dated December 31, 1918, transferring such work to the said bureau, $12,000, and to continue, as far as practicable, the distribution among the growers of the wool clip of 1918 of all sums heretofore or hereafter collected or recovered with or without suit by the Government from all persons, firms, or corporations which handled any part of the wool clip of 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

DEMONSTRATIONS ON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to encourage and aid in the agricultural development of the Government reclamation projects; to assist, through demonstrations, advice, and in other ways, settlers on the projects; and for the employment of persons and means necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $39,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 70, line 24, after the figures "39,000," insert as a new paragraph as follows:

"For printing, binding, and distribution through the folding room of the publications entitled 'Diseases of the Horse and Diseases of Cattle, $200,000.'"

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. ANDERSON. I will reserve it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of economy of the most rigid sort. I have voted to reduce practically every appropriation that has come to a vote. I have offered many amendments reducing appropriations. I have not offered any amendment increasing an appropriation. Hence I think I can in good faith speak to this amendment. The Government publishes a great many different pamphlets and quite a few books and a great many documents. I believe, of all the publications that have been provided for, the ones which are mentioned in this amendment are the most useful. I believe practically every Member of the House will agree to that fact. Now, I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will not make the point of order. I want to say in this connection that I mentioned this matter to some Members, and also to the Committee on Agriculture, of which I happen to be a member——

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In just a minute. And every member of the Agricultural Committee, I believe, agrees that these books should be provided for. We have just had the discussion of the garden-seed distribution, an item of $360,000. It would take that much to provide garden seed. It takes more than that to provide some other documents and publications that are distributed.

This appropriation will provide 200,000 copies of each of the publications mentioned. I know that every member of the Committee on Agriculture who was present on the occasion in question thought the publications should be reprinted. I have spoken to numbers of men on both sides, and all agree that they are very valuable publications. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LOWREY. I just wanted to add to the statement that I think I get more letters asking for those publications and more expressions from the farmers as to the real value of them than anything else the Government sends out.

Mr. JONES of Texas. These cattle and horse books are valuable all over the United States in every man's district, and in communities where they have but one of them the neighbors call for it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Why does not the Committee on Agriculture bring in a bill authorizing the publication of those books?

Mr. JONES of Texas. They decided, in view of the shortness of the term, it would be impossible to get a resolution up before the House, and they decided it would be useless to bring it in this session for that reason, but the matter of their not being authorized was not brought up until recently. For that reason we decided it would be useless to report out a resolution and put it on the Calendar and not get it up in time to get the appropriation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Were there any hearings held on this proposition?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There was no hearing, but hearings were had when they were published before, I will state to the gentleman, and the House is familiar with the value of these books and the great demand for them among all the people wherever there are horses or cattle. If a man has only a few head there is great use for these books because they furnish valuable information as to handling and treatment.

Mr KNUTSON. How many does it provide?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Two hundred thousand copies of each of those volumes to be distributed through the folding room in the regular manner and method of allotment. I do not think there ought to be any objection, because I do not believe any man can present a substantial objection. If you will search through the items of the appropriation bill, I do not think there is anything so valuable as these books. I do not think there is any need for a hearing, because it is a reprint of a publication that has heretofore been published and the allotment was exhausted, and there has been a demand from practically every Member here for a reprint of those publications.

Mr. SNELL. How many books will that furnish?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Four hundred thousand copies, 200,000 copies of each publication.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman think it will be real economy to have the House sustain its action of yesterday in knocking out the seed proposition and utilizing that amount of money in the publication of these books?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I most certainly do. I think many fold more value will be obtained from this appropriation, which is only half as large as the one they came so near to adopting yesterday for garden seeds. The estimate of the department is in accordance with the figures I have given.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I would like to say that this is the one publication, above all others, that the farmers of my district seem to desire.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes. I think it is the universal experience among the Members. I do not think there are half a dozen Members in the House that will not have use for these publications. I do not think there is any considerable number of people in the country who will not be enthusiastically in favor of this provision.

We have gone to the expense, first, of gathering all this information, and then to the expense of putting it in shape, and then we have gone to the expense of having it published once, and now all that is involved is the republication.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Why do you not include in your amendment the republication of the book called "Diseases of Sheep"? I do not know of such a publication in book form. I believe it is in pamphlet, anway.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not think there is such a widespread demand for that. These two publications that I have mentioned are called for all over the Nation, in every State of the Nation.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit, I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that my colleague has sheep in his district, just as he has cattle and horses.

Mr. JONES of Texas. This is a matter about which I do not think there is any difference of opinion. What is the necessity of having hearings? Why not authorize a publication which everybody knows is needed?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman's amendment. I think these publications ought to be republished. But I do not feel, without any hearings or consideration of the matter at all, so far as it is in my power to control the situation, that I would be justified in taking the responsibility of allowing this item to go in. It is a matter that ought to go before the Committee on Agriculture or before the Committee on Printing. It would be promptly reported out, and I think it ought to be. But I make the point of order on its insertion here.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the gentleman think this is subject to a point of order? Does not the organic law authorize this?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will not make the point of order, because the Committee on Agriculture has discussed this matter, and every member present at the time of the discussion expressed the hope that we would be able to get it into a legislative bill, but we came to the conclusion that we could not get a special resolution through the House because there was not sufficient time. But it was the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Agriculture that these books should be republished.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order should be overruled. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the decision which he rendered the other day based upon the organic act, which act reads as follows:

> The general design and duties * * * shall be to acquire and diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most general and comprehensive sense of that word, and to secure the publication and distribute among the people, etc.

The gentleman from Minnesota meets himself coming around in a circle, because he himself cited this organic act the other day against just such a point of order, and the Chair held that the point of order was not good, as this organic act was sufficient authorization. If the Chair's decision the other day was right, clearly the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. JONES] is in order and not subject to the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield. But we are not here discussing the merits of the question. We are discussing merely the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Surely. In the discussion the other day, did not that paragraph specifically direct some man to do something? Does the gentleman say that when you specifically direct a man in an executive department to do something that is not legislation? That is what this amendment directs.

Mr. BLANTON. The amendment as to garden seeds offered yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] specifically directed the Department of Agriculture to spend $39,000 in collecting certain kinds of seeds and placing them in certain kinds of envelopes and placing on the envelopes a certain kind of printing, and the Chair held that it came within the provisions of the organic act and therefore was authorized.

Mr. SNELL. The Chair said he did not really think it came within the organic act, but ruled that way because he thought the House would put it in and overrule his decision as it did last year.

Mr. BLANTON. He followed the decision of the committee, and when he followed it his decision then became a precedent for him and the committee. It only forms a new precedent.

Mr. SNELL. If he follows the precedents of the House, he would be compelled to overrule the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment does not direct the department to do anything. It simply provides an appropriation for this purpose. It contains no direction, no instruction. It is simply an appropriation for this particular purpose, and, as has been called to the attention of the Chair, the general authorizations with reference to publications in the general law are so universal in their provisions as to bring almost anything within the provisions of the organic law if you have an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported. Without objection, that will be done.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Chair will note that that does not contain a specific direction. It is simply an appropriation under the general provisions of the law which authorizes these different publications and the distribution of documents and printed matter and various publications of that kind. It simply authorizes an appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. SNELL. It specifically authorizes the distribution through the folding room.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is one of the usual forms of distribution. Any Government publication that is printed may be distributed through the folding room. That is one of the usual methods, but that would not be a necessary part of the amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It seems to me that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has struck the crucial point of this matter. It might be held that the appropriation of $200,000 for a specific purpose would be in order. But the ordinary publications of the Agricultural Department are not distributed through the folding room. They are distributed by the Agricultural Department itself.

Mr. BLANTON. The Yearbooks are distributed through the folding room.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If they are so distributed there is a specific law for it; but the ordinary publications of the department are distributed by the department itself. Now, here is a specific direction that these books be distributed, not by the department but through congressional channels. I think that is plainly legislation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to change the amendment so as to leave out the words "through the folding room."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. I regret to object; but if they are to be printed, they ought to be distributed by the Members of Congress, and I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the provision as to printing and binding on page 6 of this bill is a valid provision—and it seems to have been considered by everybody as unobjectionable and not subject to a point of order—I do not see how a point of order lies to the pending amendment. That provision appropriates for printing various reports, and then goes on to provide how they may be delivered and sent out, specifying that they may be distributed under the franks of Senators and Representatives, and that provision was justified on the general proposition that the organic act governing the Agricultural Department is much broader than any law that governs and controls any of the other departments of the Government. I think the Chair would be drawing a line that is not discernible at all between the paragraph on page 6 and this amendment if he should sustain the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair realizes that this is a rather close question, but the Chair is of the opinion that the words "through the folding room" are a direction, and therefore legislation and repugnant to the rule. The Chair recognizes the broad principles of the organic law concerning the distribution of useful information and would hold the amendment in order if it were not for that provision of direction. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment without the words "through the folding room."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 70, line 24, after the figures "$39,000," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"For printing, binding, and distribution of the publications entitled 'Diseases of the Horse' and 'Diseases of Cattle,' $200,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] desire to speak on his amendment?

Mr. JONES of Texas. No.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Before I vote on this proposition I wish to say that I realize the high character of these works. I have had many demands for them myself, and I should like to know something which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] perhaps can tell me, whether these works have been brought up to date. They have been out of print for many years.

Mr. KNUTSON. Since 1912.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The last printing was in 1916.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. These books treat of diseases which are common to cattle and horses, and of course medical science in these lines progresses just as it progresses in the treatment of human diseases. If these books are up to date I believe I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. They are the most valuable books published by the department.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the books are out of date, that is another matter.

Mr. JONES of Texas. All the information covered by these books is kept down to date by the department, and the figures as to the cost of these publications were furnished by the department itself.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is there anything in these books about the foot-and-mouth disease?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can not answer that question specifically.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That simply illustrates what I am saying. If these books need to be revised and rewritten, we do not want to appropriate $200,000 to have something printed that is of no value.

Mr. JONES of Texas. They are of great value. Even in the form in which they were last published these books are of a great deal more value than a lot of other things for the publication of which we have made large appropriations.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, unquestionably this book should be revised and brought down to date. Any medical book that is 10 or 12 years old is of little real value to-day.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It was last printed in 1916.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. All right; six years ago. There have been very decided advances in the treatment of certain diseases since that time.

Mr. KNUTSON. No doubt the war has led to new discoveries in veterinary treatment.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. New diseases are discovered and remedies are discovered. I am heartily in favor of the publication of these books, but I think they ought to be handled in such a way as to bring them down to date.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has stated that the work has been kept up to date. Has he the assurance of the department that both these works have been kept up to date?

Mr. JONES of Texas. What I meant to say was that the work in connection with these subjects has been kept up to date.

Mr. KNUTSON. There are new methods of treating new diseases.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; the department has all that information. I will say that there is nothing in this amendment that would keep them from modernizing the books. We will not make the subject any more modern by having a hearing on it. It will be in the discretion of the department to include such information as they desire to include.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, only a short time ago this same matter was before the House and an inquiry at the Department of Agriculture brought the information to the effect that if an additional issue of the cattle book was authorized no change would be made, that the book could be published with the entire approval of the department just as it has been published heretofore.

The department stated that a slight modification or addition would be necessary in the horse book, to cover one disease. I do not know what the medical name of it is, but in common parlance it is called the big head. I do not know that that affects horses alone.

Mr. KNUTSON. Some Congressmen, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. With that change, which can easily be made, the horse book can be published just as it is published now.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is the information I wanted.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment for two reasons: First, there has been no estimate asking for it from the Department of Agriculture; and second, I am opposed, as a general proposition, to the Government distributing so many books, pamphlets, and bulletins. As to many of them, we already have an oversupply. I am willing to grant that this particular publication called for in the amendment of my colleague [Mr. JONES] is probably one of the most useful that the Government prints, but how many will we get if this appropriation of $200,000 is made?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There will be 400,000 copies of each book.

Mr. BLACK. That will make probably three or four hundred copies of each for each Member to distribute in his district.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Four hundred thousand copies of the horse book and 400,000 copies of the cattle book.

Mr. BLACK. The Senate, of course, will be entitled to their quota, and I should say we would receive between three and four hundred copies of each of the books.

Now, I have 271,000 people in my district. I do not know how many are farmers, but if I am to intelligently distribute these books where they are to do the most good, how am I going to pick out of that number the 300 or 400 farmers to whom they should be sent? We all know there are entirely too many Government publications now to be sent out to those who have no special desire for them. Not long ago, walking through the corridors of the House Office Building, I saw a large pile of mail sacks in front of the door of a Member, whose name I will not mention, but I counted 47 sacks of different kinds of Government documents that were going out to his district for distribution.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will.

Mr. CARTER. That was probably some lame duck who was sending out the balance of his publications.

Mr. BLACK. No; he was not a lame duck. He was a good Member of Congress for whom I have a high regard. I presume these documents and publications had accumulated in his office and he felt it his duty to get them out to his constituents.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman wants to know how he is going to distribute these books. I will tell him my experience. After we had printed the books the last time notice was given of the publication in the newspapers that the books would be printed, and I had about twice as many requests as I could comply with. I sent all of my quota and begged all that I could, and still I did not have enough copies. The gentleman will not have any difficulty in getting the mailing list for these books.

Mr. BLACK. The statement of the gentleman just reinforces the very argument I make. If any one of the farmers in my district is entitled to receive the book at Government expense, then every farmer in my district ought to have a copy who wants one.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman might apply the same logic to Members of Congress. You would not send any man unless 300,000 in his district could go.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, no. I do not agree to my friend's illustration. I hold that every farmer in my district is a citizen of my district. In some one way or another he is a taxpayer, and if these publications are to be printed at the expense of the taxpayer, and are to be distributed, then, of course, it is unassailable from my point of view that there ought to be enough of them to supply every farmer who desires a free copy. Certainly the number which will be available by reason of this appropriation will not begin to go around if there is to be general distribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, the objection raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] against the appropriation for the printing of these books on the diseases of horses and cattle would also apply to the Agricultural Yearbook, of which we receive an allotment of about 700 copies.

The gentleman from Texas is concerned about the distribution of the book. I will say that the farmers, as a rule, have organizations in each community, and many of these organizations have libraries. These books can be placed in the libraries where they will be accessible to all.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is not, in my opinion, subject to a point of order, and if I have an opportunity I will vote for it because I think it is one of the most meritorious publications that the Government issues.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this much in addition to what has been already said. I think that of all the publications issued by the Agricultural Department this is one of the most useful. I have many requests for both of these books, and I send it to those who want it and have a use for it, and they can also be circulated through their libraries. The same objection urged by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] against these publications can be urged against the publications of the Bureau of Markets. It is only those who want the information, who write for it and who make the best use of them, that they will go to. I shall favor the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take issue with my friend from Texas [Mr. BLACK], with whom I usually agree on these matters.

A few days ago you put through a bill that carried an additional hundred million dollars annually, and in my opinion a very small portion of it, if applied to this proposition, would do the country a great deal more good. Since I have been in the House I have never voted to waste $200,000 or $300,000 on garden seeds for political advertisement. Frankly, I believe it is a mistake, and I know the farmers of my district—and I represent a farming district—think it is a mistake. I also know that a great many farmers are calling for these books on diseases of horses and cows. Every week I get letters from farmers wanting these books; they want to read them and apply their teachings in their stock raising. My friend from Texas says you can not send one to every individual. I admit that. It is not necessary to send one to every individual. But if you are going to knock it out on that ground you might as well also strike out the appropriation for farmers' bulletins. You only have an allotment of 20,000 of them a year, and you can not send one to each individual, as there are more than 200,000 people in each congressional district.

Mr. BLACK. The way I distribute those is to send a list to every registered voter in my district and allow him to select the ones he wants. I have always had enough to supply every request.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to know if he is able to do that with reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. RANKIN. Why certainly not. These books on diseases of horses and cows should not be sent out broadcast, but should be supplied to those individuals who apply for them and who are really in need of the information they contain.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that we do not intend to vote on this bill to-day. I want to make the point of order that it is time to do some Christmas shopping this afternoon, and I make the point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-eight Members present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll, and the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and Mr. MCARTHUR having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 13481, found itself without a quorum; that he directed the roll to be called, and that 158 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees for printing in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. When the point of order of no quorum was made three minutes' time remained, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think we ought to get excited about this proposition. If we are to preserve the integrity of appropriation bills and the jurisdiction of the committee which deal with legislative propositions, this House can not afford to put on this bill an item of this sort for which there is no legislative authorization. There have been no hearings upon this item, there have been no general demands for it so far as I know. While I am in entire sympathy with these publications, in a regular and orderly way, after consideration by a committee, it does not seem to me that this is the proper place to consider a proposition of this kind. The rules of the House provide that no direction shall be made, and the law itself provides that no direction shall be made for the printing of publications without the submission of an estimate of the cost of that printing, and had I recalled that fact when the question about the point of order was under consideration I think the Chair would have recognized that this item is subject to the point of order. However, I assume that the Members of the House desire to comply with the law, and will recognize the salutary character of the provision which requires that matters of this sort shall be considered by a committee, and that there shall be an estimate by the Government Printer as to the cost.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding is that the Chair has held that this is in order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not arguing the point of order.

Mr. HAUGEN. I hardly see the justice of the criticism that the matter should be considered by another committee.

Mr. ANDERSON. I think that any item that comes before the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union ought to have the prior consideration of some committee of the House, which this has not had, and, in view of that fact, it seems to me that the House ought to reject this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDERSON) there were—ayes 60, noes 41.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. JONES of Texas and Mr. ANDERSON to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ACQUISITION OF ADDITIONAL FOREST LANDS.

For the acquisition of additional lands at headwaters of navigable streams, to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. L., 961), as amended, $450,000.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The policy of the Federal Government in cooperating with the States in forestation and stream control is a wise policy. For that reason I shall not raise a point of order against this paragraph, but the section of the Weeks Act under which this appropriation is supposed to be in order was repealed by limitation on June 30, 1915. The rest of the Weeks Act is continued in force and effect. The preceding paragraph is in order because section 2 of that act is still the law. Section 3 was repealed by limitation on June 30, 1915. I call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the Agricultural appropriation bill to this fact, and also the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. If it is to be the policy of the Government to continue this appropriation, legislation should be had. Under the original act $1,000,000 was made available during the years 1910 and 1911, and not more than $2,000,000 for succeeding years, as appropriated by Congress, until June 30, 1915, at which time section 3 was definitely repealed by limitation explicitly provided in the act.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the authorities of the States concerned, or with individuals, to make such investigations and demonstrations as may be necessary in connection with the development of live-stock production in the cane-sugar and cotton districts of the United States, $46,500.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 25, page 71, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Field station, Woodward, Okla: For the maintenance in connection with the Woodward, Okla., field station of a live-stock department through which experiments and demonstrations in live-stock breeding and growing and feeding, including both beef and dairy animals, may be had, $6,500."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, this has been represented to me as a very important matter, and I only learned of its being left out of the bill through the good offices of my friend from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], a member of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, after the bill had already been brought into consideration by the House. On the next day I received a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Woodward, Okla., expressing great disappointment at the proposed suspension of this service, telling me of the good work being done and of the disadvantages that might result by abolishing this station. This live-stock branch of the station was only established in 1921, a little more than a year ago. Since that time the city of Woodward, Okla., has invested $15,000 in land for this enterprise, and now it is proposed here to abolish the matter and cut it off just as it is beginning to function to an advantage, thereby breaking faith with the city of Woodward and with the farmers in that section, who are interested in the tests and experiments being made.

I find by consulting the hearings that this is the only station in the United States carrying out a certain character of experiments in cattle feeding, and tests are being made both of dairy production and meat production by grazing cattle on winter wheat. The importance of continuing this work must certainly be apparent to every Member of this body who knows anything about stock raising and farming, and will certainly be considered of great importance by those now engaged in that line of business.

The importance of the work was admitted in the hearings by those speaking for the bureau, and even our friend from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], while stating that he had been opposed to the establishment of the station, if I mistake not, admitted in the hearings that it might serve a useful purpose if continued; but for some reason the gentleman seems to have permitted a good intention to go awry. In fact, the only reason given for the suspension of this service was that of Mr. LARSEN of Georgia saying that it was in pursuance of the policy of rigid economy. Certainly if this were the absolute truth we might submit to having this item stricken out of the bill; but with it ought to go a great many other items of less value, such as the item discussed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEPHENS] yesterday for some investigation in distillation of wood, and other purposes which are of doubtful value to the farmers and producers of this country. Yet this item, carrying an appropriation of $350,000, was retained in the bill by a majority of this committee. From the best information I can obtain, I have no doubt in the world that this service renders a splendid and useful purpose, a great deal better than that served by a great many other items in the bill, and, I am sure, will be taken advantage of to a great deal larger extent by the farmers and stock raisers of the country. The item should be reinstated, and I hope the committee will take that view of the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to be heard?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENFORCEMENT OF PACKERS AND STOCKYARDS ACT.

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the packers and stockyards act, approved August 15, 1921, $410,500: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $5,000 per annum except three persons at a rate not to exceed $6,500 each per annum.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on this paragraph I move to strike out the last word in order to ask some questions. I would like to ask why it is necessary to pay three employees in this bureau as much as $6,500 a year salary?

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman has reference to the item on page 79?

Mr. BLANTON. The top of page 79. It occurs to me that we are providing rather large salaries. Six thousand five hundred dollars salary per year is high for these three employees.

Mr. ANDERSON. Well, that is a very large job. The packers do not hesitate to pay $50,000 and $75,000 to their people.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and therefore, Q. E. D., every employee of the Government should receive as much as a private corporation pays their employees?

Mr. ANDERSON. No, I do not think so; but I think this is a very large job. I had a little to do with the drafting of the act, and I think we handed them a pretty hard job. I think we ought to have very efficient men to enforce that act.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman tell us what these particular three men do?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think they have but one $6,500 man now as far as my recollection goes.

Mr. BLANTON. But we are here providing for three to draw $6,500 each. Some of our expert scientists in this department are still drawing $4,000 a year.

Mr. ANDERSON. Some are drawing a good deal more than that.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of them are bureau chiefs at the head of bureaus and are yet drawing only $4,000.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman asks me, I think it is a shame they are.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I think our experts ought to be paid more, but some of these $6,500 and $7,500 fellows ought to be reduced because some of them are not valuable expert scientists.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is asking about these $6,500 men. I think I have the information here. One assistant to the Secretary, who is in charge of the entire enforcement act, draws $6,500 now.

Mr. BLANTON. That is probably not too much, but how about the other two?

Mr. ANDERSON. There is only one other, and he is consulting specialist in marketing.

Mr. BLANTON. Why then provide another at $6,500?

Mr. ANDERSON. We always have to leave them a little leeway because, you know, unless there is some opportunity for advancement in Government service, as there is in private employment, it is difficult to get satisfactory men.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, in this instance I will not oppose the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May I ask the gentleman in the time of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I ask for two minutes in order to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I simply want to ask whether practically all of these employees are selected under the civil-service system?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; practically all of them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is true also in regard to the next paragraph relating to the enforcement of the grain futures act?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So far as salaries are concerned I think they are very modest.

The Clerk read as follows:

MAXIMUM SALARIES.

During the fiscal year 1924 the maximum salary of any scientific investigator, or other employee engaged in scientific work and paid from the general appropriation of the Department of Agriculture, shall not exceed at the rate of $6,500 per annum: Provided, That for the fiscal year 1924 no salary shall be paid under this paragraph at a rate per annum in excess of $5,000 except the following: Not more than 12 in excess of $5,000 but not in excess of $5,500 each and not more than five in excess of $5,500 each.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph that it is legislation on an appropriation bill and a change of existing law in that it increases the amount that may be paid for scientific salaries up to $6,500 a year.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order? I do not want to take up the time of the committee to plead with the gentleman if he is going to be adamant on this proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. I think it is too much as a general proposition. Whenever they have had a reason for it they come in and ask for it and the committee is liberal with them, but just to give them general authorization to increase and jump the salary up to $6,500 a year, why, there is no telling how much money it might require of the Appropriations Committee in the future.

Mr. ANDERSON. No; this does not do it. It limits the number that can be increased.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 79, after line 18, insert: "The President is hereby authorized to extend invitations to other nations to appoint delegates or representatives to the International Farm Congress, to be held in the United States during the year 1923: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted or used for the expenses of delegates."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, this provision has been carried very frequently in an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. It is the usual provision authorizing the President to invite delegates representing the nations participating in the International Congress. Such an item has been carried almost every year in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and though it is probably outside of the rules of the House I think there will be no objection to it. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cooperative construction of rural post roads: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act as amended, $29,300,000, to be available until expended, being part of the sum of $85,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, by paragraph 1 of section 4 of the act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1923, approved June 19, 1922: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, immediately upon the passage of this act, to apportion among the several States, as provided in section 21 of the Federal highway act, approved November 9, 1921, the sum of $65,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, by said paragraph 1 of section 4 of the act approved June 19, 1922: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture shall act upon projects submitted to him under his apportionment of this authorization, and his approval of any such project within three years shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of its proportional contribution thereto.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CABLE. I would like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill about the appropriation of $50,000 that was carried in the law for 1922 for road purposes.

Mr. ANDERSON. That authorization will be taken care of, I understand, in the deficiency bill.

Mr. CABLE. When will that bill be reported out of committee?

Mr. ANDERSON. I understand in a few days.

Mr. CABLE. That money will be available for contracts entered into between the Federal Government and the States?

Mr. ANDERSON. It will be available for contract obligations for the current fiscal year, $50,000,000.

Mr. CABLE. It will take care of all contracts for the current fiscal year?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; so I understand.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I made a few remarks yesterday on the public-roads program. They did not get into the RECORD last night. I ask unanimous consent that they be put in the RECORD in the appropriate place on the roads item to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he may print the statement which he made yesterday in regard to the public-roads program in its appropriate place in to-day's proceedings. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following are the remarks referred to:

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will say to my colleagues on this side of the House that when we commenced the fight for the $50,000,000 appropriation for roads for the fiscal year ending June 30 next, there had not at that time been any provision whatever made to appropriate any of that money or to cover matured obligations. Since that time the deficiency subcommittee has had a hearing and they have come to a clear and complete understanding. The deficiency subcommittee will bring in a bill carrying $25,000,000 of that, and perpetuating the authorization for a period of three years, with legislation on it to which the Committee on Rules agrees. And secondly, it makes available $42,000,000 now lying idle in the Treasury, not contracted for by the States. That, with the money carried in this bill, will make $98,000,000 that will then be available to meet the obligations of the good-roads movement. They used $88,000,000 last year, and $78,000,000 the year before, and in my judgment $98,000,000 will be amply sufficient for the coming year. Many of these obligations under contracts let under the $50,000,000 appropriation of this year will mature by March, and if the deficiency bill carries an appropriation of $50,000,000 it will be then available. If the $50,000,000 is carried in this bill it will not be available until June 30, and therefore some of the States would have to wait until then before the money is available.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] reserved a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn. The Chair wants to remind the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] that in reading the bill we passed over without prejudice a paragraph on page 2, beginning with line 3, and ending with line 7 on page 3.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that we may return to this paragraph now and consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to return to the paragraph indicated and consider it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request that was made.

Mr. ANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the two paragraphs beginning on page 2, "Office of the Secretary," and ending on line 10 of page 3, be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the paragraphs beginning on page 2, "Office of the Secretary," and ending on line 10 of page 3, be agreed to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk have authority to change the totals in accordance with the action of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I renew my request of yesterday that I be permitted to insert in the RECORD an article from the latest edition of the Scientific American which, in my judgment, contains an unanswerable defense of the contention I have heretofore made, that we ought to continue the congressional free-seed distribution. When I made the request yesterday it was in the heat of debate, and the objection was interposed by gentlemen who disagree with me on this question but who are now convinced that I am at least entitled to this courtesy. The article will not occupy more than a couple of pages or a page and a half of the RECORD, and the discussion is so amplifying and so complete that even those who are opposed to what they term this "garden-seed graft" could not object to it. The objection that was interposed at the time, I have since been advised, was interposed under a misapprehension of the facts, and I am sure there will be no objection now to my renewed request. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks further in the RECORD by inserting the article from the Scientific American to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the article referred to from the Scientific American. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the article referred to:

[From the Scientific American, December, 1922.]

MILLIONS IN FOOD FROM FEDERAL FREE SEED—THE STORY OF 240,000 ACRES OF GARDENS AND $192,000,000 WORTH OF VEGETABLES.

(By George H. Dacy.)

Through his Congressmen, Uncle Sam annually gives away approximately 65,000,000 packages of vegetable and flower seed—the best seeds of their type and variety which are to be had in the world. All the Government free seed is tested for germination and trueness of type before it is disseminated among the amateur and professional gardeners, farmers, and suburbanites here, there, and everywhere throughout the United States. Ever since the inception of Uncle Sam's annual free-seed party commercial dealers and the general public have ridiculed the free Federal seed as cheap, impure, and generally "no account." Despite this, the demands for the free seed have increased. Our Representatives and Senators are swamped with applications for the large franked envelopes, each of which contain five packets of certain combinations of seed. The gardeners have tried out the seed and found it the best they ever used. They come back for more each season because they know that the only source from which they can obtain such superior seed is the Department of Agriculture.

The hives of the busiest bees look like centers of idleness as compared with the Government seed warehouse during the period from October to April each year, when the work of sampling, testing, packeting, enveloping, franking, and mailing the millions of congressional orders for seed is progressing at full speed. It is a well-planned orderly journey that the seed travels, from the gunny sack in which it came from the seed dealer to the franked package in which it is sent out by a Congressman to one of his rural constituents. There is no lost motion. The operations are all standardized and systematized. As far as possible mechanical appliances have been substituted for hand labor. One hundred and fifty girls and women are employed. They operate simple and efficient machines which expedite the rapid transfer of the tested seed from large sacks to small paper packets and finally to the mailing of five packets of the seed in one large franked envelope to the ultimate user.

For many years the Department of Agriculture has been opposed to the congressional seed project, as it is called. The Federal farming experts claim that the $360,000, which yearly is spent in buying seed and sending it to all sections of the country, could better be expended in securing from foreign countries new and rare seeds and cuttings of plants which appear to be adapted for cultivation under our climatic and soil conditions. But annually Congress overrides the recommendations of the department and adds the free-seed item to the agricultural budget in answer to the hundreds of thousands of letters which pour in from the highlands of Appalachia, the wildernesses of Maine, the deserts of Arizona, the cut-over lands of Wisconsin and Michigan, and where not in the United States. Our Federal lawmakers always reserve five-sixths of the seed for distribution among their constituencies. The remainder is allotted to the Department of Agriculture as an emergency seed supply which may be given to regions where weather conditions have been severe to the extent that their original quotas of free seed did not germinate.

As matters stand at present, each Congressman is entitled to 20,000 packets of vegetable seed and 2,000 packages of flower seed which he can distribute among the gardeners of his district. Needless to say, all the national lawmakers avail themselves to the full limit of their available quotas of seed. In fact, the Department of Agriculture has to keep a very accurate set of books on the seed debits and credits of each Representative or Senator. At the beginning of the annual seed distribution, each Congressman is credited with his just proportion of the Government seed on the books of the Department of Agriculture. Henceforward he is permitted to draw against this quota as if it were a bank account until his allotment of seed is exhausted. The persistence with which Congressmen try to overdraw their accounts indicates the great popularity of the officially inspected and guaranteed garden seed which Uncle Sam gives away.

Banks, merchants, and agricultural clubs the country over which have aided the respective Congressmen in the distribution of their seeds have kept tab on the resultant returns in the way of foodstuffs which emanate from this generosity of the Government. The average of innumerable reports shows that the representative acre of garden planted with Federal free seed yields at least $800 worth of foodstuffs. A leading bank of Grand Rapids, Mich., reports acre yields of vegetables worth $1,200 from the free seed gardens under its patronage. Last year more than 240,000 acres were planted with Government seed, which demonstrates a food production worth $192,000,000. It's a pretty good investment that Uncle Sam makes in his farm and garden seed donations. He spends $360,000 in buying and distributing the seed and the gardeners grow $192,000,000 worth of vegetables and truck crops. If any other Government or private philanthropy in the country in a single year can yield a return five hundred and thirty-three and three-tenths times as great as the initial investment, the writer would like to know about it. Even under the worst possible conditions, where one-third of each packet of seed was wasted, damaged in transit or otherwise injured so as to prevent germination, a return of at least $10 per packet of seed in food products has resulted from the averages compiled from 20 years of accurate records kept by Uncle Sam.

Those who use the Federal seed from Maine to Florida and from California to Pennsylvania by the hundreds of thousands indorse it as much better seed than they are ever able to buy on the local markets. The Government seeds germinate well and grow and produce bumper yields of vegetable crops. "Government seeds are the only ones on which I can always rely," writes a gardener from Mississippi. A Representative from Texas, who last year personally made a garden and grew vegetables, reports that his Federal seed gave excellent results, germinating well, and being admirably adapted to the climate of the Lone Star State. A school girl from a corn-belt State last season raised $20 worth of fine vegetables from one of the small packets of Government seed. An amateur gardener in Providence, R. I., produced $50 worth of vegetable from his large envelope of Government seeds. He won a prize offered by the local merchants' association for the best home garden. A couple of old-timers in Hamilton, Ohio, won a $50 prize from their backyard garden, the superiority of which they attribute to Uncle Sam's faultless seed. Enthusiastic indorsements of the free seed has come in hundreds of letters from Detroit automobile mechanics and cotton-mill employees of the South, as much seed is annually distributed among the working forces of such establishments.

Approximately 30 different combinations of seed have been worked out which are adapted to production in different sections of the country. For example, some of the vegetables which will flourish in Florida will fail in Minnesota. The superintendent of seed distribution studies the orders of each Congressman and makes sure that combinations of seed are sent out which are propitiously adapted to cultivation in the section of the country where the seed are destined for distribution. Naturally, city residents can not plant vegetable seed unless they have back yards. However, most of them can put out window boxes seeded with flower seed. Hence there is a special proviso by which Congressmen can exchange a certain proportion of their vegetable seed for flower seed for distribution in congested city sections.

In addition to being tested for germination, all the Government seeds are tested for trueness of type and name by planting some of them in the gardens of Uncle Sam's big experimental crop farm at Arlington, Va. All seed that does not germinate up to Federal requirements is rejected, while if any dealers provide seed which is not true to name they are blacklisted and boycotted so far as potential national purchases are concerned. Just to illustrate that this factor is one of crucial importance, it is worthy of mention that there are more than 1,600 different types of lettuce, 2,000 different varieties of radishes, and 1,800 different kinds of beans grown and sold commercially throughout the United States. American seedsmen catalogue this number of varieties; and although Uncle Sam does not recognize all of them officially, he has to know them and their aliases in order to determine what sections of the country they are adapted to. It is especially notable that during the last score of years, during which Uncle Sam annually has distributed from 100,000 to 1,500,000 pounds of seeds, the official tests of the Federal free seed have averaged over 80 per cent—a record altogether remarkable. During the past 20 years between 30,000 and 50,000 pounds of Government flower seed have been circulated among the public each year. Opponents of the free-seed distribution measure yearly raised a great hullabaloo concerning the large post-office deficit that results from the fact that the free seed is sent out under congressional franks. These contentions are wholly unfounded. Records kept by the Department of Agriculture show that during the last 20 years the average cost of handling the Government seed if it were distributed by a retail seedsman would have ranged from $55,000 to $130,000 a year, with the average about $110,000. This includes the true cost of postage on the basis of the actual weights of the large and small packages of seed. This would at best be but a small item to the Post Office Department. Furthermore, the system of handling the seed has been so standardized that the labors of the Federal mail service are reduced to a minimum.

The seed packages have to be prepared and circulated on a rush-order, full-pressure schedule. By law it is required that no seed be put into the mails before December 1 and that the distribution of seed by Congressmen be completed by April 1. The Secretary of Agriculture is allowed the special privilege of sending out free seed up to April 15. During a short period of four months—on the basis of current activities—65,000,000 packets of seed placed in 13,000,000 of the large franked envelopes have to be put into the mails. The inception and perfection of mechanical hands to expedite this work have been of immeasurable importance.

The Post Office Department keeps from 5 to 12 clerks at the Government seed warehouse during the mailing season sorting and routing the Government franks—the substitute postage stamps—into the different towns and villages over the United States. This system eliminates much laborious work in handling the packages of seeds in the official post offices. For example, if Senator X, of Georgia, desires to send 1,000 large packages of seed to political supporters of his in the town of Stark the franks are prepared and visèed by the postal clerks at the seed warehouse. Then they are passed on to the large manila envelopes, which in turn are filled with the desired combination of seed. When the packages are finally counted and placed in the mail bags they are ready to go directly to the mail train which will convey them to their destination. The same number of postal clerks can handle twenty times as many packages in this way as they can of ordinary unassorted commercial packages. An ordinary mail pouch will hold 200 packages of Government seed. It takes 65,000 mail bags to carry the free-seed supply from Washington to the localities where the gardens will be planted.

Gravity is harnessed as much as possible in aiding the big job of packing the seeds in paper envelopes. On the fourth floor of the seed warehouse there are 22 galvanized iron hoppers, each holding about 4 bushels of seed. These feed seed to as many packets and sealing machines on the floor below. Mr. Frank Clarke, of Waco, Tex., the contractor in charge of the packing, sealing, and delivery of the seed packages during the current year, has invented a very ingenious sealing machine, which has vastly aided in speeding up the work. Formerly it used to take three girls who worked by hand all day to fill and seal up 16,000 of the small packets. Now two girls working with a machine can fill and seal an average of 30,000 to 35,000 packages in a similar period. The record day's work has been 48,200 packages by two girls who worked at top speed and filled and sealed at the rate of over 100 packages a minute. One of the girls sits in front of a delivery tube provided with a revolving adjustable cup that deposits exactly the same amount of seed into each package. The other girl feeds the packets of seed (ranging in size from 8 to 1,200 to the pound) into the gluing and sealing machine. This machine consists of an endless belt provided with a series of cleats spaced to fit the different sized packets. It is operated by electricity. In turn, the packets are slipped into the spaces on the moving belt and carried under an automatic device consisting of a brass wheel which applies glue to the flaps and then under another special contrivance which folds over these flaps and presses them tightly so that the glue adheres and seals the containers. As the belt reaches the end of the machine and begins its downward and backward journey, each packet in turn is delivered to a large basket. When the basket is full, an attendant replaces it with an empty receptacle and dumps the filled container through a chute in the floor to a bin. There are as many different chutes and bins as there are different kinds of seed.

Altogether there are 64 of these V-shaped seed bins, which are large enough to accommodate 50,000,000 packets of seed. The 14 vegetables include beans, corn, peas, watermelons, cucumbers, squash, parsley, lettuce, onions, radishes, turnips, tomatoes, carrots, and beets. About 30 different combinations of these seeds are sent out. There are 10 different kinds of flower seed, including nasturtiums, sweet peas, petunias, poppies, mignonette, asters, cosmos, and the like.

On the second floor of the seed warehouse there are five large endless belts, each of which is manned by a crew of nine girls. Chutes from the seed bins above distribute the different kinds of seed, respectively, before certain of these girls who feed the small packets of seed into the large envelopes which are carried along the belt. For example, the combination of seed may consist of beans, corn, peas, beets, and lettuce. The franked envelope starts from the tables where girls paste the franks onto the proper envelopes. There it passes on belts to the next post, where the girl puts in it a packet of corn. The next girl slips in a packet of peas, the next one beets, and so on, until all five of the required packets of seeds are placed in the envelope. Then it passes before another girl who inspects the package to see that it contains the right kind and number of seed packets. The final operator runs the machine that glues and folds the envelope flap. The large packages are delivered into baskets which are dumped onto tables before inspectors who count and check the packages and deposit them into the mail sacks, whence they go direct to the railroad.

The five conveyer belts handle 125,000 large packages or 625,000 small packets of seed daily. The day's record for any belt is 36,600 packages or 183,000 small packets of seed. The belt operates at a speed which carries 84 of the cleated spaces for the envelopes before each girl a minute. These large belts travel a combined distance of 2,555 miles in packeting and preparing the free seed for distribution. If placed end to end, the 65,000,000 packets of seed distributed during 1922 would cover a distance of 8,551 miles, or about one-seventh of the distance around the world.

And that is the story behind those large envelopes of seeds which come to us in response to our request.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TOWNER as Speaker pro tempore having assumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 13481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that a vote was not to be taken on the passage of any bill until January 8.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole has reported, and the Speaker pro tempore has announced the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. The consideration of the bill in committee is concluded.

I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming moves that the House do now adjourn.

EXERCISES IN MEMORY OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE KINKAID.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. I will withhold it.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I understand that January 14 has been designated as the date for memorial exercises in honor of our late colleague, the Hon. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois. I have conferred with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], upon whose request this order was made, and I find it perfectly agreeable to him and to the Nebraska delegation that exercises in memory of the Hon. MOSES P. KINKAID, late a Representative from the State of Nebraska, be had on that day immediately after the memorial exercises in honor of Mr. MANN have been concluded. I ask that an order to that effect be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 30 REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following Senate concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 30.

Whereas Joseph Battell, late of Middlebury, county of Addison, State of Vermont, deceased, in and by his last will and testament devised to the Government of the United States of America about 3,000 acres of land situated in the towns of Lincoln and Warren, in the State of Vermont, for a national park; and

Whereas said lands were devised to the United States of America upon certain conditions, among which were the following: That the Government should construct and maintain suitable roads and buildings upon the land constituting such national park for the use and accommodation of visitors to such park, and should employ suitable caretakers to the end and purpose that the woodland should be properly cared for and preserved so far as possible in its primitive beauty; and

Whereas it is deemed inexpedient to accept such devise and to establish a national park in accordance with the terms thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the acceptance of said devise so made by Joseph Battell in his last will and testament be declined by the Government of the United States, and that the estate of the said Joseph Battell be forever discharged from any obligation to the United States growing out of the devise before mentioned.

—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate Joint Resolution 218, to create a commission to consider the proposal of a central building for art and industry in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until Wednesday, December 27, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HAUGEN: Committee on Agriculture. S. 3220. An act amending sections 2, 5, 11, 12, 15, 19, 29, and 30 of the United States warehouse act, approved August 11, 1916; with amendments (Rept. No. 1317). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LEATHERWOOD: Committee on Indian Affairs. S. 1829. An act for the relief of Walter Runke; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1316). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PARKS of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 13571) to amend section 71 of the Judicial Code, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TEN EYCK: A bill (H. R. 13572) to increase the limit of cost of the post-office building to be erected at Cohoes, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 13573) to determine proceedings in cases of contested elections of Members of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Elections No. 1.

By Mr. WILLIAMSON: A bill (H. R. 13574) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to erect a monument at Fort Pierre, S. Dak., to commemorate the explorations and discoveries of the Verendrye brothers, and to expend not to exceed $25,000 therefor; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 13575) to provide seed wheat for the drought-stricken area in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 13576) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Wray; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DUNBAR: A bill (H. R. 13577) granting a pension to Ella Kinser Anderson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 13578) granting a pension to George H. Burton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 13579) for the relief of Thomas F. Madden; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6678. By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: Petition of K. Jacobs and 80 other residents of Pontiac, Mich., protesting against Turkish atrocities and requesting the Federal Government to initiate measures to restrain further violence in this respect; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6679. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of the Bronx Board of Trade, in the city of New York, N. Y., urging a central post office; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

6680. By Mr. LEA of California: Petition of 42 residents of the State of California, favoring the abolition of the discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6681. By Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Petition of Mr. Lyle L. Putney and 13 other residents of Arcadia, Mich., favoring the abolition of the discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 27, 1922.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, Thou hast cared for us through the night season and hast granted us health and strength for the day and its duties. We look unto Thee this morning, asking that Thy guidance may be had and that every phase of life as presented to us may receive that kind consideration, that we may become more helpful in these days of need and of manifold problems, and finally receive Thine approbation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

MEDILL MCCORMICK, a Senator from the State of Illinois, appeared in his seat to-day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM ARIZONA.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I present the credentials of my colleague, the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], which have just been received. I ask that they may be read and placed on file.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, 1922, HENRY F. ASHURST was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Arizona a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1923.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State of Arizona. Done at the city of Phoenix, the capital, this 21st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1922.

ERNEST R. HALL.

[SEAL.]

By the acting governor:

JOHN MCK. REDMOND,
Assistant Secretary of State.

SENATOR FROM NEW MEXICO.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I present the certificate of election of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], certified by the governor, and ask to have the same read and placed on file.

The credentials were read and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

STATE OF NEW MEXICO,
Executive Department.

To the President of the Senate of the United States:

This is to certify that on the 7th day of November, in the year 1922, ANDRIEUS A. JONES, Esq., was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of New Mexico a Senator from said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1923.

Witness: His excellency our governor, Merritt C. Mechem, and our seal hereto affixed, this 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1922.

[SEAL.] MERRITT C. MECHEM.

By the governor:

EDITH WILSMAN,
Assistant Secretary of State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MYERS presented resolutions adopted by the Board of County Commissioners of Teton County, Mont., favoring the enactment of legislation for the taxation of unpatented lands on Government reclamation projects, which were referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bison and vicinity, in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Pleasant Valley Local No. 652, Farmers' Union, of Lawrence, Kans., indorsing the rural credit bills pending in Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Pleasant Valley Local No. 652, Farmers' Union, of Lawrence, Kans., protesting against the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LADD presented the memorial of J. D. Myers and 19 other citizens, of Raub, N. Dak., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called ship subsidy bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of George Kugler and 30 other citizens, of Fairmount, N. Dak., praying for the passage of legislation repealing the discriminatory tax on small-arms ammunition and firearms, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Edgar Wagar and 21 other citizens, of McHenry County, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation to stabilize the prices of farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on December 23, 1922, they presented the following enrolled bills to the President of the United States:

S. 3275. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil and Mexican Wars and to certain widows, Army nurses, former widows, minor children, and helpless children of said soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to widows of the War of 1812, and to certain Indian war veterans and widows, and to certain maimed soldiers, sailors, and marines; and

S. 4100. An act to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURSUM:

A bill (S. 4232) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enter into a contract with the Elephant Butte irrigation district, of New Mexico, and the El Paso County improvement district No. 1, of Texas, for the carrying out of the provisions of the convention between the United States and Mexico, proclaimed January 16, 1907, and providing compensation therefor; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

A bill (S. 4233) to provide for the appointment to higher grades of certain Army officers having conspicuously superior records; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4234) granting a pension to Lillian H. Corcoran; to the Committee on Pensions.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ODDIE submitted an amendment providing for bringing 4,887 acres of Paiute Indian lands in the State of Nevada within the provisions and benefits of a drainage district, organized pursuant to the laws of said State, for the purpose of draining the lands within the Newlands irrigation project, and appropriating $2,500 for the purpose of paying the first installment assessable against said Indian lands, etc., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13559, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment providing that the enlisted forces of the Navy shall not exceed 67,000 men, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13374, the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to reduce the appropriation for pay of the Navy from $121,446,892 to $91,446,892, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 13374, the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. REED of Missouri submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the so-called Borah amendment proposed to be submitted to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of the Borah amendment the following:

"The President is requested to at once cause the return to the United States of all American troops now stationed in Germany."

PROPOSED SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I submit a concurrent resolution and ask that it may be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 31) was read, as follows:

Whereas the production of silver in the United States is a large and important industry affecting the welfare of important communities and of a large number of citizens; and

Whereas the United States has throughout its history favored silver as an important element of its monetary system and now views with anxiety the recent tendency of many influential nations of the world to lessen the use of silver as money, in some cases by ceasing its coinage for subsidiary and fractional denominations, in other cases by diminishing the silver contents of coins of the same nominal value; and

Whereas such tendencies, if unchecked, will have a serious and far-reaching effect upon the monetary customs of the world and will directly and indirectly injure one of the world's greatest industries, that of mining; and

Whereas the subject is a complex one, requiring the investigation of many abstruse and difficult problems and their consideration by many nations: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States appoint a commission of nine, to be known as a "silver commission," of whom not more than three shall be Members of the United States Senate and not more than three shall be Members of the United States House of Representatives; that such commission be authorized to communicate with such nations as may be feasible, either individually or in a joint conference to be arranged for that purpose; that such commission shall use its influence toward the resumption of the use of silver in the various monetary systems of nations which have abandoned or lessened its use and shall also lend its influence toward the adoption of any step that may tend to stabilize the value of silver in the world's market; that the commission after such investigation and conferences as it may deem advisable shall report to the President its recommendations and findings; that no compensation shall be allowed to any member of such commission as such, but the actual necessary expenses of the commission shall be borne by the United States.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I move that the concurrent resolution be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RULES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I submitted on Friday Senate Resolution 385. It is on the table, I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the table calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that it may still lie on the table, going over for the day. There is other business to come up this morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request will be granted.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that on December 27, 1922, the President approved and signed the act (S. 4100) to amend section 9 of the trading with the enemy act as amended.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. HARRISON subsequently said: Mr. President, while it is very true that we are on the naval appropriation bill we can not lose sight of the important fight that is to proceed at an early date, I presume, touching ship subsidy.

A few days ago, on Tuesday, December 19, appearing in the Washington Post and other papers throughout the country—I read from the Washington Post—there was a statement issued by Mr. Lasker, chairman of the Shipping Board, in which he said—I read from the headlines of the Washington Post—

Lasker denounces CAPPER'S ship fight.
Statements published in Senator's paper declared biased and "at variance with facts."
Denies chief statements.
Says they were made on strength of minority report and are wholly erroneous.

The statement has been incorporated in the RECORD heretofore, but I desire to ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD, so that those who are studying the ship subsidy bill may get some facts from it, this statement in the form of a letter from Congressman DAVIS of Tennessee, a member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House, to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. I may say that Mr. DAVIS, in my opinion, is one of the best-versed men in the Congress touching this proposed ship subsidy legislation. He has given great thought to the question, and I am sure that he has sufficiently answered the chairman of the Shipping Board in this correspondence. I think it ought to be incorporated in the RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

DECEMBER 20, 1922.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: I note that Chairman Lasker, of the Shipping Board, has written you a letter, which he gave to the press, in which he takes you to task by reason of the fact that Capper's Weekly is conducting a poll on the ship subsidy bill and because the questionnaire accompanying the ballots contains a statement of the issue which does not wholly meet the approval of Mr. Lasker. In other words, Chairman Lasker takes exception to the fact that you have not swallowed without question all of the false propaganda which he has been busily engaged in preparing and disseminating, at least in part at Government expense, instead of attending to his official duties; the statute creating the Shipping Board provides that "each commissioner shall devote his time to the duties of his office."

Mr. Lasker has the temerity to upbraid you because the questionnaire mentioned contained even a modicum of the argument and facts against the bill, although it contained a much fuller statement in favor of the bill, stated as strongly as any proponent of the bill has stated it, and occupying nearly three times as much space in the questionnaire as the only statement therein which can be construed as against the bill.

The fact of the business is that opponents of this bill have infinitely more cause for complaint against said questionnaire than has Chairman Lasker.

The statement in the questionnaire from Capper's Weekly for which Chairman Lasker upbraids you, and which he incorporates in his letter, is as follows:

"1. Do you favor a ship subsidy? In order to stop $50,000,000 annual expense of the United States Shipping Board, to get the Government out of the shipping business, to make possible the sale of our Government-owned ships, to make it possible for ships under the American flag to compete with those under foreign flags it is proposed that the people, through their Government, shall sell the ships of their war-built merchant fleet for approximately $200,000,000, lend one hundred and twenty-five million to recondition the ships or build others, and then pay the owners about $750,000,000 in subsidies and aids within the next 10 years. A clause provides that when a ship has earned 10 per cent of its investment half of its earnings shall revert to the subsidy fund until the full subsidies it has been paid are returned. President Harding advocactes the subsidy plan as the cheapest way for the Government to get out of the shipping business. He believes an American merchant marine would greatly develop our foreign commerce."

Mr. Lasker further asserts in his letter:

"The statements as to the workings of the subsidy bill made in your circular are all taken from the minority House report prepared by Mr. DAVIS, Democrat, of Tennessee, a partisan report which everyone Washington wise knows was prepared for political purposes and is unjustified by the facts; your words are taken, practically syllable for syllable, from this partisan minority report."

I emphatically deny that the major portion of the statement in the questionnaire is taken from the House minority report or that it represents my views or that of any other Member who signed such report. On the other hand, the statement that "in order to stop $50,000,000 annual expense of the United States Shipping Board, to get the Government out of the shipping business, to make possible the sale of our Government-owned ships, to make it possible for ships under the American flag to compete with those under foreign flags it is proposed," is not only not in accord with the House minority report but each and every one of those contentions is denied and disproved in the said minority report, as was also done in speeches delivered in the House by all of us who signed the minority report.

The questionnaire contains the following statement: "A clause provides that when a ship has earned 10 per cent of its investment half of its earnings shall revert to the subsidy fund until the full subsidies it has been paid are returned." While this is one of the chief arguments of the proponents of the bill and stated in the manner in which it is usually stated, yet under provisions of the bill the only subsidies which would be so returned would be for the current year and not any subsidies which had been paid in previous years. Furthermore, it is insisted by those opposed to this bill that there would be no refunds under this provision, for the reason that any surplus would be taken up in salaries, through subsidiary companies, etc., in order to avoid a refund.

It will be noted that this questionnaire directs the readers' attention to the fact that "President Harding advocates the subsidy plan as the cheapest way for the Government to get out of the shipping business. He believes an American merchant marine would greatly develop our foreign commerce." This is naturally calculated to largely influence the voter to whom the questionnaire is sent.

In fact, your questionnaire was more than fair to the bill and its advocates. As the readers of your papers are largely farmers, it would have been entirely proper for you to have called attention to the fact that this bill is not drafted or designed in the interest of cargo carriers, in which the farmers are interested, as has been conclusively and irrefutably shown. You could have well explained that this bill conferred more power on Chairman Lasker and his associates than good men ought to want or that bad men ought to be given.

The portion of said questionnaire which seems to have so riled Chairman Lasker is as follows:

"It is proposed: That the people, through their Government, shall sell the ships of their war-built merchant fleet for approximately $200,000,000, lend $125,000,000 to recondition the ships or build others, and then pay the owners about $750,000,000 in subsidies and aids within the next 10 years."

Mr. Lasker states: "I challenge one to find where the Shipping Board has ever proposed that the war-built merchant fleet be sold for approximately $200,000,000." I accept that challenge.

The Shipping Board advertised the sale of the entire Government fleet last February. The New York Tribune of February 18, 1922, contained a front-page article which reads in part as follows:

"UNITED STATES TO SELL 1,470 SHIPS NEXT TUESDAY—ENTIRE MERCHANT FLEET, FROM "LEVIATHAN" TO TUGS, OFFERED—PROCEEDS FIGURED AT $200,000,000—SUCCESS DEPENDS ON SUBSIDY'S PASSAGE—READY MART AT TOP PRICES ASSURED IF CONGRESS ADOPTS HARDING'S PLAN.

"WASHINGTON, February 17.—The entire fleet of merchant ships owned by the United States Government will be offered for sale on February 21 it was announced to-day by Joseph W. Powell, president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The total of 1,470 vessels included is expected to net the Government close to $200,000,000, or an average of $20 a ton.

"All classes and types of vessels will be included in the sale, in the expectation that if the administration's proposed subsidy bill is passed by Congress the ships will find a ready market and assure a large, permanent American merchant marine."

The New York Tribune is a loyal supporter of the administration and of this ship subsidy bill. Articles similar to the above appeared in the press generally at the time.

I made a speech in the House of Representatives February 21, 1922, in which I read the Tribune article in full and commented thereon. Representative HARDY of Texas followed with a speech on the same subject, in which he, among other things, stated: "The proposition goes out that the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation propose to sell those ships at a round sum of $200,000,000." In fact, since said publications purporting to be an official announcement from the Shipping Board that it was expected that our fleet could be sold for approximately $200,000,000, in the event of the passage of this bill, it has been generally accepted as the expected sale price, and has been so mentioned by various speakers and writers, and, so far as I have seen or heard, Mr. Lasker's letter to you is the first instance in which he or any other member of the Shipping Board has questioned the correctness of such statements.

The statute required that those ships should be duly appraised before sale, and during the hearings on this bill the Shipping Board was requested to file such appraisal for the information of the committee and the Congress, but Chairman Lasker, through Commissioner Lissner, refused to file it, as appears on page 840 of the hearings, as follows:

"Mr. LISSNER. Reference was also made to the appraisals of these ships that were mentioned in the advertisement. The chairman has requested me to say to the committee that he regards it as against the interest of the public and as having a very detrimental effect if these figures should go into the record. They were simply informal appraisals that were made for the information of the board itself, and, in our opinion, they should not go into the record or be handed in here at all."

Although admittedly there was no sale for the ships at the time and the bids received therefor were described by Chairman Lasker as "facetious"—"a joke" (hearings, p. 47), Commissioner Lissner of the Shipping Board admitted at the hearings (pp. 989–990) that "one of the purposes of the advertisement was to put ourselves in the position where we could sell the ships, having said we had advertised them." In other words, the statute provides that the ships shall be sold "at public or private competitive sale after appraisement and due advertisement." The Shipping Board took the position that having advertised the entire fleet for sale on a certain day was such compliance with the requirement for "due advertisement," that they could for a reasonable time thereafter sell any of the ships at private sale without further advertisement.

As to another purpose of said advertised sale, I call attention to the following from page 990 of the hearings:

"Mr. DAVIS. I want to ask you if another purpose of this advertised sale was not that you would receive bids for certain vessels of different types, and that that could be taken as a proper criterion upon which you would be justified in selling other ships subsequently at private sale at the same price?

"Mr. LISSNER. It was the hope of the board that the bids that would come would be sufficiently illuminating and reliable so that we could make an estimate of the sales value of the ships; yes, sir.

"Mr. DAVIS. For future sales?

"Mr. LISSNER. Yes, sir."

It was the contention of Chairman Lasker and other representatives of the Shipping Board at the hearings that our ships should be sold at not exceeding world market prices for similar tonnage, and that such world market price for first-class cargo vessels is about $80 per ton or less. The large study prepared under the direction of the Shipping Board and widely distributed, states their position as follows:

"The Shipping Board should sell its remaining fleet as rapidly as possible at prices not to exceed the prevailing world market price for similar tonnage (p. 8).

"Moreover, it is clear that the sale of these ships to American owners on the proposed basis would merely tend to put those ships on a parity with similar foreign ships with respect to the first cost or book value and the fixed charges based thereon" (p. 83).

As evidence of the fact that this proposed sale only has reference to the half of our ships which Chairman Lasker estimated to be good ships, this same study declares:

"To achieve a balanced fleet then would involve the elimination of 3,000,000 gross tons (5,000,000 dead-weight tons) of cargo ships" (p. 40).

Upon the same subject, I call attention to the following extracts from the original statement of Chairman Lasker at the hearings (p. 7):

"Of our 6,000,000 tons of freighters, about half the steel tonnage is good tonnage—comparable to the best in the world. The other half ranges from fair to not usable for purposes and should be either sold abroad in such trades where we have every assurance it will not find itself in competition with our ships, or dismantled.

"Of the 6,000,000 tons of freighters the Government possesses it is the hope of the Shipping Board that ultimately a great measure of the 3,000,000 good tons will find itself in the hands of American owners, should the legislation here proposed be adopted. It is doubtful if, under the happiest conditions, the American flag will need the 3,000,000 good tons in its entirety, and ways and means must be found to dispose of such of the good tonnage as remains, so that American interests will not be hurt. Under no circumstances must the surplus good tonnage that America can not absorb be disposed of so as to bankrupt those who buy from the Government at current prices.

"Automatically the 3,000,000 poor tons must be done away with. Part of it can be used by selling to Americans the hulls at low figures for conversion to types of freighters of which we are not possessed. The balance may either be sold in small quantities in local trades abroad if any, where, because of shorter runs and cheaper labor, local operation may be possible, or it must largely be dismantled.

"It is the unneeded surplus, in ships as in all else, that determines the market, and the same circumstances that forced some farmers to burn their corn last winter demands that, at least so far as the uneconomical 3,000,000 tons of freighters go, we recognize that one of our problems is to force its disappearance from the market."

In further discussing the half of our tonnage which Chairman Lasker describes as from fair to useless, he says: "It is a very imprudent business man who fools himself on his assets. * * * Why should we swindle Americans by selling them ships that would only bankrupt them? It is unconscionable and the Government should not place itself in such a position" (p. 60).

Mr. Lasker correctly explains that 6,000,000 gross tons are equivalent to 10,000,000 dead-weight tons, and that ships are sold on a dead-weight ton basis. On cross-examination at the hearings he was questioned at length in regard to the value and anticipated sale price of our tonnage, and I quote from his testimony, as follows:

"Mr. LASKER. The world price on our good tonnage to-day is about $30.

"Mr. HARDY. You mean that there is 10,000,000 tons that is worth $30 a ton?

"Mr. LASKER. There is 5,000,000 dead weight that is worth $30 per ton if you can sell it. We have been willing to sell it at $30 per ton for some months now, and we have been able to sell exactly 100,000 tons at that price (p. 27).

"Mr. DAVIS. Now, Mr. Lasker, I assume that you and your associates have made some sort of estimate as to what you would hope to realize out of our fleet in the event this bill goes through?

"Mr. LASKER. I have answered that at such length to the judge and to Mr. BRIGGS that I can not think of a new way to answer it.

"Mr. DAVIS. It was stated in the press some time ago, purporting to come from members of the Shipping Board, that $200,000,000 was expected to be realized. Is that substantially correct?

"Mr. LASKER. I would not stand back of that figure. I do not know. It is in the womb of the future. If you do not give us this legislation, you will never get this $200,000,000; if you give us this legislation, you may get more. How much I don't know" (pp. 236–237).

"Mr. DAVIS. In other words, it would be 5,000,000 dead-weight tons, at $30?

"Mr. LASKER. Yes; that is it—well, wait; it would be 5,000,000, if $30 is what we get.

"Mr. DAVIS. Have you any real hope of realizing more than that on the average?

"Mr. LASKER. No; it is in the womb of the future. I don't want to be a prophet; I am no good at crystal gazing." (Hearings, 237.)

Neither Chairman Lasker nor any other representative of the Shipping Board could be persuaded to place any market value on the 5,000,000 dead-weight tons which they described as from fair to useless, nor would any of them make any estimate as to what they expected to realize upon this tonnage, even if the bill passed. However, in view of their pronounced policy of eliminating those ships by scrapping, dismantling, or otherwise disposing of them in such manner that they could not come in competition with the first-class tonnage and the other privately owned tonnage, it is quite evident that but a small amount could and would be realized upon same. It would certainly be a liberal estimate to say that same could thus be disposed of on an average of $10 per dead-weight ton, which would net $50,000,000. Assuming that the Shipping Board should be fortunate enough to sell this tonnage practically for junk at this price, and that they should sell all of the 5,000,000 dead-weight first-class tonnage at $30, they would only receive $200,000,000 for the total tonnage.

It appears clearly in the hearings that the hoped for price of $30 per ton is dependent upon the passage of this bill and also improved world conditions. Chairman Lasker and other proponents of the bill state repeatedly that there is practically no sale for our ships now at any price. On the same occasion in which Mr. Lasker testified as to the value and sale price of the tonnage, he declared that "at the present time there is, by and large, no market for our vast tonnage" (p. 13).

And he further stated "we can not sell ships to-day at all" (p. 230).

I also call attention to Mr. Lasker's testimony as to the intended sale of our ships appearing on pages 29 and 31 of the hearings.

W. J. Love, one of the $35,000 experts and a vice president of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, stated at the hearings that he thought that our ships ought to be put on the market and sold for whatever they would bring regardless of price, even though our ships might thus fall into the hands of one large combination, after which he was questioned, and testified as follows:

"Mr. BRIGGS. I am speaking about the price the Government can get for its fleet. Suppose the bids came in—if this bill should pass—and the bids made were of about the same character as those recently made for the fleet, and it was thought then that Congress intended that the fleet should be sold and put into the hands of private operators at the best price the board could get. They would have to sell it?

"Mr. LOVE. Then you are going to end all the good that is done, because if you are going to hold it and sell it at the value established after the subsidy is made a law you are going to put into the hands of the private operators ships at a higher cost and put another burden on them.

"Mr. BRIGGS. You don't think that ought to be done?

"Mr. LOVE. Let them sell the ships at the best price they can get for them now and start over like everybody else starts.

"Mr. BRIGGS. Well, it is generally conceded that nobody now wants ships. That is true, isn't it?

"Mr. LOVE. That is true.

"Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Lasker has testified here that the bids they received were facetious. He regarded them as a joke.

"Mr. LOVE. That is true" (pp. 862–863).

H. H. Raymond, president of the American Steamship Owners' Association, after having stated that he did not think any ships could be sold now, was asked as to whether he would favor selling any of them until after the bill is passed, and he replied: "I would say emphatically that I would sell every darn ship that the Government has got as fast as I could and get the Government out of business" (pp. 987–988).

Similar views were expressed by other shipowners. As they have controlled the policies of the Shipping Board thus far, it may be reasonably presumed that they will do so in the future.

As a matter of fact, if this bill passes and the disposition of our fleet is left to the present Shipping Board I am convinced that it will not be sold for anything near as much as $200,000,000. In fact, the Shipping Board has sold several 4,100-dead-weight-ton steamers of best quality for $76,000 each, and have announced this as a fixed price for steamers of this type; that is, $18.53 per ton.

Mr. Lasker does not deny that it is proposed to lend $125,000,000 "to recondition the ships or build others." His comment on this is so utterly unfair and childish that it does not deserve notice.

As to the amount of the subsidies and aids provided in the bill, Chairman Lasker repeats the false statements, which he had iterated and reiterated, after having on cross-examination admitted the falsity of same; and he persists in resorting to the sophistry of discussing only the direct-voyage subsidies, as if that was all the burdens imposed by the bill. After considerable cross-examination, appearing on pages 239 to 242 and on pages 271 to 276 of the hearings, Mr. Lasker finally testified as follows:

"Mr. LASKER. Let me see, now, I think we can get a quick meeting of the minds.

"The total cost to the Treasury if the bill ever becomes highly successful in operating, so that we have an adequate merchant marine for peace and war, will be: Customs, $30,000,000; tonnage, $4,000,000; income tax, $10,000,000; construction, $5,000,000; and postage, $5,000,000.

"Mr. DAVIS. How much does that add up—$52,000,000?

"Mr. LASKER. That will add up $52,000,000."

This enumeration does not include certain indirect aids which Mr. Lasker was unable to estimate, although Mr. Lasker did say that the indirect aids were more valuable than the direct aids. Nor does it include the benefit to private shipowners by reason of elimination of the Army and Navy transport services, Mr. Lasker estimating that the net earnings to privately owned lines from this business in the Pacific alone would amount to approximately $5,000,000. Nor does it include benefits to the shipowners which do not involve a burden upon the Public Treasury, such as the provision requiring one-half of the emigrants to come in American-flag ships, which Mr. Rossbottom estimated would give the American shipowners net profits of $8,500,000 even under the present 3 per cent immigration law.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Lasker was entirely too low in his estimates, and as the bill was indorsed by him and the President and as it passed the House it would involve a charge upon the Public Treasury of at least $75,000,000 per year, or $750,000,000 in 10 years, as has been fully shown in the minority report by Senator FLETCHER, by me, and others.

In keeping with his arrogant attitude, Chairman Lasker repeatedly refers to the fact that he and other representatives of the Shipping Board had testified at the hearings that the cost would be so-and-so, as if such assertions were conclusive and should not be questioned, when as a matter of fact such assertions were conclusively disproven upon the cross-examination of the same witnesses who asserted them, as well as by other facts.

Mr. Lasker begs the question by referring to amendments which were made in order to muster enough votes to jam the bill through the House or to report it out of the Commerce Committee. However, the amendment purporting to limit the voyage subsidies alone to $30,000,000 per annum is wholly ineffective, as it is based upon the proposition that the Shipping Board "is satisfied that the amount payable in any fiscal year" * * * "will not exceed the sum of $30,000,000." Besides, if it is not intended that the payment of voyage subsidies shall exceed $30,000,000 per annum, why is it so strenuously insisted that there shall annually be paid into this subsidy fund 10 per cent of customs duties, which it is estimated will amount to $45,000,000 under the present tariff law, and also tonnage taxes of over $4,000,000 per annum, aggregating $49,000,000, not to speak of the provision for refunds from subsidy recipients making over 10 per cent profits, upon which Mr. Lasker lays much stress, but which, I will frankly state, I consider of no consequence.

In his letter to you Chairman Lasker states that "the statements as to the workings of the subsidy bill made in your circular are all taken from the minority House report prepared by Mr. DAVIS, Democrat, of Tennessee, a partisan report which everyone Washington-wise knows was prepared for political purposes and is unjustified by the facts." This characterization of the minority report is wholly and unqualifiedly false. Said report was originally filed June 28, 1922, and neither Mr. Lasker nor anybody else has answered or refuted a single statement contained therein. On June 13, last, I made a speech on this bill in the House in which I set forth the reasons for my opposition thereto, most of my speech being predicated upon testimony given by Chairman Lasker and other witnesses in behalf of the bill, and neither Mr. Lasker nor anybody else has as yet answered or refuted any portion of that speech.

I am opposed to this bill because I am opposed to subsidies in principle, but if I was in favor of subsidies I would be unalterably opposed to them being determined and dispensed by Albert D. Lasker; I would also be opposed to this bill because it is vicious and un-American in form, and because it involves an abdication by Congress and a usurpation of the rightful power of future Congresses. I am opposed to the bill because I am convinced that its passage and operation would be a hindrance, instead of a help, to a healthy, privately owned American merchant marine, although involving vast public expenditures. It is true that those of us who signed that minority report happen to be members of the minority party, members of the Democratic Party, which through its national platform has repeatedly declared against ship subsidies. However, the Republican Party in its national platform has never declared in favor of ship subsidies, even at times when efforts were being made to put such bills through Congress. It is also true that 69 Republican Members of the House voted against this bill, and it is quite probable that at least that many more would have voted against the bill but for the pressure from the White House, or if the bill had been voted upon before the recent election.

Mr. Lasker purposely injected this charge of partisanship, because he knows that his infamous bill can not win upon its merits and that its only chance of passage through the Senate is as a partisan administration measure, as that was its only chance in the House.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Lasker endeavored to work both sides of the street in a partisan way. While he was busily engaged in trying to line up Republican Members of Congress, he assigned to the members of the Shipping Board who had been appointed as Democrats the duty of lining up the Democratic Members, and said members of the Shipping Board, pursuant to such plans, addressed letters to the Democratic members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Representative HARDY of Texas and I in a reply to such letter (both letters appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 13, 1922), wrote in part:

"We readily concede that our merchant marine problem is of such transcendent importance that it should be solved upon merit and principle and not upon partisanship. However, with reference to the manner in which the matter has been handled, we wish to call your attention to certain facts of which you seem to be wholly oblivious. It is generally understood that Mr. Lasker was appointed chairman of the Shipping Board because of a very shrewd and valuable political service rendered during the last campaign; he certainly could not have been appointed because of any knowledge of shipping matters. His appointment, from a political standpoint, has been fully justified because he has demonstrated beyond question that he is a master politician. After months of laborious effort he has succeeded in committing the President to an elaborate and expensive ship subsidy program, a position never taken by a previous President. More than that, Mr. Lasker has enmeshed all the members of the Shipping Board in this program. This is especially significant in view of the fact that until now perhaps no high Government official in this country has openly and boldly advocated a ship subsidy since the emphatic rejection of such suggestions many years ago.

"Furthermore, Chairman Lasker, pursuant to the nonpartisan consideration for which you innocently vouch, invited the Republican members alone of the Merchant Marine Committee and the Commerce Committee to a dinner in his home, and after he had sumptuously fed them unfolded his ship subsidy program and undertook to commit them to it; and it has since been repeatedly announced in the press that Chairman Lasker has been in conference with the Republican members of said committees, that they had indorsed the ship-subsidy proposition in principle, and, later, that a bill had been agreed upon by Chairman Lasker, the President, and the Republican members of said committees. However, we predict that it will be demonstrated that Chairman Lasker misjudges some of the Republican members of said committees.

"Still further pursuing this nonpartisan course, a document of 268 pages, in which were assembled all the possible arguments in favor of ship-subsidy legislation, and particularly in favor of the bill which has since been introduced, was prepared and confidential copies thereof furnished to all the Republican members of the Merchant Marine Committee and Commerce Committee. It purported to have been prepared by the Bureau of Research of the United States Shipping Board at the instance of the latter. The undersigned, Mr. DAVIS, addressed a letter to the Shipping Board, requesting a copy of that document as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, stating that as it had been prepared by Government officials at Government expense he presumed that he was entitled to a copy thereof. He received a reply from Chairman Lasker, in which he advised that those copies 'had been completely exhausted.' He further stated that it had been 'prepared at the request of the President and for him, and was furnished to him and to such persons as he directed.' This statement in spite of the fact that copies of said document had been furnished to all the Republican members of the Merchant Marine Committee of the House and the Commerce Committee of the Senate, but to none of the Democratic members.

"Having, as he believes, successfully lined up the Republican members of said committees, Chairman Lasker has apparently assigned to you gentlemen the task of lining up the Democrats on said committees. However, you may tell Chairman Lasker that we are not as easily ensnared as some people he has come in contact with, and that we respectfully refuse to be 'bound and gagged' while he and the rest of you advocates of this iniquitous ship subsidy bill industriously disseminate your deceptive propaganda and lull the people and the Congress to sleep while you complete the job."

I take the liberty of addressing this letter to you in view of the fact that Chairman Lasker impersonated me in his letter to you, which he gave to the press and had inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Yours very sincerely,

EWIN L. DAVIS.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the further consideration of House bill 13374, the naval appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Bursum	Dial	Glass
Ball	Cameron	Dillingham	Hale
Bayard	Capper	Elkins	Harris
Borah	Caraway	Fernald	Harrison
Brandegee	Culberson	Fletcher	Heflin
Brookhart	Cummins	France	Hitchcock

Lenroot	Nicholson	Sheppard	Watson
Lodge	Norbeck	Shortridge	Weller
McCormick	Norris	Smoot

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am very loath to take any time or to delay in any way one of the major appropriation bills; but the House has adopted at the close of the pending bill a provision requesting the President "to enter into negotiations with the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan with the view of reaching an understanding or agreement relative to limiting the construction of all types and sizes of subsurface and surface craft of 10,000 tons standard displacement or less, and of aircraft." The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has proposed an amendment extending that request so as to cover land armament, and also inserting an entirely new subject, requesting and authorizing the President to call a conference for the purpose of considering economic problems.

The provision of the House bill and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho open questions of such grave importance that I do not feel willing to allow them to pass wholly without comment. They propose to request the President and to authorize him to take certain action in entering into negotiations with foreign powers. Under our Constitution and our system of government the conduct of our relations with other nations is under the control of the President of the United States. The President must conduct all such negotiations, and he carries the great responsibility of our foreign relations. It could not be otherwise, either constitutionally or practically; for a legislative body is, to all intents and purposes, incapable of conducting negotiations.

There are several instances in our history where the President has consulted the Senate in regard to negotiations or as to entering upon negotiations, and there are other instances on the other side where the Senate has expressed to the President its opinion as to entering upon negotiations or as to their purpose and conduct. There can be no doubt of the right of the President so to consult the Senate or of the Senate so to advise the President; but, of course, the final power in regard to negotiations rests and must rest with the President. The President is not bound by any action or any advice we may offer in regard to negotiations any more than is the Senate bound, when a treaty comes within its jurisdiction, to accept the advice of the President. At the same time, almost any President would give great weight to the advice of the Senate, which shares with him the treaty-making power, in regard to negotiations. Therefore the advice we offer should be most carefully considered.

To inaugurate such a conference as is proposed by the Senator from Idaho is not at all like summoning a conference to consider the question of coal or unemployment or railroads; those are matters of vast importance to the people of the United States, but they are wholly domestic and are within our own control. When, however, we undertake to advise the President as to his duties as the representative of the United States in charge of our foreign relations, the matter assumes a much graver complexion. That is especially true when we advise the President to invite a conference of the powers. When the United States invites other nations to meet here in a conference it assumes a serious responsibility. We have the same right that every other power represented has to put our veto on any proposition which may be made, but it is not a little difficult for us to do so when we are in the attitude of a host. Therefore it is of the utmost importance when we urge the President to invite other powers to a conference that we make very explicit exactly what that conference is expected to do.

The first proposition suggested by the House provision and by the amendment of the Senator from Idaho relates to disarmament; that is, to extending limitations to surface, subsurface, and auxiliary craft of navies generally. It seems to me that it is well very briefly to call the attention of the Senate to just what has been done. It is now barely a year since the President, with the approbation of Congress and the general approbation of the country, called a conference here for the purpose of considering the question of disarmament, or I should say, to be more exact, the limitation of armament. It was not confined to the limitation of naval armament alone; it covered also land armament, as does the proposed amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

Let me deal with the question of land armament first. It was the first subject dealt with by the conference. It was taken up at the third plenary session on the 21st of November, 1921; and, I think, we all must remember the speech then made by M. Briand, the prime minister of France at the time, on the question of the limitation of land armament. It was a speech of great force and great eloquence. He stated the position of France, and that they could not consent to any limitation of land armament in the present condition of affairs in Europe. That, of course, put an end to any further action by the conference on the question of land armament, for no action could be taken except by unanimous agreement. As a matter of fact, the United States had reduced its land armament to something less than a proper peace basis, and Great Britain had also reduced to a similar but sufficient basis her land armament; but the refusal of France, in which, as I recall, she had the sympathy of Japan, of course, put an end, as I have said, to any further consideration of the limitation of land armament.

France may have changed her attitude in that respect within the year, but if she has I have had no information to that effect. Of course, the Senator from Idaho may have information that France has altered her opinion; but, in any event, it would be useless to call a conference for the limitation of land armament without knowing as a preliminary step that France was ready to withdraw her objection and ready to consider with the other powers the limitation of her land forces. It would be futile to call a conference for the reduction of land armament unless it were known beforehand that those powers that were summoned were not going to object at the very beginning to any consideration of that point.

Now, as to surface and subsurface boats and the other auxiliary craft the limitation of which both the House and the Senator from Idaho desire to have a further conference to consider, when the Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, opened the Washington conference, after stating in detail the proposition for the limitation of capital ships, he said:

> The plan includes provision for the limitation of auxiliary combatant craft. This term embraces three classes; that is: (1) auxiliary surface combatant craft, such as cruisers (exclusive of battle cruisers), flotilla leaders, destroyers, and various surface types; (2) submarines; and (3) airplane carriers.

In the appendix which is printed with his address the plan is given in detail, and will be found on page 60 of the report of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament, under the head of "Auxiliary combatant craft," and it begins:

> In treating this subject auxiliary combatant craft have been divided into three classes:
> (a) Auxiliary surface combatant craft.
> (b) Submarines.
> (c) Airplane carriers and aircraft.

Then follow propositions of limitation of the tonnage of such craft by the United States, Great Britain, and Japan; limitation of new construction, and scrapping of old construction; the limitation of submarines, of new construction, and the scrapping of old construction; the limitation of airplane carriers and aircraft, with the limitation of new construction and scrapping of old construction. Then come replacements, aircraft, and clauses relating to the merchant marine. In other words, the American delegation, the representatives of the United States, presented through Mr. Hughes to the conference a complete plan for the limitation of all the various kinds of auxiliary craft which are covered by the House provision and by the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The matter was taken up in the committee of the conference charged with the question of naval disarmament, and was discussed at great length. I need not go into all the details of it. The French were opposed to the propositions as to capital ships, to which, however, they ultimately assented; but as to auxiliary craft, I read simply a passage from the telegraphic letter of M. Briand to Mr. Hughes on December 10, in which he says:

> But so far as the defensive ships are concerned—light cruisers, torpedo boats, and submarines—it would be impossible for the French Government, without putting itself in contradiction with the vote of the chambers, to accept reductions corresponding to those which we accept for capital ships under this formal reserve, which you will certainly understand.

I have marked here the different statements that were made in the course of the debate, which it is not necessary to take the time of the Senate to read; but I can state the matter very briefly.

To take submarines first, Great Britain proposed that the conference should agree to the complete suppression of submarines—to their abolition. To that, I think, all the members of the conference objected, and it proceeded no further. The United States then made a proposition for the limitation of submarines. We had at that time something over 80,000 tons, a larger submarine tonnage than any other power. We proposed to put on a limitation of 60,000 tons. France declined the limitation, and so, as I remember, did Japan, although after one declination no more was needed; but Holland, one of the smaller powers, also made strong objection to any limitation of submarine tonnage.

It is not necessary to go into the reasons of the different powers for this action; but the objection was an absolute one, and that made it impossible for the conference to effect any limitation of the submarines or the auxiliary craft except the general limitations put on as to the caliber of guns on vessels of less than 10,000 tons. That was a very important limitation, because it prevented competition in what is really the dominant element in a navy. Therefore no limitation was placed on auxiliary craft. The conference was unable to do it, owing to the refusal of France and other powers.

The naval treaty has been ratified by Great Britain, Japan, and the United States. It has not yet been ratified by France and Italy, the other two signers of the naval treaty. I hope and believe, and I have every reason to believe, that France will ratify the treaties of Washington within a very short time; but we have received no information, so far as I am aware, from France, from Holland, from Japan, or from Italy, that they are ready to meet us in conference and place limitations upon submarines and auxiliary craft. As in the case of land armament, it would be perfectly idle to take the great responsibility of calling a conference to consider limitations which were rejected only a year ago unless we had assurance from the powers invited that they were ready to consider the question of limitations for surface and subsurface and for auxiliary craft generally. It might not do any harm, except to put us in the rather absurd position of asking for a conference to consider limitations of armament which we knew beforehand would be refused, but it certainly could do no good. I have cordially supported, myself, the limitations which were made and we went as far as we could go, and I thought them a great step in advance; but it seems to me there is nothing to be gained until we are informed and until Congress is informed by those charged with our foreign relations that the time has come when we can have a conference which will be effective in further limitations applied to submarines and other auxiliary craft.

I know very well what the evidences of competition are to which the Senator from Idaho referred the other day. I know that the powers are building aircraft carriers and cruisers, as they have a right to do under the existing treaty of Washington. So far as the United States is concerned, we ought to build those light cruisers, and we ought above all to build the airplane carriers, whether a limitation is to be put upon them or not, because, though the Navy of the United States was very powerful in capital ships, in destroyers, in submarines, it was not well balanced. We had practically only one or two light cruisers. We had 10 authorized, vessels of 75,000 tons burden, and we need those light, unarmored cruisers very much. Some of them are under construction now. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] can tell the Senate just what their state of advancement is. They are absolutely needed. We ought to have them.

We have no airplane carriers. It is recognized, I think, by everyone, that the forces of the air will play a very great part in future naval warfare. Airplane carriers are necessary to accompany the fleet for the purpose, as their name implies, of carrying airplanes.

Without having looked into it with any minuteness, I think we are altogether too weak in regard to airplanes themselves; and although I most cordially supported the limitations of the treaties and believed, as I have said, that they constituted a very great step toward relieving the people from tax burdens and securing the peace of the world, I am not one of those who think that the time has come when we should have no navy or reduce it to a mere handful of ships.

It has been the characteristic of the American people, after they have had a war, to conclude that there never would be another. After the Civil War we proceeded practically to destroy our Navy, and in a comparatively few years we had no navy left. Then, at great expense, we went to work and slowly built it up. The performances of our new Navy in the Spanish War were such that the people generally were very ready to uphold it and we went on building a navy, with some stumblings and hesitations and not on a comprehensive plan; but still we went on building ships, and we all know what the history of our Navy was when the Great War broke upon us. I hope there never will be another war. I do not believe there is a man or a woman living who hates the thought of war more keenly than I do; but the Navy and the Army are still necessary implements of national protection and defense.

No matter what treaties are made, we must have some means of protecting our commerce and our citizens abroad and our own territory and our citizens at home. I have had no sympathy with the extremes to which the House has gone, I was about to say not in the destruction of the Army but in reducing it to a point which is so low as to be positively perilous. It so happened that in 1919 the capital city of my State was for 24 hours left without a police force, which in its essence is a military force for the protection of a given locality. No one who is familiar with what then happened, I think, will ever recover from the lesson, which showed that it was not the body of men whom we see managing traffic, preserving order in the streets, arresting criminals, and so forth, but it was the fact of the existence of the force on which the safety of a great city depended. In those few unguarded hours there broke out from the darkness and from hidden places criminals and marauders. They suddenly appeared. Shops were broken into and sacked, lives were endangered and some lost, and the great city was at the mercy of those forces which are hidden from sight while we all live in the sunlight of well-protected streets and houses, and then in a flash people found the danger which was close to them. Among human beings there was an element which simply desired to rob, plunder, and destroy. Massachusetts was fortunate in her governor, who now presides over this Senate, and who, by his vigor, determination, and calmness, was able to face that crisis, and who happily was aided by a police commissioner who was a man of great courage, force, and readiness. The result of the governor's action was that the peril was over in 24 hours. The troops of the State were brought in, most of them men who had just come back from service in the Great War, and order reigned when those men appeared. But, Mr. President, those who saw and knew what happened in that one night realize the necessity of organized police or military protection if the fabric of society is to be at all maintained and anarchy and pillage are not to prevail.

What is true of the necessity of the manitenance of a police force in all our States and cities is equally true of this troubled world. No man can tell when some reckless, desperate power, perhaps a small one, may suddenly make an attack upon American citizens in foreign lands. In such emergencies it is necessary for every nation which undertakes to protect its citizens in every corner of the earth, as every great nation should, to have ships and troops, and not be obliged to wait for days and weeks, and perhaps months, before they can raise them. It is not a question of war making; it is a question of ordinary protection and safety, and under whatever arrangements we may make there is a limitation of reduction which ought always to be observed. It is not only not economy, it is the most reckless extravagance, to reduce the Army and the Navy of the United States to a point where we have no means of performing the duties which every great nation is obliged to perform.

I am not saying that, Mr. President, because I am opposed to a further limitation applied to auxiliary craft. I did my best personally only a year ago to secure those limitations. I should be glad to see them made now. But there is something that is not good like a limitation, something that is very dangerous, and that is when, without regard to national safety, we proceed in a false spirit of economy to enter on the road of abolishing or destroying our Army or our Navy.

I hope we can bring about a further limitation of auxiliary craft, just as I hope we shall keep our Navy, limited as it now is, at a point of high efficiency, and that we shall not allow it to go limping along without proper provisions for surface and subsurface craft and air defense. We have two great half-finished battleships, which were provided for in the treaty, which can be made into airplane carriers at once, and that ought to be done. We ought also to build up our airplane force.

Mr. President, I am aware I have strayed a little from the chief point I wanted to make, which is that desiring as I do to extend the limitations of a year ago, then confined to capital ships—I am putting aside for the moment the limitations which were put on gun calibers, which were equally important—I want to see those limitations extended to the auxiliary craft. I have told the Senate what the Senate and the House both should remember, that just about a year ago several of the powers assembled in Washington refused to agree to any limitations of the smaller craft, and until we can receive assurances that they are ready to proceed with those limitations and the limitation of land armaments, I confess I see nothing to be gained by our issuing an invitation which we know would either not be accepted or, if accepted, would be fruitless.

Mr. President, now I come to the very important proposition, not at all considered by the House, embodied in the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; that is, a proposition for an economic conference. That, of course, is wholly new. In my judgment it is subject to the point of order; but I am not going to argue the point of order this morning. It no doubt will be made at the proper time. I am quite aware that the House in its clause put in general legislation in disregard of their rules, and when it came here it was in order because it came from the House, and I know very well the rulings made by Vice President Marshall in regard to the right which such action by the House conveyed to the Senate to amend general legislation and extend it if it was put in by the House. But this proposition for an economic conference is entirely new. It has no relation to the general legislation proposed by the House, and its importance is very great indeed.

Of course, we are all anxious to do everything we properly can do to restore business stability to Europe and to aid Europe in that direction in any reasonable way we can. Selfishness alone would be a sufficient reason for that, because the restoration of Europe to stability would tend to widen our markets and increase our commerce. Also, the American people feel a deep sympathy and also a very deep indignation agninst some of the cruel massacres perpetrated by the Turks which have disfigured Asia Minor and which have made the taking of Smyrna forever infamous. Everyone with any human sympathies at all must be anxious to have the United States do all it can to aid Europe in the situation which exists.

This amendment of the Senator from Idaho provides for "a conference which shall be charged with the duty of considering the economic problems now obtaining throughout the world with a view of arriving at such understandings or arrangements as may seem essential to the restoration of trade and to the establishment of sound financial and business conditions." That is very broadly drawn. It has no boundaries. It extends, or can be extended, from the heavens above to the earth beneath.

It seems to me, Mr. President, if we are to consider it at all with a view of action here—and it is very important action to express the opinion of the Senate on a matter involving our foreign relations—that we ought to know before we do it exactly what the powers of the conference are to be and just what the amendment means. As the amendment is worded, there is nothing to prevent such a conference, if called and assembled, from considering the question of the foreign debts due to the United States. It is true that consideration of those debts is now provided for by an act of Congress, but a treaty, if ratified, would override the act of Congress, just as an act of Congress could abrogate a clause in a treaty if made subsequently.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I asked a question?

Mr. LODGE. Not the slightest.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to say that if the treaty were agreed to, of course it would override the act of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. I meant ratified, of course.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not contend that the Congress itself may do anything toward canceling the debt until it is reported back to the Congress?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not. The treaty would have to be ratified of course. But we summon the conference and we ought to tell the nations invited, if we do summon such a conference, exactly what we mean to object to and what we mean to consider. The fact of the invitation is a very serious matter. It is only just, when we are inviting a conference of this sort, that we should say just what we mean. I do not know what the feeling of Congress would be as to permitting a general economic conference to pass upon the foreign debts due to us, but it seems to me that is a question which should be excluded. I think the debts due to the United States should be considered and dealt with by the United States alone. I do not think there is any desire on the part of the people of the United States to deal with those debts otherwise than generously and fairly, but I do not think they would care to have the fate of those debts settled by other powers.

Under the conference of course we should be called upon to take part in the Reparation Commission. We are seeking no reparations, but we should be called upon to take part in it and enter to that extent at least into a revision, perhaps, of the treaty of Versailles. I think, whatever we feel about that, that we should determine and make clear in our legislation just what our opinion is and how far we should go. Such a conference, if it should ever come into existence, would undoubtedly have the power to consider advancing large sums of new money to help

Germany or to help France. I do not know how far the Senate thinks it should commit itself to the policy of advancing money from the Treasury of the United States for the reestablishment of the finances of Germany or France, but it seems to me that if we are to do it, if we are to enter into a conference where that question would surely arise, there ought to be some distinct statement as to our attitude in regard to it.

There are many other things involved. If we are to enter upon the business of restoring stability in Europe, of course we shall be called upon not only to help France, Italy, and Germany but the Austrian States of the former empire, the Balkans, Asia Minor, and, I suppose, Russia. I am not arguing now the merits of those varying propositions. I am merely suggesting that before we pass resolutions or adopt amendments favoring an economic conference we should know how far we are going and what we propose to do. It is easy enough to say "Let us have an economic conference," but when nations come together in an economic conference the case assumes immense importance and seriousness. There is one thing we should never permit, and that is to invite all the nations to meet us and have any misunderstanding about our attitude before we go into the conference. We must know exactly what we are ready to consider and what we will not consider.

Of course there are many other questions that might be brought up in the conference upon which I hope, before the debate ends and before final action is taken, the Senate will express its opinion. The question of immigration, for example, could not, in my opinion, be kept out of that conference under its very terms. I for one should not be willing to have that question go before the conference at all. I do not suppose that the conference would take up any purely political questions, but when anything is as large and broad as the conference proposed in this amendment no one can tell where it will end.

All I am asking to-day is that the Senate shall consider the matter with the utmost care before the amendment is agreed to. We are taking upon ourselves the duty of expressing the opinion of the United States Senate. We are undertaking to advise the President, who is charged with the conduct of our foreign relations, to take a very grave step. We do not know what he has done in these various directions. We do know that he is as desirous as anybody possibly can be to improve economic conditions in Europe and to aid those countries toward greater business stability. But what steps he may have taken we do not know. It will be no one's wish, I am sure, to embarrass him in the conversations or negotiations or the efforts which he may now be making, and which he is now making as a matter of fact. For that reason, as well as for the others I have mentioned, we ought to set forth very carefully exactly what we mean in the amendment if we are to accept it at all.

My own belief is as a general proposition that the United States can be of greater service to humanity and to its fellow nations in Europe and elsewhere by holding itself free from obligations which would bind it to action which it might not be willing to take when the hour for action came. The United States without treaty obligations of any kind rendered a very great service to the world. We asked nothing; we received nothing. We took not one inch of land nor have we sought a dollar of reparation. I am very proud to think that that is the record of my country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just stated that if the amendment were to be adopted we should set forth with particularity what was to be included within the jurisdiction of the conference.

Mr. LODGE. Or what was to be excluded.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator to particularize and state what he thinks could be considered with propriety and what could not be thus considered?

Mr. LODGE. I have confined myself to stating the things that I thought should be excluded or should be certainly defined. What precisely we can do in an economic conference in directions we should be willing to accept I am not yet able to say. I think we can be of service as we have been of service, but what we can do precisely at an economic conference, unless possibly as an arbitrator or mediator, I am not able to define.

In conclusion may I repeat that we have taken no foot of land and no dollar of reparations, and I am very proud to think that is our record. I have not a word of reflection upon the other countries who suffered and sacrificed so much in the war, but they have already received large and important advantages from the conclusion of the war. I do not grudge them anything they have received. I do not question the justice of it. But they have all received something of very great material value—immense territories in Africa, territories in Asia Minor, islands in the Pacific, and the rest. They have rid themselves for some years of the competition of the German merchant marine. Those things are all of great pecuniary value and, as I said, I do not grudge them anything. But we have asked nothing, we want nothing, we have taken nothing, and we do not propose to do so. I think that that fact alone should leave it to us to determine if we are to give, what we shall give, when we shall give, and where we shall give, and not permit it settled for us by other nations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I share the pride which the Senator from Massachusetts takes in the fact that we have not demanded nor have we obtained one inch of territory or one dollar of reparation or of indemnity from Germany, but I wish it to be remembered that that fact, redounding much to our praise, was a fact which originated in the mind and was carried out in the conduct of Woodrow Wilson, then President of these United States; and that whatever cruelty may have been visited upon him while he came very near dying in the line of duty, that praise at least must be given him, that, sitting around the council table at Versailles, the very first thing that he announced to the world was that America wanted nothing out of the war except winning the war and making the world safe for democracy so far as the war had done it, overcoming autocracy and overwhelming German junkerism. That was Woodrow Wilson before the time when, falling like a soldier in the line of battle, he fell heavily wounded; and he is heavily wounded yet; and I hope that nobody will attempt to take from him the praise of the initiative and the inauguration of that purely unselfish American policy.

Mr. President, after the World War was over a few things occurred and a few things are now occurring that do not meet with my approbation, although my approbation or disapprobation amounts to very little, for I am just about ready to leave this august scene and to take my refuge with the birds and my books and my grandchildren. There are, however, some things that I do not like. I do not like to see America standing idle to-day while the Turks are deporting Armenian grandfathers and grandchildren, killing men of military age wherever they can reach them, and ravishing Armenian women all the time. I have been ever a peace lover and opposed to war, but there are some things that do arouse my warlike instinct. If I were of this administration, instead of being merely an outgoing Senator, if I stood in Harding's place to-morrow, I would send instructions to Child and the others representing us at Lausanne to give the "unspeakable Turk" an ultimatum that no more Christians must be deported, no more Christians murdered, no more Christian women ravished in Asia Minor; and that if it were not possible to find a home for them somewhere in Asia, where they could be protected, a home should be found for them in eastern Thrace; and that these United States—God bless them—would stand with all their power and their resources and their ideals and their traditions behind the idea that unspeakable outrages perpetrated by the present Turkish Government shall cease, or, if they shall not cease, that then these resources and these ideals and these traditions shall come into the combat upon the side of humanity and upon the side of Christianity.

I hesitate a little to say "Christianity," because I know that in the bottom of your hearts most of you do not believe in it at all except in a perfunctory church way; but there is a Christianity which proceeds from the philosophy of Jesus, and that Christianity consists in making of ourselves our brother's keeper. I have no patience at all with the utterance of Cain and the utterance of so-called modern American progressives after Cain, when they say, "We are not our brother's keeper."

Mr. President, we are our brother's keeper, and if we were as selfish as a dog who loves nothing except his master, as men and women we are still and must still be by the very necessity of the situation our brother's keeper. To undertake to isolate these United States—48 of them, each one of them an empire in itself almost—from the common life and community ideals and the rich traditions of civilization and of Christianity is the maddest and the most selfish thing that anybody ever attempted to do since this world began.

Mr. President, there lives on S Street in this city now a man who is a private citizen. For a time he cut a wide swath in the history of the world; for a time he was worshiped by nearly everybody outside of his own country; and "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." Crippled in the war struggle, no pity shown for him here, no sympathy ever uttered on the other side of the Chamber that I remember, not even one word from anybody, and yet the Senator from Massachusetts this morning can point with pride to only one thing—and that was not the policy of the Senator from Massachusetts nor the policy of this Chamber, on either side, but it was Woodrow Wilson's policy—that was that America should be represented in a great congress of the great nations of the world, and very nearly all the nations of the world, and should say, through her Chief Executive's lips, "We want nothing, not one inch of land, not a dollar of reparation nor indemnity; we are satisfied, provided only we can put an end to war and put an end to the causes of war, so far as that is possible."

He came back from there and brought the Versailles treaty with him. There were many things in it which I did not like; there are many things that the people did not like; but it contained the great central idea that was uttered by a British battalion when they were charging successfully a nest of German guns: "Never again! Never again! Never again!" They destroyed the German nest; they won a glorious victory; but the victory was not in destroying the German nest; it was in the utterance that those atrocious, contemptible, inhuman, uncivilized conditions of actual warfare in the air and on the earth and in the waters beneath the earth should never be revisited upon this world again if they could prevent it; and they uttered to God the words that they were dying that day to prevent it if they could. So far as I know, that was the only battalion that ever uttered that slogan of warfare out loud, but they were not the only battalion that carried that slogan of warfare in their hearts across the trenches and into no man's land.

Let me speak an almost parting word to you, for it will not be long before I leave you, and God knows I never intend to bother you after I leave you or to be bothered by you. [Laughter.] That almost parting word is this: America is a part of this earth; her traditions, her ideals, her magnificent unselfishness are a part of the present status of this earth; and I do not care what you say nor what you do nor how you vote, you can not get rid of that fact. We are not only a part of it but a magna pars; we are a great part of it; I might go further and say that we are the greatest part of it. Is there a man here listening to me to-day who imagines that the condition at Lausanne and in Asia Minor could have taken place or would have taken place if America or rather these United States—for we are only a part of America—had been members of the League of Nations with the will and with the power to make the league count? And yet, gentlemen every day seem to take pride in the fact that the league has not counted for much. It has counted for more than they say, but it has not counted to the full. Why? Because you took off its right arm; you left it fightless; you left it almost ambitionless; but if you think that the common sense and the common conscience of the common people of America have been stupefied and annihilated by what you did you are mistaken. Long after I have gone out of public life, perhaps after some of you have died an actual death, there will be the common sense and the common conscience of the common people of America behind the idea of preserving and enforcing—mark you, enforcing—the peace of the world, and behind that, too, enforcing industrial peace and other forms of peace on this earth.

Christ was not born for nothing and did not live for nothing and did not die for nothing and did not preach for nothing. When He announced the doctrine of the common fatherhood of God and the common brotherhood of man He meant what He said, and that idea sank into our hearts. I do not care how weak we are nor how sinful we are—and God knows I am one of the weakest and one of the most sinful—the idea is there, and no politics, no finesse, no private meetings of Senators or of Representatives can ever overwhelm it.

It stands like the church of God, secure against the gates of hell. You can not help it. You may delay the coming of the time. You may think you are awfully smart when you advise the American people to take care of their own interests and to let their brethren in Europe go to hell. You may think all that; but you are not awfully smart when you say it, and you are not awfully good when you say it. You are just common, selfish, mean men, and sometime you will be swept away like playing cards upon the surface of a bowl of water which has overflowed; and the overflow will mean that America once more will step into her own on the surface of this earth, and that we will allow no more Armenian women to be ravished, no more Armenian grandfathers and grandchildren to be deported, and we will not allow the unspeakable Turk a place in Europe at all. If we had been members of the league, there would have been no question of it. No matter if Great Britain and France for selfish reasons, commercial or otherwise, had been willing to compromise, American idealism would not have been willing to compromise.

Why, Mr. President, I was reading in the last Literary Digest, which perhaps most of you have read, an account of what was happening to the Greeks and to the Armenians. Some of the things are unspeakable. Some of them are not to be mentioned before women, some of whom are in the gallery; and we—we, the people of the land of Washington and Jefferson and Henry Clay and Lincoln—are standing by, are holding our hands folded, and we are saying to the entire world, much to the encouragement of Germany and Russia and Turkey and Bulgaria, that we have nothing to do with it; that we are outside of the family; we rather doubt whether we are kin to the family or not. There may be a common fatherhood of God, but it does not cover them and us both. It covers them, maybe, or it covers us, maybe, but it can not cover us both. We can not live in the same tent; we do not intend to have anything to do with the same tent; and wise men in their imaginations, who think they are ultra progressive, tell us all that!

Do you know what real progressivism means? It means taking steps forward toward the concept of God and trying to idealize our ordinary relations toward a common goal, which is His will, and His will is for peace on earth amongst men. That is what real progressivism means; but I doubt not that to a lot of you it looks like conservatism and reaction of the most ultimate character—going back to God, which is rather, I imagine, a reactionary movement.

I indorse what the Senator from Massachusetts said in so far as I have dwelt upon what he said. It was a little peculiar, though, that he could say it, that even with his ingenuity he could say it, without mentioning the name of Woodrow Wilson, fallen soldier by the wayside. I got up merely to strain that point, and nothing else much.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not know that I disagree with the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] as to the relationship which the Congress sustains to the President of the United States with reference to foreign affairs. I think the Congress may properly and constitutionally exercise much more power with reference to foreign affairs than it has assumed to exercise heretofore within the last few years. I understand, of course, that with the President lies, technically speaking, the act of negotiation; but we also have at all times not only the right but in my humble opinion the duty not only to consent but to advise. It certainly can not be out of place for the Congress—for the Senate particularly—to express itself with reference to a matter which not only appertains to foreign affairs, but which, by reason of its peculiar nature, essentially enters into our domestic affairs.

I do not think, however, that it is necessary to go into a technical discussion as to the powers of the President and the Senate, respectively, upon this subject, for it must be conceded that the amendment which I propose to offer is well within any number of precedents which might be cited.

The Senator calls attention to the fact that this amendment is very broad, and he is of the opinion that if we are going to pass a measure dealing with the subject we should be specific as to what we propose to do. If I may be permitted to say so, that would come closer to encroaching upon the power of the President as a negotiator than anything which has been suggested in the amendment. The amendment provides for the calling of an economic conference as well as a disarmament conference, and I think it will be conceded that until negotiations or satisfactory communications have been had with the foreign powers it would be very difficult to determine in detail the specific matters which would be dealt with under that kind of a call.

We passed a resolution with reference to a disarmament conference; and the President, as he had a perfect right to do, assumed to enlarge the program of the conference, and did so after communicating with the other nations. I take it that unless the President should advise us at this time as to the negotiations which are now going on and the extent to which they have progressed and the subject matters about which he is of the opinion that we may properly confer, it would be improper for us to undertake to designate specifically what particular subjects should be up for consideration at this conference.

I am perfectly willing—and I should suppose that the Senator from Massachusetts would be perfectly willing—to leave this matter where it properly belongs, and that is, with the Chief Executive, after he has communicated with the other powers as to the specific subjects which should be covered. The resolution was not drawn in this way inadvisedly or without due consideration. It was drawn for the very purpose of not embarrassing or curtailing, if he should see fit to observe our suggestion, the powers of the President to fix the program which he thought would be most effective in dealing with the subject. If, however, the Senator from Massachusetts or other Senators are sufficiently advised as to the Executive's views as to include those things which ought to be included, in their opinion, and to exclude those which ought to be excluded, I should be pleased to consider the suggestions which they have to make.

This is not in all essentials a purely foreign question—that is to say, a question which relates alone to foreign affairs. It has progressed to the point where the subject matter of the conference affects our legislation here relative to domestic affairs, and it has progressed to the point where it concerns every business man and every farmer and every laboring man and practically every home in the United States. It is a matter about which we are compelled to think and with regard to which we must reflect in dealing with the multitude of things which we have to deal with and which are conceded to be peculiarly within the province of the Congress.

The Senator advises us that the President, as he knows, is now negotiating in regard to this matter. I am, of course, pleased to be advised of that in a way which would be considered as authoritative, but I had supposed that the President was thinking over the matter. I had no right to assume that he had yet taken up negotiations; but it is a matter which everyone must consider, and one with which we must all deal. It is interesting, however, to know that negotiations are now in progress dealing with the specific subject with which we are now concerned here as a Senate; and if we can be advised that the action of the United States Senate in approving of the dealing with these subjects will conflict with or embarrass the program which is now under way I shall be very glad indeed also to consider that in the disposition of the matter. I have a perfectly open mind as to how we shall deal with this subject matter. My mind is closed as to the proposition that we must deal with it. As to the method and the manner of treating the subject, it is one about which I should, of course, be glad to take suggestions in advance.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did the Senator understand the Senator from Massachusetts to state that the President had been negotiating with reference to further disarmament or only as to the economic situation?

Mr. BORAH. I understood he referred only to the economic situation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I supposed.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I had in mind, and it was to that I was addressing my attention at this time.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator hold that his amendment confers upon the President any power he does not now possess?

Mr. BORAH. I do not. The President has a perfect right to initiate these negotiations without this authority. It would be considered a part of his treaty-making power and also within his right as the Chief Executive. It has always been the contention of the executive department that the recent disarmament conference was initiated without any regard to the resolution which was passed by Congress. President Roosevelt initiated three separate movements for an international conference without any consideration previously by Congress. But there is very much to be gained, in my opinion, by a consideration of this matter at the hands of Congress and by the expression upon the part of Congress as to the necessity of the movement. The President could utterly disregard this amendment if he thought it was not wise to accept it, or he could, within the limits of the amendment, confine it to such subject matters as he thought were expedient to be dealt with. But if he is going forward, nothing could be more helpful than to be supported by the Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator remember the provision of the deficiency appropriation act of 1913 prohibiting the President from calling any conference, or issuing invitations to foreign powers to hold a conference, except with the approval of Congress?

Mr. BORAH. I do not recall its terms and it has been very greatly respected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] looked at that provision this morning and has it fresher in mind than I have, and if he has it before him I will ask him to read it, if the Senator from Idaho will allow it to be read.

Mr. BORAH. I shall be glad to have it read.

Mr. LENROOT. This is a provision in the deficiency appropriation act of 1913, Sixty-second Congress. It reads as follows:

> Hereafter the Executive shall not extend or accept any invitation to participate in any international conference or like event without first having specific authority of law to do so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had not lately looked up that proposition, and I am glad it has been called to my attention. It makes all the more essential the adoption of this amendment, if the President is to deal with this matter effectively, and by the way of a conference. I doubt very much if that provision of the law would stand the test; but, assuming that it would stand the test, it is all the more necessary that the Congress of the United States approve of the program before the President acts. This would be true, however, that notwithstanding the fact that the President of the United Sates were authorized by this, he would not be compelled to regard the amendment if he thought it was unwise.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Just there I call the Senator's attention to the fact that his amendment not only authorizes the President to do it but it requests him to do it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, so did the disarmament resolution authorize and request him to call a conference, but it has been stated time and time again authoritatively that he did not call the disarmament conference as a result of that resolution. It originated in another way, we are told, and it was not the disarmament conference for which the resolution provided. It included subject matters which the resolution did not cover. It included countries which the resolution did not cover, and it included subject matters which even disarmament did not cover. Therefore I take it that it will not be argued here as a technical proposition that because we adopt this amendment the President will be compelled to adhere to the suggestion.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator if he does not think that if Congress shall adopt the amendment in the form in which he proposes it it will be an expression upon the part of Congress that there should be such an economic conference without limitation or condition?

Mr. BORAH. It would be an expression upon the part of Congress that there should be such a conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Without limitation or condition?

Mr. BORAH. No; not necessarily without limitation, because the power rests with the President to fix the limits.

Mr. LENROOT. The power rests in him, but when we ask the President to call an economic conference for a certain purpose there is no limitation or condition implied, it seems to me.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; I want the amendment to be so broad that the President of the United States will not be justified in saying, and could not sincerely say, that the amendment was such that he could not operate under it. If we undertook to say that it should be confined to reparations alone, the President would at once say, "In my opinion, it would be impossible to consider that subject without considering other matters in connection with it." If we confine it to this or that subject, and the negotiators, or those who are to be invited, suggest other subjects, the matter stops at once, so far as our negotiations are concerned, if we are confined to the amendment. If you give the President no breadth, no width, no discretion, you are in effect limiting his power to deal effectively with the subject.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator's view seems to be that the President should be left free to call up for consideration any question he sees fit to call up. Of course, any right the President can claim can be claimed by the representative of any foreign country the moment he takes his seat at this board. Is not that the Senator's view?

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So that when this conference is called, aided by the action of this body, we are calling a conference to consider any European question or Asiatic question or African question which may be brought before the conference.

Mr. BORAH. If the amendment is taken as it expresses itself, the conference would have to be confined to economic problems.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, yes; but the Senator agrees that they are not limited to that. The Senator is too fair and too broad a man to deny for a moment that it is easy enough to find that almost any conceivable question on earth is related in some way to the economic situation of the world and to the naval and military establishments of the world. So, if we call this conference, let us do it with our eyes open to the fact that there is no question on this earth which may not come up there for discussion, particularly unless we insist that the President in calling the conference shall expressly limit the subject matter. Is not that about where we come out? I do not want to debate it; I want to get the Senator's view.

Mr. BORAH. I am very willing to debate it with the Senator or with anyone else, because if I am in error as to the terms of the amendment I shall be pleased to have suggestions in order that it may be made an effective amendment. You have either to take the amendment as a guide or you have to consider that the President is perfectly free to disregard it, of course. But you take it as a guide; then the conference must be confined in good faith to economic questions. I am perfectly aware of the proposition that they could consider anything which came before them for consideration. They could do it by disregarding the suggestions of the amendment; but nothing which they would consider could ultimately be binding until it was returned to the Congress of the United States for the action and approval of the Congress of the United States, or the Senate.

In that connection the Senator from Massachusetts referred to the question of our debts and said that the debts might come up for consideration before this body. Of course they might come up for consideration, but the negotiators could not cancel the debts or postpone the time in which they should be taken care of or change the interest or dispose of the subject until it came back to the Congress of the United States for its action. I take it there will be no conference called until negotiations have been had such as are supposed to be going on now as to the subject matters which will be dealt with, and if the President desires to confine the conference to economic questions, he will have it within his power to do so, and he will have the amendment backing him to that extent.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the argument that nothing can be done which would bind us until it is written into a treaty and is ratified by the Senate is of course good. That is true of any kind of a conference we might call. The Senator is well aware of the fact that when you call a conference you intend to do something, and we never should enter upon a plan or scheme unless we have in advance determined that the thing to be done is wise.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no use debating that subject, because if it is unwise of course we do not want any action by Congress at all.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. But I have concluded long since that it is wise. Of course, as I have said, so far as I am concerned that is not open to debate, but the method of dealing with it is.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am glad to get the Senator's position on that. He has concluded it is wise, and therefore we ought to do it, in his judgment.

Mr. BORAH. In my judgment; but I am only one of 96.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Nobody has more respect for the Senator's opinion than I have, but for those who may not have made up their minds that it is wise to go through with this program it is no answer to their objection to say that we may do something unwise but that we can afterwards refuse to ratify it. I have heard that argument advanced before, as has the Senator, "Let us go ahead; we do not have to ratify." But we all know the tremendous force of a tentative arrangement that is made between the representatives of governments, and we all know how embarrassing it would be to our own country to initiate this program and then at the end say, "Oh, well, you did something which did not suit us, and while our representatives agreed to it the Congress will disagree to it." We have heard that argument before.

Mr. BORAH. We had a very good illustration of it in connection with the Versailles treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Exactly; and I do not want to see it repeated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Missouri, they are agreed upon the idea that if we enter into any conference at all with the other nations of the earth, we must enter into it with a fixed idea which we must not change while we carry on the conference.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. I do not take that position.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Nobody else does.

Mr. BORAH. I do not take it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that we could only enter into a conference to accomplish some purpose which we outlined, and I understood the Senator from Idaho partially to agree with that. I merely rose to say——

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator did not understand me. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, then.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senators have a misunderstanding between themselves, I would like to proceed until they come to an agreement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me further, I merely wanted to say that if we enter into a conference with other nations with fixed ideas, from which we must not vary, that is not a conference at all; it is a meeting called by us, with a chairman, a secretary, and a treasurer appointed beforehand and a plan outlined. Of course, if we enter into a conference with other nations we must confer with them as well as they with us, and we must reach some conclusion that was not the fixed purpose of every nation.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is what I said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it must be the finally compromised opinion of all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12817) to amend and supplement the merchant marine act, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, while I always hesitate to object to interruptions, I would like to proceed for a short time with the expression of my views in regard to the necessity of the amendment.

I look upon the question of dealing with these economic problems as distinctly at this time an American question, not exclusively so but inclusively so. It has reached the point where we are just as deeply concerned and ultimately to be quite as much affected by the situation as any European power. It can no longer be said that in dealing with these matters we are dealing with exclusively European questions. It is quite as much and in some respects quite as seriously an American question as the question of the war was in the spring of 1917. The conflict had proceeded in Europe for over two years and it was not regarded previous to that time as a question affecting American interests sufficiently to justify the United States taking part in the war. The invasion of Belgium had taken place. The outrage of Louvain and many of the things which were regarded as the most atrocious acts of the war happened between 1914 and 1917. But there came a time when the question reached the United States, when the subject had to be dealt with by the American people. If we are to believe the reports which come to us from every quarter not only in Europe but in the United States the economic problems have now reached the point where they are of practical concern to the people of the United States. It is now an American problem. We are suffering and suffering greatly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield for a question, and then I wish the Senator would permit me to proceed for a time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall permit the Senator to proceed now, if that is his wish.

Mr. BORAH. No; the Senator is on his feet and I yield for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. BORAH. For illustration, we are now considering the naval appropriation bill. A little over a year ago we held a disarmament conference. The naval appropriation this year is $1,250,000 more than it was last year. We are advised by a report of the House committee that unless disarmament is extended to certain other subjects we shall again in a short time be in the midst of a naval race. In other words, we are now confronting a situation where we are to lose any possible advantage which was secured by reason of the disarmament conference a year ago, and in addition to that are undoubtedly to take upon ourselves a tremendous burden in the way of a renewed or a new naval constructive competitive program.

In addition to that, every spokesman of the administration, having regard now for the representatives in the Cabinet, is advising the American people that we must increase our Navy and enlarge our Army far beyond anything that we now have in mind. We are told by representatives of the Navy and by representatives of the Army that that condition is necessary by reason of conditions which obtain in Europe; that owing to the disturbances and discontent and unsettled conditions with reference to economic questions, and particularly reparations questions, the situation in Europe is so perilous that the United States can do no other than to prepare for another possible conflict. It is not, therefore, purely a question for the Executive. It is not purely or solely a European question. It is also an American question and it is essentially and indispensably so.

I think it is pretty generally conceded that if another year shall transpire with reference to reparations such as the last year has been, and another year of conditions such as have prevailed in Europe shall be covered by the coming 12 months, war is imminent upon the continent of Europe, not between small nations or insignificant nations, but between the great powers of Europe.

I venture to say, after witnessing what happened in the campaign of 1916, and what happened immediately after the campaign of 1916, that if any conflict arises in Europe within the next year it will be practically impossible for us to remain out of the conflict. It is the height of prudence, therefore, and the first call of patriotism for the American people's authorized representatives to undertake to ameliorate the situation or to adjust the situation so as to eliminate the sources of discontent and the sources of turmoil in Europe.

The conditions which there confront us are peculiarly and particularly economic in their nature. The entire subject is organized around the question of reparations. To-day in every one of the leading countries whose budget I have been permitted to examine there is an increase in the military budget, and the justification of it is upon the ground of the unsettled conditions relative to reparations and the consequences which may follow.

So we are facing another continental disturbance. We are facing it by reason of the fact that there is a question of the settlement of the amount of reparations and a question of the adjustment of the controlling economic problems between Germany and France. If it were purely a European question or a European problem, if it had not reached us, if it were not here every day in our lives, affecting our standard of living and our taxes and affecting our appropriations and everything else with which we have to do, it might well be contended that it was premature to undertake to deal with it. But it is upon us. It enters into all our affairs. It influences our legislation. It has its effect upon our appropriations and it weighs with great heaviness upon all our people.

The conditions in Europe have been referred to of late by some whose position to judge is such that we are not permitted to disregard their suggestions. I read a statement from the American ambassador at St. James, a single line from an extended interview, in which he said:

> The meeting of allied premiers in London is the most important conference that has been held since 1918. If they are unable to find a solution, I do not know what is going to save the continent of Europe from utter wreckage.

Well, before the wreckage takes place in its ultimate effect there will be something more than an economic disturbance. Before the matter has reached the point where we may consider it as a financial or industrial breakdown there will be other conditions attach to it from which we will have difficulty in divorcing ourselves as they proceed.

I have also the statement of a leading French publicist, who supports in even a more pronounced way the view just read from the American ambassador, that without a settlement or an adjustment of these conditions Europe is facing another world conflict. I might spend the afternoon in reading that which is familiar to all Senators, that it is now recognized that we have reached a crisis in the economic affairs in Europe which extends to and includes the economic conditions and affairs also of the United States, and the question is whether or not we are going to undertake to deal with it now or whether we shall disregard it until such time as it forces us to take action probably in a different way.

This condition of affairs going on for the last two or three years has drawn us further and further into Europe. We are further into the affairs of Europe now than we were upon the 4th day of March, 1921. We are now concerning ourselves with more of the affairs of Europe, necessarily I shall assume, than we were a year and a half or two years ago. We are being drawn further and further into the affairs of Europe by reason of the economic problems with which Europe is now contending. We ratified what is known as the German treaty. Without debating now the wisdom or the unwisdom of doing it, the result of the ratification was to claim upon our part all the rights under the Versailles treaty which had been accredited or granted to the United States by its terms, and now, to all practical effects so far as our moral influence is concerned and, in my opinion, so far as the technical influence is concerned, we are assisting in the administering of the Versailles treaty.

We are sitting upon the reparations commission, not officially it is said, but in Europe they do not discern the difference so far as the results of the acts of the commission are concerned. Mr. Boyden, at the head of our commission there, takes part in the discussion of every question which comes up. He not only offers his views but he offers his argument and insists upon this or that being the correct course. Does anyone undertake to say that with a representative of the United States sitting upon the commission, with the moral backing and influence of the United States, urging a certain course or suggesting it, that it is without influence in affecting the course which the commission takes? It is in practical effect the administration of the Versailles treaty by this commission, in which we are not merely an observer looking on to report back to the President of the United States as to what takes place. We are far more than a reporter at that conference. We are a participant in the conference. It may be thought wise, especially for home effect, to avoid some technical proceedings but the ultimate results are the same.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, with regard to Mr. Boyden's part in the conference, I took occasion to ask the Secretary of State on yesterday, and he told me that Mr. Boyden never voted; that he took no part in the conference unless he was asked for his opinion; that he was acting entirely unofficially and that was perfectly understood by every power.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it may be that technically Mr. Boyden does not vote, but the Secretary of State is misinformed if he thinks that Mr. Boyden waits for somebody to ask him for his opinion before he expresses it. I have talked with gentlemen who have sat upon subdivisions of the commission and they advise me to the contrary; that, so far as they were individually concerned, they took precisely the same part upon the subdivisions of the commission as did anybody else.

Mr. LODGE. I can only state the information which I have received from the Secretary of State.

Mr. BORAH. I think that technically, perhaps, Mr. Boyden does not vote, and not once in ten times do they ever come to a final conclusion by reason of a vote.

Mr. President, there is very little there for Mr. Boyden to observe if he is simply an observer; but there is a vast amount for him to do if he is there as a participant; and he is there all the time.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, of course if Mr. Boyden is doing what the Senator from Idaho suggests, he must be acting contrary to his instructions, which I think is very unlikely.

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to discuss that, but I have my opinion about it. I do not doubt the technical instructions but I have no doubt as to effect of what he is doing.

Mr. LODGE. Of course I have not been present at those meetings, but I implicitly believe what the Secretary of State says about his understanding of the matter.

Mr. BORAH. I am not questioning the veracity of the Secretary of State, but I know that Mr. Boyden is not sitting there merely as an observer and doing nothing but to take note of what happens and to report it back to the United States. He goes much further. I am advised that there is no more influential man in the body in bringing about results than is Mr. Boyden.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I do not know the sources of the information of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I think that it is inevitable. The Senator will remember that under the German treaty we reserved the right, in case we elected to do so, to have membership on the Reparation Commission, and I think we have elected to do so for all practical purposes; we are there.

Mr. LODGE. That is not the view of the Secretary of State; I can say that certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I defer to his view, for he is a great lawyer, and as a lone technical proposition he could sustain his position.

Mr. LODGE. I also know Mr. Boyden. He comes from Boston, and is a man of very high character and great ability. When the Secretary of State says Mr. Boyden holds no official position, that he is recognized as being unofficial, and that he speaks only when called upon, I rather think the Secretary of State so understands the situation, unless he is grossly misinformed.

Mr. BORAH. I am not questioning what the Secretary of State understands, but does the Senator from Massachusetts contend that in paying for the Reparation Commission the German Government does not pay our commissioner also?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know anything about the payments to commissioners.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Idaho stated that he thought we had elected to take our place upon the Reparation Commission. Is it not a fact that that election was reserved to Congress, and no power was reposed in the Executive to make such election?

Mr. LODGE. That is reserved in the treaty, of course. The President can not send a representative without our confirmation.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator from Wisconsin turn to the German treaty?

Mr. LENROOT. I have it not before me, and I have made the statement merely from my recollection of the language. I will be glad to correct my statement if it is ascertained that I am wrong about it.

Mr. BORAH. I thought I had a copy of the treaty here, but I have not. It may be that that power was reserved to Congress. I know that at the time it was contended that only Congress should authorize such representation, but that was not the view of all the Senate. It may be that we put a reservation onto the treaty in reference to that matter; I think perhaps we did; but that does not change the situation a particle as to what is practically taking place with reference to the activities of the Reparation Commission.

However, Mr. President, suppose that we admit that technically Mr. Boyden is not an official member of the Reparation Commission, which I am perfectly willing to do; suppose we admit that technically he does not vote; no one who has been in attendance there pretends to say that he is not constantly engaged in the administration of the affairs which come up for the decision of the Reparation Commission. He is not there merely as an observer to report information, but he is participating and taking part in the discussions and proceedings.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WATSON. The Senator from Idaho, of course, does not contend that Mr. Boyden could make any sort of an agreement that would be binding upon the United States?

Mr. BORAH. Of course, he could not make an agreement which would technically be binding upon the United States, but they are operating under a treaty and when a decision is made the function of the commission ends.

Mr. WATSON. No.

Mr. BORAH. But we are now discussing what is actually taking place there so far as our activities in Europe are concerned with reference to existing conditions. Mr. Boyden is advising in regard to them just the same as a conference here would advise in regard to them.

Mr. WATSON. If the gentleman from the United States sitting there unofficially has such weight that his advice is of controlling influence, then of necessity we would be more or less bound by what he says, would we not?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; we might be morally bound under certain conditions.

Mr. WATSON. By the same process of reasoning, if we call a conference and appoint a conferee to that conference and that conferee, for instance, agrees there that the foreign debt which is owing to us shall be forgiven, then would we not be morally bound by that agreement?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think so, because that is a mere matter of negotiation.

Mr. WATSON. Ah; but we call the conference. The work of the Reparation Commission is a matter of negotiation.

Mr. BORAH. No; the work of the Reparation Commission is not one of negotiation. It is in the nature of the administration of government.

Mr. WATSON. Largely it is a matter of negotiation as between the commissioners. They are there to negotiate.

Mr. BORAH. No; they are not negotiating. They are administering a form of government. The Reparation Commission is a form of government, in the heart of Europe, with governmental powers, and is exercising governmental powers, both legislative and quasi judicial.

Mr. WATSON. That is partially true; but, aside from that, coming back to the other question, let me ask my friend from Idaho if, under the sweeping terms of the Senator's amendment and without limitation, we appoint a member of the proposed conference to represent us at the conference and at that conference he should agree that the debts that are owed us by foreign countries should be forgiven, would we not then be morally bound to stand by that agreement?

Mr. BORAH. Let me ask the Senator this question, and then perhaps we can come to a conclusion: Suppose the President of the United States, through the Secretary of State and his foreign ambassadors, with the aid of the international bankers, should come to a conclusion that we should cancel the foreign debts and should agree to that, would we not be morally bound?

Mr. WATSON. I am inclined to think that we would be.

Mr. BORAH. Then, let us have it in the open.

Mr. WATSON. We are going to have it in the open. It can not be done secretly; but the Senator is not willing, I understand, to include that limitation in his amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I have not said that. There has been no amendment offered. Whenever it shall be offered I will be perfectly willing to consider it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in view of the legislation passed creating the debt commission, does the Senator think that we would be morally bound if the President should make any arrangement for the cancellation of the debt?

Mr. BORAH. I think under certain conditions we might be morally bound.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not; but I wish to say to the Senator I have before me the reservation to which reference was made a few moments ago, and it expressly reserves the right of representation through the action of Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Then if the President could not bind us in a moral way by reason of his negotiations, he being the Executive, I do not think that the conference would morally bind us either.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not think the Senator believes that President Wilson morally bound the Congress when he negotiated the treaty of Versailles.

Mr. WATSON. Of course, morally bound is one proposition and legally bound is another; but if the President through his agents were to agree upon a cancellation of the debt we would not be bound to any greater degree than where the President has negotiated a treaty and sent it up to us. We reject treaties regardless of the sense of moral obligation, if any there be.

Mr. BORAH. But there could not be any higher moral obligation come from the proposed conference than comes from the duly authorized power of the Government to negotiate a treaty.

Mr. WATSON. Which is my contention. I thought the Senator was contending otherwise, as he contended frequently in his arguments against the League of Nations, that whenever we appointed a representative to sit in the council or in the assembly, regardless of his power, and that representative entered into an agreement, we were morally bound, and from that moral obligation there would be no escape.

Mr. BORAH. We are digressing now from the matter which is of concern to me, and that is what we are actually doing in Europe at the present time. Whether technically, morally, legally, or accidentally, the question is we are drifting further and further into Europe.

Now, let me call attention to another proposition. We have an army on the Rhine in Europe. What is its business there? It is four years now since the war closed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. How much of an army have we there?

Mr. BORAH. All they want. We have all that is deemed essential.

Mr. REED of Missouri. About 800 men; is not that the number?

Mr. WATSON. About 1,000 men.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I secured a statement from the Secretary of War just a day or two ago with reference to that question, and he stated that there are in Europe just a little over 1,000 men and, I think, 118 officers.

Mr. BORAH. What are 1,000 men doing there? Why is an American army there? Why is the American flag there? Why is the Government of the United States in the representation of its flag and its Army there? We must be there for some purpose; we must be there to effect a result, and it is supposed that 1,000 men are sufficient to effect that result. I assume if 10,000 were necessary to accomplish the same result they would be there. The fact is, Mr. President, by our presence there we are doing precisely what France asked us to do, or, rather, what was proposed in the treaty, namely, that we should guarantee the territorial integrity of France against the unprovoked aggression of Germany.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I will yield in a moment. So long as our soldiers are guarding the bridgeheads over the Rhine we are effecting the same result precisely that France anticipated would result from a signing of the treaty; we are giving notice to Germany and to the other nations of the world that our influence, our sympathy, our flag, and our Government are upon the side of France in the aggressions of Germany, and if the treaty between France and Great Britain and the United States with reference to the boundary between Germany and France had been ratified it would not be anything different from what we are doing now. We are assisting in guarding and protecting the frontier of France. What other purpose would the treaty serve? If our soldiers must take the place of the treaty indefinitely, then I prefer the treaty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator think and has he not thought for a long time that the American troops in Germany ought to be brought home?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. REED of Missouri. So do I.

Mr. BORAH. And one reason why we should want to settle the economic problems is to bring the troops home and to get out of Europe. I feel they will be there so long as this fearful condition continues.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Would it not be easier to bring the troops home than it would be to have the proposed conference?

Mr. BORAH. You can not bring them home, nor can I.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We could make the President do it.

Mr. BORAH. We could not make the President do it. He is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and if in the discharge of his duty he wants to assign them there, I do not know of any power that we can exert to compel him to bring them home. We may refuse to create an Army, but when it is created he is the commander.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I wish to change my statement. We can not make him bring them home, because none of us want to make the President do anything, but I think if there were a resolution passed asking the President to bring the troops home, where they belong, the President would recognize that request from Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, during the campaign of 1920 the President of the United States stated to the public that the troops had no business in Europe and that they would be brought home. This matter was debated in the Senate of the United States, and afterwards the Secretary of War stated that the troops were being brought home, and that they would all be home just as soon as we could get ships enough to carry them. The representative of France in this country—the French ambassador—made his protest to the Secretary of War, according to the press, and the President of the United States, and they kept them in Europe. Why were they kept there? We are just as much involved in that situation as if we had signed the treaty, and they are being kept there for the same identical purpose.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, those troops, of course, as the Senator knows, are not there under the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. I may concede they are not.

Mr. LODGE. They are there under the armistice.

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly aware that such is the contention. We did not ratify the Versailles treaty; but when we failed to ratify the treaty we apparently substituted the troops to keep the guard instead of the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. We kept them under the armistice.

Mr. BORAH. Let us admit it; but why are we keeping them there? What are they there for?

Mr. LODGE. That I can not tell the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. No; and no living man can tell for the reasons would admit the whole contention.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, did not the armistice end when our separate treaty with Germany was ratified?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; precisely so. I thank the Senator.

Now, the fact is, Mr. President, that we are dealing with this situation in what I think is a roundabout way. Here is the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, who is in as close touch with the Secretary of State as any other man in the Senate, and perhaps more so. We find our troops upon the Rhine, and he notifies us that he does not know why they are there. I know why they are there. They are there because it is not thought wise, it is not thought safe, to bring them out so long as Europe is in her present condition; and I venture to believe that if you will ask the Secretary of State why they are there, or the Secretary of War, and they feel free to speak fully, they will tell you that the French ambassador notified them that under present conditions in Europe, the question of the reparations and the unsettled conditions which prevailed, it was necessary to have the troops there as a part of the moral force to keep the peace. That will be the reason in substance and effect.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. Let me ask another thing. Suppose that upon to-morrow morning the German troops should attack the forces on the Rhine. Suppose that M. Clemenceau's fears should prove to be well founded, and they have been manufacturing arms and munitions, and that they have hundreds of thousands of men ready at any time to take to arms. Suppose they should do so, and should undertake to take the Rhine. Our soldiers would be in the front of the fight and the United States would be in the midst of a European war.

I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I know this much about keeping the troops there: One reason, I know, is that they are there at the earnest request of Germany.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator know that?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, you can find all the German authority you want that they would be delighted to have us send the troops home. There may be a division of opinion in Germany about that. There may be some who desire them there. If so, it is for the same reason that we are keeping them there, and that is because of the unsettled conditions in Europe. Certainly Germany would not want our troops there, costing her as they are, unless she thought that the unsettled and discontented conditions in Europe made it essential for them to be there.

Mr. LODGE. If our troops were moved from the bridgehead at Coblenz, the Senator knows perfectly well that their places would be taken by French troops.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I am talking about America being in Europe, not about France being in Europe. That is where France ought to be.

Mr. LODGE. I said nothing about France being in Europe. My information is not extensive, but I know that France is in Europe.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and there are some who think this country ought to be.

Mr. LODGE. And they will not get rid of troops at Coblenz by removing the American troops. I think they ought to be brought home, as a personal matter of opinion.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Well, everybody thinks they ought to be brought home, and nobody will vote to bring them home.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me, in spite of his late refusal to be interrupted?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. When the question was raised a year ago about bringing home those troops it was opposed without much ceremony.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it seems that I must be courteous to all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He and the Senator from Massachusetts both seem to be agreed that our troops on the Rhine ought to be brought home; and the Senator has just said that everybody says that, but nobody wants to do it. I want to call his attention to the fact that I have never said it and I do not think they ought to be brought home. I think the American flag ought to be there; and when the Senator says that they are there for the purpose of making Germany observe the terms of the treaty of peace I admit that, and I think they ought to be there for that express purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and so do the people who are keeping them there think they ought to be there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because, outside of the treaty of peace, we were parties to the armistice. Whether we went into the treaty of peace or not, we were parties to the armistice; and a part of the armistice terms was that we were to occupy the gateways to the Rhine until Germany conformed to the treaty of peace which was to be afterwards entered into.

Mr. BORAH. It is now four years since we closed the war. The troops are still there. That is a physical fact. You can explain and excuse and refine upon the reasons, but there they are four years after the war, and two years after the promise was made to bring them home. It must be a powerful and controlling reason. I do not know what specific reason would be assigned if it were deemed necessary to assign a reason, but I venture the opinion that the real reason is because of the unsettled conditions in Europe, particularly over the question of reparations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. They would not be there unless they were taken for some such purpose as the Senator from Mississippi suggests; and they will not be brought home, in my humble opinion—that is to say, our presence on the Rhine will be maintained—until peace is restored, until the present conditions are settled, until the turmoil which is now seething shall have an end.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Until Germany conforms to the terms of the armistice, which hitherto she has not done.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. Then, if that is to be the time, and the treaty is to remain unchanged, there is no child now living who will see the time when our troops will return.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, while this subject is up I should like to ask the Senator if he will accept the amendment which I am going to send to the desk?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I certainly do not want to yield here for the purpose of offering amendments and accepting amendments.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will wait until I get through, I will discuss the amendment with him.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator allow me to send it to the desk to be printed without being read?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and the Senator may have it read if he wishes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Let it be read, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend by adding at the end of the Borah amendment the following:

The President is requested to at once cause the return to the United States of all American troops now stationed in Germany.

Mr. BORAH. In so far as I am able to do so, I would favor the amendment. But I think it stands upon its own merits. That will accomplish one thing which I want to accomplish by adjusting the conditions in Europe. That is one step toward getting out of Europe.

Mr. President, we will not adopt that resolution and that amendment, in my opinion, but in all probability those troops will remain there indefinitely. There is no probability now of their being brought home, and it is by reason of the conditions which now prevail in Europe.

It may not be out of place here to call attention to the situation with reference to these troops, both of France and of the United States, upon the Rhine. I have a communication to the Baltimore Sun by Mr. Bouton, the European correspondent, in which it is said—he claims to speak, so far as he gives data or figures, from the record—

The debt owed to the Allies by Germany * * * is being increased daily by more than 4,000,000 gold marks of absolutely unproductive expenses. The further absolutely unproductive occupation of tillable land for military purposes is adding even more millions to this sum yearly.

* * * * * * *

But the unproductive wastage along the Rhine goes on unchecked. The average linotype probably does not contain enough ciphers to give in paper marks the amount required of Germany yearly to support the armies of occupation. But it can be given in another way. Let the reader set down 3,200 and then add nine ciphers to that sum. It is a good deal of money, even in paper marks. It would be a good deal in cowrie shells or wampum. And it amounts to almost eight times the total domestic budget of Germany. For unproductive purposes!

In other words, there is being maintained upon the Rhine at this time an army which in expense to Germany amounts to almost eight times her domestic budget; and the one great problem which is now tormenting the world is how Germany shall be able to meet the reparations judgment, whatever it may finally come to be. Under the present program and under the present policy which is being pursued the time will never come when Germany can meet this situation, and so it is postponed indefinitely; and unless there is some understanding or some conference or some arrangement or some agreement by which a changed condition can be brought about Germany will not be able to meet the demands which are now placed upon her and we will be drawn deeper and deeper and deeper into Europe from year to year, in my opinion. It is not, my friends, for the purpose of getting into Europe, it is for the purpose of getting out of Europe, that I believe it is absolutely necessary to exert whatever influence we can as an independent power to deal with the situation which is now keeping us there and drawing us deeper and deeper into her affairs each year.

Take the Lausanne conference: True, we were there unofficially! That is the saving grace; but, unofficially, what are we doing? In two particular instances we are informed by the Associated Press that our unofficial representative was the deciding factor in bringing about certain situations. Could he have accomplished any more had he been official? Would we have been bound by his acts as a Nation, morally speaking, in any different way, had he sat there officially? Even if he had sat there officially, he could not have bound us to any greater extent, in my judgment, unless he reported back a treaty which we ratified. So, as a practical proposition, there is no subject that comes up in Europe that we are not undertaking to deal with, and exerting our influence and exerting ineffectively and therefore unwisely. Whatever the conference may be, or whatever it may be called, we are there speaking for the United States in some form. Whether we cast a vote or not, we are exerting our influence to bring about a certain policy or a certain condition; and Europe looks upon it, and is coming to look upon it, as something more than mere observing and reporting back.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to some of the conditions in this country which result by reason of the unsettled affairs in Europe. I call attention to these conditions because they seem to me to justify our consideration of this subject matter even if there were no other reasons. I do not believe for a moment that the President of the United States can be unconcerned as to the conditions in this country or as to why those conditions exist. Therefore I do not believe that the President can be idle or inactive with reference to bringing about a change in the situation. We are informed by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee that he is active in the matter.

As I said in the beginning, if this amendment will embarrass the President, if it will in any way disconcert the Chief Executive, if it will embarrass instead of help, that is the most conclusive argument which could be presented against it, in my judgment. If, on the other hand, it is looked upon as a problem which not only requires the technical skill and the negotiating power of the Secretary of State and of the President, but should have the moral support and the public opinion of the United States behind it, and the treaty-making power behind it, then there is every reason why this amendment should be adopted.

When I see Europe sinking lower into misery and suffering, and when I know that our own people are suffering by reason of that, and when I know that countless millions of Europe are this winter to suffer and thousands of them die, I am not willing to sit without at least expressing my conviction that something ought to be done, if it is possible to do it, and I can not conceive that it is embarrassing the President of the United States in the slightest for the whole world to know that the Senate of the United States would like to see him negotiate for an adjustment of these conditions.

Has the Senate of the United States become so inconsequential, has it become so utterly without power or respect among the nations of the earth and with our own people, that it should either be indifferent to such a situation or, if not indifferent, that it should keep its views to itself for fear of disturbing some fanciful situation not disclosed?

Let us look at the situation in this country for a moment. Our markets in Europe are indispensable to the prosperity of the American producer. We sell from 23 to 25 per cent of our wheat abroad. Unless that amount finds a market, it is impossible for the American farmer to realize a price which will justify his raising the wheat.

I read a statement prepared by a financier of the Middle West, which I have seen verified several times and which I have no doubt is correct. If it is incorrect, the able Senator from Utah can correct me, because I know he is informed about these things. This statement says:

The decreased purchasing power of Europe from 1919 to 1921, inclusive, has a very vital relationship to the present agricultural depression in America. For instance, in 1919 Europe purchased 332,000,000 pounds of beef from the United States, but only 21,000,000 in 1921.

In other words, there was sold to Europe in 1921 about one-fifteenth of what was sold to Europe in 1919.

Europe purchased 1,238,000,000 pounds of bacon in 1919 but only 489,000,000 in 1921. * * * What happened? The American live-stock industry became demoralized and the value of her live stock, approximately the same number of head, dropped from $8,800,000,000 in 1919 to $6,200,000,000 in 1921—a loss to the live-stock industry of America of about $75,000,000 for each month of the entire 36 months—a total loss of $2,600,000,000 to the live-stock industry in America.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. My friends, is not that a matter of supreme concern to the people of the United States, to the Senate of the United States, to the Congress of the United States, and to every business man in the United States? Could anything be more direct and essential for the consideration of this Government and its representatives than by some method to relieve that situation, whatever the method may be? You may pass tariff bills time out of mind, but unless the markets of Europe are restored upon these matters for which we must find a market in Europe, we will not enjoy the prosperity in this country which we have said to the American people they were to enjoy. It is indispensable; it is a part of our domestic policy; it is a matter which concerns us all. It is not the mere question of negotiating a treaty relating alone to foreign matters. It is dealing with a subject as wide and broad as the conditions of the American people and the people of Europe combined can present.

Now I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator has anticipated me by making a very wholesome admission that tariff duties will not prevent a fall in the prices of articles when we cease to export them.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I am not going into a tariff debate. My vote upon the tariff question speaks for itself.

Mr. President, since my amendment was offered I do not know how many telegrams from farm organizations of the United States I have had, but a vast number. The members of those organizations are perfectly well aware of the situation. They know the condition which confronts us. They are not satisfied and will not be satisfied with having us pass a farm credit bill, which will only postpone the day of wrath in case this situation is not adjusted. They realize fully that they must have their foreign market. They are quite as keen in regard to this matter as those of us who have the honor to represent them here.

I have a communication from one farm organization in the Middle West, which says:

> Do you know that in the last five months we have exported 45,000,000 bushels less of wheat than we did a year ago for the same period?
>
> Do you know that when a Frenchman buys a bushel of wheat on account of the depreciation of francs that it costs him $4? Do you know that Italy is again eating black bread? Do you know that Germany is again rationing flour? Do you know that a boy came to a bank here the other day and for $5 bought 30,648 marks to be sent to his folks back home? * * *
> Do you know that our beef exports are only one-fifteenth of what they were in 1919, while Argentina's are greater every year? Do you know that Russia used to ship to western Europe 250,000,000 bushels of wheat every year? Do you know that there are 300,000,000 people of Europe who are being only partly fed but who if they were allowed to come anywhere near getting a square meal daily would more than consume all our surplus? Do you know that the world produced 1,000,000,000 bushels less of wheat in 1922 than it did in 1913? Do you know that Europe is desperately trying to buy our products, and paid us last year $667,000,000 in gold and has paid us this year over $400,000,000?

These are the conditions which lead me to believe that this is our question, this is our problem, from which we can not escape.

Another communication says:

> The Ford County Farm Bureau members assembled in annual meeting believe that everything necessary should be done to restore the farmer's market. For our surplus production, this market is overseas.
> We realize that the question of the German reparations * * * are inextricably interwoven.

Mr. President, there are not more goods in the world to-day than the world needs. There is not more food than the human family could properly use, and the peoples of the earth want to trade with one another. They want to deal with one another. They want to exchange the things which are rotting in their ground in some parts of the earth with those who are starving for them in other parts of the earth. They are not permitted to do so because of the political masters and political policies of Europe. They are kept from dealing with each other by reason of artificial conditions, and not by reason of reasonable or natural conditions.

We are just as much interested in that proposition as any nation in Europe or any people in Europe. It comes home to us in every vital way. It is menacing from an economic, and physical, and moral standpoint.

Mr. President, possibly I view the situation with too much concern. It may be that the impatience which I have no doubt we all feel at the slow recovery of economic health and at the tenacious hold which the spirit of turmoil and war maintain upon world affairs have clouded my view and distorted my outlook. But I do know that a deep and moving spirit of unrest, of discontent, has wrought upon our own people to their utter change in many ways. The fearful wave of lawlessness, the saturnalia of crime, which have swept over and engulfed this land for months, and which still linger, are not without a cause. The unusual apathy, the apparent indifference of entire communities, whole States, to these crimes are not natural to this people who have, through the century, built up a magnificent fabric of free government, the keystone of which, as they well know, is obedience to law. There is a cause for these things, an overwhelming cause. And I know of nothing which undermines the people's faith, which breaks down the nation's morale, like the fiscal policy which robs thrift of its savings, takes from frugality its reward, and plants the tax collector like a policeman upon his watch at the doorstep of every enterprising home. Why should men toil? Why save? Why plan for to-morrow? Rather, why not eat and drift and waste, for at the end of the year the result is the same. Not only that, but desperate times are the harvest times of the usurer and the profiteer. Taking advantage of the necessities of the unhoused and the needy, of the farmer or business man in distress, they ply their trade with unchallenged and unlimited success. They wriggle their slimy way through the wreck of vanishing hopes and baffled efforts, and like the ghoul on the field of Waterloo, of whom Hugo speaks, cutting the jewels from the fingers of the dead and snatching mementoes from the clutches of the dying, escape at last with their stained and sordid plunder. These things, all these things, make for discouragement, make for demoralization, make for despair, make for crime. We have reached a point where a fight for fiscal relief is a fight for the American home, for the unity and stability of the family, for American manhood and womanhood, a fight for that citizenship—free, intelligent, hopeful, confident—which made America and which alone can preserve America.

This is the situation as I see it in my own country. Will any deny the serious conditions upon every hand? Now, sir, what is the plan? What is proposed to be done? If this plan is not wise, what is your plan? Are we to sit idle and listless while conditions grow worse? I will gladly yield to a wiser, more effective plan, but so long as no other is proposed I deem it not only right but a solemn duty to urge this course.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator holds the political masters of Europe responsible for erecting barriers against natural trade and exchange. Should he not also hold the political masters of the United States responsible for some of those barriers erected against international commerce? Have we not only recently passed a tariff law which makes it almost impossible for European countries to pay us in their products for the products of ours which they purchase over here?

Let me ask the Senator another question: Is his amendment broad enough, in his opinion, to permit the European nations at such a conference as he proposes to suggest to us that if we would lower our tariffs against European goods they would be enabled to buy our farm products?

Mr. BORAH. I would not have any fear of the President of the United States paying any attention to the suggestion. They could suggest that we give them a voice in financial legislation. But such suggestions no one would consider.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would his amendment be broad enough?

Mr. BORAH. I think it might for the suggestion. I am not so sensitive about the tariff act as some others, and so I do not worry about such suggestion. I think on the tariff the President would be equal to the occasion.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to suggest to the Senator that notwithstanding that last year was the shortest crop of cotton grown in the last 25 years—less than 8,000,000 bales—yet there were 2,800,000 bales carried over, and to-day the people in the South are selling their live stock by the hundreds because of the low prices prevailing, and laborers are leaving by the thousands.

Mr. BORAH. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] just informs me that there was more cotton exported this year than last year. I think possibly that is true. It was stated the other day in a press dispatch that Russia had purchased a very large amount of cotton from southern planters. In spite of every effort upon our part, Russia has gotten back where she has become a purchaser from the United States, but by no grace of ours.

Mr. President, there is another reason why we should deal with the existing situation. I am not going to refer to it at length at this time. I have already spoken too long. It may come up later in the debate. There are humanitarian reasons not only in Europe but in this country which ought to inspire us with an effort to help to bring about a different condition of affairs. If we couple all the subject matters together—our presence in Europe, our getting deeper and deeper into the affairs of Europe, also the economic questions and humanitarian questions—from whatever point we may view the subject matter, it is certainly incumbent on the United States to move. If there is, as I said, a plan in hand or a scheme in process of being formed—if the negotiations which are reported in the newspapers between Mr. Morgan and other parties are ripening into final results which will be beneficial to the people of the United States—and that is thought to be the best way to deal with the subject matter, I am perfectly willing, when the facts are presented, to consider them.

But certainly the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of this body, will not take the position as a leader of the Senate and a leader of the Republican Party that we ought not to do anything. Certainly the Republican Party will not take the position that we ought not to have a program. Certainly we will not take the position that we ought not to proceed to exert whatever influence or power we have to bring about a satisfactory settlement of these conditions. We may fail. That is not impossible. We certainly will not accomplish it if we do not try. I know that there are many Members of this body who thought that the disarmament conference was a mere dream and that we should fail. But from the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts to-day we know that we did not fail. We brought back a remarkable result.

A year has passed since that time, and that year, my friends, has been as a century at other times. The things which have happened in Europe during the last year would scarcely have been recorded in a half century in ordinary times. Every budget in Europe is being increased by reason of those conditions. Taxes are being constantly laid upon the people by reason of those conditions. They are borrowing money day by day. I have upon my desk the report of a distinguished publicist and economist of the United States who has been abroad for three months, and who made a report of conditions, a report which I would not dare to read without his most pronounced consent. But they are nearing the brink. Chaos is ahead. Conditions are insufferable. The greatest legislative body in the world can not disregard those conditions.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, with very much of what was said by the able Senator from Idaho I agree. But I confess I have been astonished, as I am sure most of the Senators have been astonished who were present during the long, long fight upon the League of Nations and upon the four-power treaty and heard the Senator's eloquent speeches then insisting upon our remaining completely aloof from Europe and keeping out of European questions, with his position to-day, evidenced not only by his amendment, but by his speech, that he to-day is in favor of the United States thrusting itself into the very midst of the European problem. It seems to me, Mr. President, that the conversion of Saul of Tarsus was not more marked than the apparent conversion of the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator from Wisconsin will remember that the conversion of the Saul of Tarsus saved his soul.

Mr. LENROOT. I would not for a moment intimate that that is the reason for the Senator's conversion.

Mr. GLASS. The conversion not only saved his life but some of us think it saved the life of the world.

Mr. LENROOT. I was only speaking of the facts and I do not in the least criticize the conversion, if such there be, because I find myself much more in accord with the Senator to-day than during the period to which I have referred.

Mr. President, I only desire to discuss very briefly one phase of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho. I assume that when the amendment is formally presented a point of order will be made against it and I think that the Chair upon the presentation of the matter will be convinced that the amendment is not in order and that such point of order must be sustained. But that discussion will more properly come when the matter is formally before the Senate. The part of the amendment which I desire to discuss is that part only authorizing and requesting the President to call an economic conference—

> Charged with the duty of considering the economic problems now obtaining throughout the world with a view of arriving at such understandings or arrangements as may seem essential to the restoration of trade and to the establishment of sound financial and business conditions.

I can not support the proposition in its present form because it is without condition or limitation and, if adopted, would, in my judgment, build up in Europe false hopes of American relief and American participation in European affairs that could not be realized, and thus postpone and delay the economic rehabilitation of the world instead of advancing it. I believe it would defeat the very purpose that the Senator from Idaho has in mind in proposing it. That such a conference may be held in the near future, under proper conditions and with advance understandings as to the extent of America's participation in it, in my judgment is most desirable; but without such conditions and understandings we shall be doing Europe positive injury as well as ourselves if the United States shall take the initiative in calling it. If the amendment be adopted, all of Europe will accept it as an indication that public opinion in America with reference to the cancellation of her debts to us has changed, that Clemenceau's mission has been completely successful, that any concession made between European nations will be compensated for by the United States, and that we will stand as a rich and generous uncle, showering our wealth upon them. From the language of the amendment they would have a right to draw such conclusions, because if, as the Senator from Idaho suggests, the President in calling the conference shall attempt to safeguard it by the addition of a limitation they will be able to point to the action of the Congress of the United States where they have requested that the conference be held without condition or limitation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator take the position that neither the Executive nor the Congress should take any step in regard to the matter?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator admit the proposition as stated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that the President is now dealing with it?

Mr. LENROOT. I do accept it, and I hope it is true.

Mr. BORAH. Then that is liable to cause some false hopes in Europe also?

Mr. LENROOT. No——

Mr. BORAH. Possibly not.

Mr. LENROOT. The distinction is, as I think Senators must readily agree, that if the President, without any declaration either upon the part of Congress or upon his own part of being willing to enter into a conference without condition or limitation, makes the proposition that there must be some advance understanding as to the limitations and conditions under which he, as the President of the United States, will be favorable to such a conference, we are in a very different position than if Europe can point to action of the Congress requesting a conference without condition or limitation.

As further evidence of this—that is, the willingness of Congress to have a conference held without condition or limitation—as evidence of a change of opinion upon the part of the United States with reference to the cancellation of the foreign debt they can point to the fact that the proposal comes from the most distinguished isolationist in the United States, the most powerful and eloquent advocate of the complete aloofness of the United States in the political affairs of Europe, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. With all this, some delver into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will find that although the distinguished Senator has at all times preached the doctrine of isolation he at the same time has said:

> It is our solemn duty to say to them [Europe], "You can have all that is within our power as a prudent people to give, for we recognize both our obligations to humanity and our material interest in the cause, but you must conform your treaties to the law of live and let live. You must subscribe to the principles of reconstruction and not destruction. You, too, must become advocates and apostles of rehabilitation.

Those are the words of the Senator from Idaho. With all due respect to him, I do not believe that either his policy of isolation or his unbounded generosity under certain conditions meets the approval of the American people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to say that I am very grateful to the Senator for finding that quotation, because I have been looking for it all morning.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be glad to give the Senator a citation of where it can be found.

Mr. BORAH. It states exactly my position to-day. It states precisely my position. I have no desire to change a word or a punctuation.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not question that.

Mr. BORAH. It conforms exactly to what I am trying to do now.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Let us understand the purpose and object the Senator from Idaho himself has in the proposed amendment. It is that if Europe will conform to what he thinks Europe ought to do, there is no limit to what America will be willing to do for Europe, which includes, of course, the cancellation of her debt, and includes material help in every possible way. I for one am not willing, even if Europe does those things, to go as far as the Senator from Idaho expresses himself as willing to go.

Mr. BORAH. Would not the Senator be willing to go to the extent to which a prudent nation should go?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; to a certain degree.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I said.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; a prudent nation—give as much help as a prudent nation would be willing to give.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely.

Mr. LENROOT. That immediately carries the idea of what the resources of the United States are and what her resources will permit her to do. Of course, it would be at once said, and we would have to admit, that with the enormous wealth of the United States we should cancel every dollar of the $11,000,000,000 of indebtedness and we would no doubt prosper permanently in the years to come just the same.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have here a communication from the President written at the time the disarmament conference was sitting, in which he said:

> I have said to inquirers, as I am now pleased to say to you, that it is not of particular concern to the administration what form the expression that Congress shall take, though it is most agreeable that Congress shall express itself in favor of securing, if possible, an international agreement upon a program for the limitation of armament.

Again:

> It is wholly desirable to have the expression of a favorable opinion on the part of Congress relating to this world question, and it would seem to me ample if it should be expressed in the broadest and most general terms.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in agreement with that expression of the President upon the subject to which it refers, which was the limitation of armaments. I can not conceive of any general language upon that subject which would be prejudicial to the interests of the United States or operate in effect as a postponement of the result that was desired. Here, however, we have a very different situation, where general language will not only involve the United States in questions in which the American people, in my opinion, are not willing to be involved but, in addition, will operate to postpone the very object that is sought to be secured by the proposal.

I appreciate, Mr. President, that the Senator from Idaho differentiates between an international economic conference and one having to do with political relations; but the two can not be separated. What is the dominant motive and mainspring of every political movement in Europe to-day? It is economic advantage, economic domination. That is true whether we turn to Germany, to Russia, or to Turkey. Why did England finance Greece to fight Turkey, and France and Italy finance Turkey to fight Greece? Was there any reason other than rivalry for economic domination or advantage in the Near East? Will anyone upon this floor pretend otherwise? No man in the Senate has declared more forcefully than has the Senator from Idaho that political sovereignty of a country is an empty shell if there be economic control of that country by another power. Senators will remember the vigorous speeches which the Senator from Idaho has made upon that subject in discussing the relations between Japan and China. In one of them he was led to exclaim, "What does sovereignty amount to if economic control of the situation is in the hands of another power?" It will also be remembered that the Senator from Idaho objected to our being represented on the Reparation Commission under the Versailles treaty upon the ground that it would embroil us in all the political affairs of Europe. No, Mr. President, the attempt to limit the proposed conference to economic questions, if we should go into it without other limitation or restriction, would let us into every European question which the Senator from Idaho for long years has insisted the United States should keep out of.

I have thus referred to the able Senator from Idaho because of his great ability, which is recognized in Europe as well as in America. This proposal coming from him assumes greater importance and will receive a different interpretation than if it had come from almost any other Member of this body. This amendment, if adopted, will convince Europe and the international bankers in America as nothing else could that the $11,000,000,000 owing the United States by Europe will be forgiven and canceled. The Senator from Idaho has correctly described the insidious propaganda that has been going on in this country for the cancellation of the European debt to us; he has resisted it in the past most vigorously; and it is surprising that, unintentionally, no doubt, a proposal now comes from that Senator which will give that propaganda a new impetus and will certainly postpone the funding of that indebtedness by the debt commission which has been created by Congress.

Mr. President, I am not opposed to an economic conference, provided it be understood before we assume the responsibility for calling it that cancellation of the European debts to us shall not be one of the matters for discussion, and provided that the President of the United States will have some assurance from the leading powers of Europe that the matters for discussion shall be such as reach the heart of the European question, namely, the abandonment of present policies of economic exploitation and rivalry which are preventing the economic rehabilitation of Europe.

As to this matter, I am willing to trust President Harding and Secretary Hughes. Surely they are as much interested in the subject as is the Senate. They certainly have more information upon it than we have. They are in a position to secure conditions and limitations to such a conference as are utterly lacking in the proposal before us.

One word in conclusion with respect to the farm bloc and what the Senator from Idaho has stated as to the agricultural interests of the country. I am not a member of the farm bloc, but I understand that the proposal of the Senator from Idaho finds favor with many of them upon the theory that it will tend to increase the price of farm products. Let me warn them that, in my judgment, that will not be the case, for a postponement of the settlement of European affairs means continuous disadvantage to the farmers of America, and I believe if the Senate adopts this proposition it will mean postponement of the rehabilitation of Europe, for, as I stated in the beginning, it will raise false hopes in Europe which never can be realized.

May I refer for a moment to a little of the history in connection with the Limitation of Armament Conference? The proposal for that conference, like the proposal for this economic conference, came first, so far as the Senate is concerned, from the distinguished Senator from Idaho. The conference was called; it completed its work; and I believe in importance that conference was second to none in the history of international conferences; and yet I can not forget that the distinguished Senator from Idaho, who was the first proponent of that conference in the Senate, opposed with all his great power and ability the four-power treaty, which made the naval-limitation agreement possible. So, Mr. President, if the proposed conference be held without a limitation or condition, as is proposed by the Senator from Idaho, I am afraid that, if the conference should come to an agreement, some of the Senators who are now favoring the proposal would be the first, when a treaty came to the Senate to ratify the work of the economic conference, to oppose it and render for naught all the work which the economic conference had accomplished.

Mr. President, it should be understood once for all, and before any conference is called, that there will be no cancellation of the European debt to us; that that shall not be a subject for discussion in any economic conference. If France is right in her view that Germany alone, defeated and crushed, can pay reparations amounting to $30,000,000,000, then surely Europe can in time to come pay her indebtedness to us of one-third as much, $11,000,000,000. Let us leave the matter where it is now, with the President of the United States. We can trust him to act as soon as any good can be accomplished by action, and if at any time the President shall request the assent of Congress for such a conference, I am confident that Congress will speedily give its assent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has quite characteristically made a speech in a Shylock vein in favor of the utmost exaction of the pound of flesh. He has spoken of the European debt to America. There is not a European debt to America, and of course he knows that. There is a debt from Belgium, a debt from Serbia, a debt from Italy, a debt from France, a debt from Great Britain. They are individual national debts due to the United States. To try to cover them all under a general phrase of being the indebtedness of Europe to the United States is nonlogical to start with and stupid to end with. A man who might be very unwilling to cancel a debt that Italy, France, or Great Britain happened to owe the United States might be very willing to cancel a debt that Belgium, overridden without cause, never really a party to the war, or Serbia, dragooned and intimidated, happened to owe to the United States. The European debt to the United States reminds me of the common protective tariff nonsense about trade between Germany and the United States, or France and the United States, or between countries, when there is not any trade between countries at all, but the trade is between the individual citizens of one country with the individual citizens of the other.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned—and the Senator dared anybody to say anything in favor of the cancellation of any debt that anybody owed to the United States—I think we ought never to collect a dollar that Belgium owes us, and I think we ought never to collect a dollar that Serbia owes us. I do not think that a man would feel quite like a gentleman when he was presenting a bill to either one of them; but I want to collect all the balance, and the most part of it is upon the other side.

Mr. President, the quarrel between the Senator from Idaho on the one side and the Senator from Massachusetts, reinforced by the Senator from Indiana, upon the other side, as to whether our representative at Lausanne now is a participant or an observer, is really amusing to me, and I reckon it is to you. It does not make any difference whether you call him a participant or whether you call him an observer; he is doing things, and he seems to be doing them on the pathway toward ultimate right. My only quarrel is that he is not doing enough things. He ought to read the riot act to the unspeakable Turk, and tell him that assassinations and rape have to stop, and stop right now, and that the United States says so. Call him an observer or call him a participant or call him whatever you please, as a Democrat I indorse President Harding's sending him there and having him do at least as much as he has done, and I hope he will have him do more.

Mr. President, it is a great thing to be a Democrat. It is one of the grandest privileges in the world just to be a Democrat, to believe in equal opportunities and to disbelieve in special privileges; but, Mr. President, there is something even greater than being a Democrat, and that is being an American—being a member of the English-speaking race which transplanted its institutions to America. I love the Senator from Idaho so much that nobody is more delighted than I am to find that he has finally discovered that these United States are a part of the earth, and that he has finally discovered today that these United States are a part of Europe.

Did you ever think of that? Every drop of blood in our veins, except the niggers and the Chinese and the Japanese in the United States, is European. Our ancestry is European. We are a part of Europe just as much as Magna Græcia was a part of Greece, just as much as the Sicilian colonies from Greece were a part of Greece. We are a part of Europe, and we can not help it. It is in our blood, it is in our bone, it is in our sinew. We are not niggers, and we are not Japanese, and we are not Chinese; we are Europeans, and I am delighted to notice that the Senator from Idaho has finally seemingly approximated that realization, merely approximated it.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the Senator's amendment. I have not consulted with anybody on this side nor with anybody on the other side, but I am in favor of it because it is "p'inted" the right way, as the darkies say; and I am opposed to any Lodge reservation, whether reinforced by the Senator from Indiana or by the Senator from Wisconsin, or not. God knows I have had enough of Lodge reservations to a generally idealistic purpose. I am in favor of the Senator's amendment, and I am opposed to any Lodge reservations. Lodge reservations can ruin anything that ever existed.

There is one thing, though, to which I wish to call attention before I sit down, because it was agreed to by both the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Wisconsin. They seem to think that the troubles of Europe now are economic. Well, of course, that is a part of the trouble, but the real trouble there, as during the entire history of the world it has been, is racial.

If you will let the energies of the people loose and quit confining them by governmental action, they will cure the economic troubles here and abroad; but nothing but the special grace of God can cure racial troubles between peoples. If we are to have another war soon in Europe, it will grow out of the Turk and the Balkans, and gradually Bulgaria and Greece and Serbia getting into it, and then finally the soviet in Russia backing the Turk out of hatred to civilization, not out of any natural affinity between Russians and Turks, and it will overflow the world. It is not economic at all. Of course, a part of the trouble with trade and exchange is economic, but there is no danger of war from economics at all. I have witnessed men here on this floor, at the beginning of the war between the Allies and Germany, and about the time we were participating in it, talking about it as if it were a contest of forces to outtrade one another. It had no more to do with that than it had with the wound on my off thumb, which was secured by slamming a door—nothing. The real trouble was growing out of a racial gospel that the Germans had preached for 40 years, recommending themselves to the other nations as being the chosen race of the world, and the balance of us as being degenerates. That was adopted by some college professors who were educated in Germany, and by three or four Senators upon this floor, strange as it may seem. They more or less admitted that the Germans were a superior race, most highly scientific, far ahead of us or anybody else; and it took us on the battle field, man to man, to prove to the German that he was not the special favorite of God at all. The trouble in Europe to-day is not chiefly economic at all, and when the Senator from Wisconsin says he is afraid that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho may go beyond that I hope he is right, because then maybe they can strike the center of the disease.

One more thing, Mr. President: The Senator from Idaho wanted to know why our few troops were still upon the Rhine. He pretended that he did not know why we were still upon the Rhine. We were parties to the armistice into which Germany entered. One of the terms of the armistice was that we were to occupy the gateways across the Rhine, the Allies and the associated nations, and we are occupying the gateway at Coblenz; and, unless we withdraw from our plighted word under the terms of the armistice, we must continue to keep the United States flag there. It does not take many troops. It does not take any war; but the Senator from Idaho said that what we meant by keeping the troops there, to try to quote him accurately—I believe I took it down—was giving notice to Germany that we were there. That is just what it means. We did not fight this war for nothing. We did not whip Germany for nothing.

I have nothing against the German people. I love them. I have a whole lot of friends among them. I was partially educated amongst them. But we did not fight this war for nothing. We did not whip Germany for nothing. We did not enter into the armistice for nothing. We gave Germany notice when we entered into the armistice that she had to observe the terms of it, and although we never became party to the Versailles treaty we are still parties to the armistice. The Senator from Idaho is right. We are staying there to give notice to Germany—notice by our mere flag and a thousand men, I believe it is about a thousand—that she must remember and she shall not forget why we are there.

Again I say, it is a proud thing to be a Democrat, but it is a better thing to be an American; and I indorse President Harding's course in keeping those troops there, and I for one, am not afraid to say so.

The Senator from Idaho read a whole lot of communications from what he calls foreign-born societies that he said were constituents of his. They are not constituents of mine. Whenever a man hyphenates himself he is, in my opinion, not an American, and nobody except Americans are constituents of mine. No Irish-American or German-American or Italian-American or Hungarian-American or any other sort of hyphenated cattle has ever been invited by me to vote for me, and never will be. The minute they make up their minds to be Americans and leave out the hyphen, and to quit bringing European special interests into American elections, then they can count themselves as constituents of mine, but until they do they can not. Perhaps it is not a very proud thing to be a constituent of mine, but in my private opinion it is a very important thing; and no man can be a constituent of mine who is not an American, and an American all over, and is not willing to leave out his hyphen.

The Senator from Idaho refers to how much it is costing Germany to keep our American troops there. Well, thus far it has not cost Germany anything, if I am correctly informed. Under the terms of the armistice she agreed to pay, but she has not paid. By the way, as far as I can find out, she has not paid anything much, either under the treaty or under the armistice; so the Senator need not distress himself to death and have the stomach ache because of what Germany is paying for the occupation of our troops upon the Rhine. I am not quite certain about my facts, but if I have my facts right she has not paid anything, except during the first year, toward our troops occupying the Rhine. America has been in that, as she has been in everything else, financially unselfish. Whatever else may be said about us—lying down on our arms after the war was over, instead of extending the great success and triumph into peace, as we ought to have done—whatever else may be said about us, we have not been stingy about money. Thank God for that! We have been a gentleman nation when it came to the pocketbook. We have pulled out our money to feed and to clothe them, and we have left off all claims of ours against them for anything that ever happened. We have been a gentleman nation when it came to the pocketbook, and so we have not forced Germany to observe her armistice terms in paying for our army of occupation on the Rhine. If I am correctly informed, and I think I am, she has not paid one-tenth of it. In fact I believe—perhaps the Senator from Utah may remember better than I—that she paid only the first year; it may have been the first two years. Does the Senator remember?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I do not remember just how much it was, but it was a very small amount.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, she has paid very little; so the Senator from Idaho need not go out stomach aching about our oppression of the Germans because of having a few of our men on the Rhine.

Mr. President, I remember that soon after the war was over there were men on this floor who rose time and again to vilify and vituperate Germany about everything in the world that they could think of, because that was temporarily popular then. I remember that I had to check one or two of them; and now I find that the same men who were going too far in "cussing" Germany are going too far in consciously or unconsciously embracing German propaganda—I think mainly unconsciously. They do not know exactly what is being done, nor how it happens that they are doing it, but, anyhow, they are doing it.

Mr. President, I welcome every step, even though a short step, toward understandings between the nations and the peoples of the world. I was one of the very few men upon this side of the Chamber who voted for the four-power treaty. As I said to a distinguished Democrat who was on the other side of that question, I can not well see how I, who have advocated a league of peace between all the nations of the earth, could afford to oppose a league of peace between four nations of the earth. It is different in degree, but it is the same in kind.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho is going to do any particular good; I do not believe it is ever going to be allowed to come to a vote at this session, and I do not think it is going to be adopted. When I say it is not going to do any particular good, I mean unless the President is with it. Of course, if the President sends word to his men on the other side that he would like to have them vote for the Borah amendment it will be agreed to, and it will do some good; but if the President sends word to them that he does not want them to do it, it is not going to be agreed to, and it will not do any good, because it is never going to be enacted. But I am in favor of a dream, even if it is nothing but a dream, that looks toward peace on earth and good will among men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask that we proceed with the consideration of the committee amendments to the pending bill.

Mr. KING. I understood that the committee amendments were all disposed of.

Mr. POINDEXTER. At least one of them was passed over.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Hale	Lodge	Poindexter
Bayard	Harris	McCormick	Pomerene
Borah	Harrison	McCumber	Reed, Mo.
Brookhart	Heflin	McKellar	Sheppard
Cameron	Hitchcock	McKinley	Smoot
Capper	Johnson	McNary	Stanfield
Caraway	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Sterling
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	New	Townsend
Cummins	Kellogg	Nicholson	Trammell
Curtis	Kendrick	Norbeck	Underwood
Dial	Keyes	Oddie	Warren
Fernald	King	Page	Watson
Fletcher	Ladd	Pepper	Weller
France	La Follette	Phipps	Williams
Gerry	Lenroot	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. The pending amendment is, on page 13, line 21, in the items for the Naval Reserve Force and Naval Militia, where the committee proposes to strike out "$2,800,000," and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,800,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before a vote is taken upon that I would like to ask the Senator from Washington having the bill in charge what reasons prompted the committee to increase the appropriation carried in the bill as it passed the House. As the Senator knows, the House committee had very full hearings, and I am advised that some testimony was presented with reference to this particular subject. The Senate committee has seen fit to increase the appropriation approximately a million dollars. Will the Senator advise the Senate the reasons which induced the committee to make such a large increase?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the purpose of the increase reported by the committee was to provide retainer pay for the volunteer Naval Reserve upon the same basis as is provided for the Federalized National Guard among our land forces. To all intents and purposes, while it is called a naval reserve, it is a naval militia. In order to induce men to interest themselves in the necessary training and to hold themselves in readiness for service in case of an emergency, certain retainer pay, equivalent to two months' pay of their several grades, is provided by the law.

When they have complied with the requisite drills and subjected themselves to the required amount of training they are eligible to be enrolled. When they are enrolled they are entitled to retainer pay. Last year the bill carried about the amount the bill carried this year as it came from the House without the Senate amendment, and in order to get along at all the Naval Reserve was not enrolled during the first six months in the year; so the amount of money by which the appropriation was short was saved.

The first six months of the fiscal year was chosen by the department as the period in which the reserve would not be enrolled. They are expected to be enrolled on the 1st day of January and to be paid their retainer pay from that time until the 30th day of June. When that time arrives, unless the increased amount reported by the Senate committee is appropriated, they will have to be disenrolled again, and if that should occur, it is the opinion of those who are responsible and especially informed and especially active in the preservation of this civilian naval force, the Naval Reserve, that it would mean the destruction of the reserve; that if they are disenrolled again it would be impossible to retain such an interest in the reserve that they could ever again be enrolled.

They are expected to enroll on the 1st day of January, through the representations which have been made to them by their friends that they have reason to believe that provision would be made by Congress to keep them upon the enrolled list throughout the year after that time. These men are put upon Eagle boats and given two weeks' training at sea every year. In addition to that, they are required once a week to attend drills in armories, which are more or less makeshift affairs, no appropriation being made for the armories sufficient to procure the proper kind of armory. In their two weeks' training at sea 5 officers and 56 men are put upon a boat, and they are given very active boat drills; they are given instruction in engineering; they are given instruction in navigation, instruction in all duties of a seaman, and follow a very rigid regimen for the period of their active training. This amendment is offered to provide that retainer pay.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator from Washington, in charge of the bill, if he desires to proceed with the last clause of the bill to-night? There are several who want to speak upon this matter and are not ready to speak to-night.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has one or two matters he desires to present, one of them relating to the Marine Corps. That is the only remaining matter I know of to be presented, aside from the one of which the Senator from Idaho speaks. If anybody is prepared to speak this evening upon the question of the proposed conference, it seems to me it is a very appropriate time to proceed with that; but I will not ask that the matter be concluded this afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I have no objection to anyone speaking who wants to speak.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly willing, when we have proceeded as far as Senators are prepared to proceed, that we shall take a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to offer two amendments, Mr. President. I will be glad to state at this time what the amendments refer to. I desire to have the number of the enlisted personnel of the Navy reduced. One amendment provides for a reduction of the enlisted personnel of the Navy from 86,000 to 67,000, that being the number suggested by the committee itself, as I understand its report. I suppose the amendment will go over until to-morrow.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it very doubtful whether it will be reached this afternoon.

Mr. McKELLAR. We can vote upon it at any time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to express the hope to those having charge of the naval appropriation bill that they will press it as vigorously as possible, so as not to hold back the unfinished business too long.

Mr. KING. May I say in reply to the Senator from Washington that I do not think he should by his admonition criticize the Senate. Here is a bill carrying an appropriation of more than $325,000,000. Just one day has been spent in the consideration of the bill with that large appropriation. To-day has been consumed in the discussion of a very important question, and it is obvious that the bill will be passed by to-morrow. Certainly a bill which only takes three days to dispose of, though carrying these enormous appropriations, ought not to excite the ire of my friend from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I certainly did not manifest any indication of ire or anything of the sort, and it never entered my mind that I was criticizing the Senate or any Senator. I just thought that we should not adjourn at 4 or half past 4 o'clock without pressing the bill as much as possible and getting as much of it disposed of as possible. Of course, I did not make that suggestion with any idea of pressing Senators into debate when they had not had time to prepare. I merely wanted to express the hope that I did express, that the naval appropriation bill would be pressed as rapidly as it properly could be. But in doing that I wish to say to the Senator that I never thought of criticizing any Senator or the Senate or expressing any impatience, because there has not been any unnecessary delay in connection with the bill.

Mr. KING. It occurs to me that if the Senate would give more consideration to these enormous appropriations, it would be for the best interests of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs and is in charge of the pending appropriation bill. I should like to ask him to what extent the amount appropriated in the bill is lessened by the action of the disarmament conference which was held about a year ago. I recall that it was promised to us then that if that treaty were ratified, the expense of naval armament would be greatly reduced. That was one of the reasons, I think, why many Senators voted for the ratification of the conference action. If the Senator will give us the figures of the extent to which the cost of the Government has been relieved of the burden of naval taxation by reason of the accomplishments of the disarmament conference, I shall be glad to have them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The amount is something like $180,000,000 in this bill; that is, comparing the needs for the ensuing fiscal year, for which the bill will provide, and those of the fiscal year 1922–23, the current fiscal year, which were $180,000,000 less than the actual appropriations for the last year under the building program of 1916, which was modified by the naval limitation of armaments treaty.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that we appropriated last year substantially the same amount of money that it is proposed to appropriate this year. Is not that correct?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was just about the same approximately. The Senator will remember that last year's appropriation act was passed subsequent to the Armament Limitation Conference, and the reason why it was approximately the same as this year's bill was because of the suspension of the great naval program in which the United States was engaged prior to that conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Even now we are spending on our Navy about twice as much as we spent the last year before the war. Is not that true? We are spending more money by about 50 per cent than Germany ever spent on her navy in her palmiest days. Am I not correct in that? And still we are talking about peace and peace conferences. It looks to me like there is in the bill considerable preparation for war. Three hundred million dollars in round numbers are appropriated in the bill, and my recollection is that before the war we appropriated about $150,000,000 a year for our Navy, and built up a great Navy under those appropriations. Now, we are nearly doubling that amount under the pending bill, even after the peace conference.

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the fiscal year 1917, the appropriations made during 1916, which was before we were in the war, the bill carried $312,755,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will remember that was in preparation for the war. What was it the year before?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the year 1916 it was $147,533,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and for a number of years prior thereto, before we actually were preparing for the war, it did not exceed that amount. Of course, we were preparing for war in 1916, as we all know. In the appropriation act for 1917 we were doing likewise, but prior to that we built up our Navy under appropriations of approximately $150,000,000 a year, and for a number of years previously a much less sum each year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We could go along this year on $147,000,000 if it were the desire to go back to the before-the-war establishment, but we would have the smallest and the most incomplete Navy of all the great powers of the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought one of the purposes of the disarmament conference was that we should reduce the expense of naval armament; but, instead of reducing, the Senator admits that we are going beyond what we did before the war by about 100 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not responsible for the expectations which the Senator from Tennessee may have had as to what reductions would be brought about. I think it is very probable that many people imagined there would be a doing away with the naval expenditures in large measure as a result of the scrapping of the partly constructed increase of the Navy—the battleships and battle cruisers.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think many people were deceived by it at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has not come up to their expectations as to doing away entirely with naval expenditures, but it has reduced the amount, as I have already pointed out to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. While I am on my feet I want to ask the Senator with reference to the enlisted men. I want to read from page 6 of the report of the committee which the Senator submitted on the pending bill. I read, for the purpose of asking him a question, as follows:

> The appropriations proposed in this bill are on the basis of continuing the enlisted strength at 86,000 men. The committee made a very exhaustive study of the enlisted personnel requirements when considering the estimates for the current fiscal year and reached the conclusion that 67,000 enlisted men would provide adequately for the maintenance of the so-called treaty Navy, but only last April the House itself, contrary to the committee's recommendation, decided that 86,000 men should be allowed and nothing has arisen during the few intervening months that would warrant the committee in proposing a smaller number than the House so recently expressed itself as favoring.

Now, as I understand the excerpt from the committee's report, the committee believes that under the treaty arrangement, the disarmament arrangement, 67,000 men would be sufficient for the Navy, but that because the House last year voted for 86,000 men, the committee are willing to forego their own views after an exhaustive study of the subject and report for 86,000. Is that correct?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the error into which the Senator from Tennessee has fallen is that he has the House committee report and the Senate committee report mixed up.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have here a report headed "Mr. Poindexter, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report," and included in that report is the report of the House committee from which I have just read. I supposed that when the Senator from Washington incorporated the House committee report into his report he recommended what the House committee report recommended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no. We have shown that we did not do that by the amendments we have made to the House bill. We incorporated the House report——

Mr. McKELLAR. It was incorporated in the Senate committee report.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the Senator asked me a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was going to explain why we incorporated the House report in our report. It was to show what the House report was, not necessarily that we indorsed everything that was in the House report. It is a quite clear and able statement of the views of the House committee and in general of the contents of the bill, because there were very few changes made in it by the Senate committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I understand the Senator does not agree with the House committee report which was submitted with his committee report, that 67,000 men are sufficient?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not agree, when the Senator reads from a report that the committee was of the opinion that 67,000 men were enough, that that was the Senate committee, which I understood him to intimate. It was the House committee that said that and not the Senate committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it the Senator's opinion that that number was not sufficient?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It certainly is. My opinion is that it was entirely inadequate and would put the Navy back somewhat on the basis existing before the war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it would be very different.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It practically would deprive the Navy of its position as a sea power compared with the other sea powers of the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. I now read further from the report which is submitted, together with the report of the Senator from Washington, as follows:

> It was the position of the committee at that time—

That is when it made this exhaustive investigation after the disarmament conference—> that 50,000 men afloat would suffice for the 18-battleship fleet and all of the other types of vessels it was planned to keep in commission to round out that fleet and for special and detached service, and that 17,000 additional men would adequately take care of such shore assignments as it was usual and customary to fill with enlisted men, and allow a margin for men under training and in transit. Of course, the committee realized that the adoption of its proposal would have made it necessary, so far as the shore force was concerned, to exercise the closest supervision over the assignment and detail of men, and there would have been no reservoir from which enlisted men might be assigned to take the places of civilians forced out by reason of curtailed appropriations or to fill billets which properly should be filled by civilians.

Now, Mr. President, I find that the House committee, after an exhaustive examination of the subject, thought there was no need for more than 50,000 men. I will ask the Senator what examination his committee made as to the number of men required?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know how much into detail the Senator desires us to go.

Mr. McKELLAR. Did the Senate committee make any investigation at all?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It made a very exhaustive investigation, and that investigation was reported and printed in the hearings before the Senate committee of last year. The entire matter was fought out at the last session in a more or less sensational controversy on the floor of the House of Representatives.

It attracted the attention of the whole country, and any information which it was possible to obtain was used by one side or the other in the exhaustive debate on the floor of the other House. The same question, to a large extent, arose in the consideration of the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1922. The Senate committee went into it in connection with that bill; they have repeatedly gone into an examination of the question as to the sufficiency of the personnel, and all of the testimony relative to that matter is contained in the hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Washington will permit me to ask him another question in my own time I desire to inquire what is the average cost of the maintenance of an enlisted man in the Navy?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is approximately a thousand dollars a year, although I should have to examine the matter to give the Senator the exact amount.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator's figures must be wrong. It costs nearly $1,800 a year for an enlisted man in the Army, and I imagine the cost of an enlisted man in the Navy would certainly be approximately the same, at any rate. The Senator's figures go back about 15 years, when the cost of an enlisted man in the Navy and the Army approximated $1,000 a year, but now it approximates something like from $1,500 to $1,800 a year. I thought perhaps the Senator from Washington had the figures before him, having had hearings in his committee about the matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not the figures before me, but I will say there is a very great difference between the cost of the Army Establishment and the Navy Establishment. Quarters have to be provided for soldiers but they do not have to be provided, except to a very limited extent, for seamen.

Mr. McKELLAR. Except for those who were on shore duty; but the average would be considerably over $1,000 a year. I am quite sure it would be not less than $1,500 a year.

Mr. President, I wish to say in regard to this matter that having 86,000 men in our Navy at this time is practically without justification. My understanding is that England, with her navy, which is much larger than ours, has not that many men now; that she has reduced her naval force constantly since the World War. It is the part of wisdom to do that. The number of men now in our Navy is too large; their maintenance is very expensive. A reduction in the enlisted personnel of the Navy from 86,000 to 67,000, as proposed in the amendment which I have offered, would effect a saving to the Government of $30,000,000 a year, and I doubt if the retention of the additional 19,000 men would amount to a row of pins in the event we had trouble, for we should have to enlist a very much larger number of men immediately the war broke out. In my judgment, there is no reason in the world for putting this enormous cost for enlisted men upon the people of the United States at this time. We ought to follow the example of other nations. Whether we are going to live up to our treaty agreements or our professions when we participated in the disarmament conference or not, we certainly ought to act with prudence and caution, and not recklessly throw away the people's money, as we are evidently proposing to do in the pending bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee addressed to me a moment ago as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee a question relative to some of the provisions of the pending bill. I wish to state to him that under the new rules of the Senate the members of the Naval Affairs Committee—at least most of them—have absolutely nothing to do with the preparation of the naval appropriation bill. Therefore any information which I may have as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee is that which I have obtained from a perusal of the bill and from the reading of the testimony which was given before the House committee and the very limited amount of testimony which was taken by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Utah should hardly have stated that the Committee on Naval Affairs has nothing to do with the framing of the naval bill.

Mr. KING. I had not quite completed my statement.

Mr. WARREN. As a matter of fact, the Committee on Naval Affairs, under the rules of the Senate, choose three of their members to sit with the Appropriations Committee in considering the bill. No action is taken of any kind regarding the appropriations for the Navy by the Appropriations Committee without those members of the Naval Affairs Committee, both in the subcommittee and in the meeting of the general committee, being present; and they are always represented on the conference committee by one or two, and probably in the next conference they will be represented by three members. The Senator from Utah should keep that in mind.

Mr. KING. I had that in mind, and if the Senator from Wyoming had permitted me to complete the paragraph of my speech I should have explained the broad statement which I made was subject to the qualification which is contained in the rule to which I called attention, that a certain number of members of the Committee on Naval Affairs—and in this instance three—are selected to participate in the deliberations of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in the preparation of the naval appropriation bill. However, I do not happen to be one of those three, so I may state broadly that only three members of the Naval Affairs Committee had anything to do with the preparation of the bill, and the remainder of us have only that information which we have acquired from an examination of the bill and the testimony before the House committee and the limited testimony which was taken before the Senate committee. So I can not give the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] the full information which he desired relative to the items to which he directed attention.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was called out of the Chamber for a moment and did not hear the statement of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I have just been explaining that under the new rules of the Senate the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, with the exception of three, have nothing to do with the preparation of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand about that.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a moment ago we were discussing the item on page 13 of the pending naval appropriation bill relative to the Naval Reserve. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has given the reasons which actuated the Senate committee in increasing the appropriation above that carried in the House bill.

I have an open mind, let me say to the Senator, upon this subject. I profess to having but a limited amount of information respecting it. At first blush, it is a proposition that would address itself with a great deal of sympathy to my views. If we can have a naval reserve, although costing the people by taxation a comparatively large amount, which would be of value in the event of war, I can see that a measure that would execute that plan ought to commend itself to the country and to the Senate; but with the information which I have obtained I have reluctantly reached the conclusion that the plan thus far has not met with the success which many predicted and has many infirmities which are inherent and fundamental which prevent its being as successful as its proponents declared that it would be.

In the first place, our country is so large that any plan which might be successfully carried out in Great Britain, for instance, in the maintenance of a naval reserve could not as successfully be executed here. A number of persons who belong to the Naval Reserve, one officer and several enlisted men, have conferred with me in regard to the matter, and they declare that under the plan which has heretofore been adopted the results have not been commensurate with the expenditure. They state that only a few, perhaps 8,000 officers and men—and nearly one-half of them are officers—have maintained any connection whatever with the organization. They say that those who have associated themselves with the reserve have been persons residing in a few large cities or, at least, where the population is congested, so that we do not get a reserve which is based upon the population or which takes into account the wide extent of our great territorial domain. There are a considerable number of naval reservists in New York, in Boston, in Chicago, and a few other cities where the population is great, but in Iowa, Indiana, the great Mississippi Valley, and in the intermountain region, remote from the sea, there are but a very few members of the Naval Reserve, who have the advantage of the training, aside from the two weeks training which it is supposed will be given during the year. Of course, I can understand that a considerable number residing in the interior would join the reserve, if not for patriotic motives, for the opportunity of going to the seacoast for two weeks during the summer at the pay which is allowed in the grade to which they belong, but if any benefit is to be derived from the training aside from the two weeks it will be confined largely and almost wholly to the few who belong to the reserve and who are found in the congested centers of population. That criticism was made. It was said that the talk about benefit being derived from the training is without any particular merit, and that but very few, if any, in the rural districts will obtain the benefit of the training. I am speaking now of the training aside from the two weeks at sea.

Another objection which was made by one of the young men who belonged to the Naval Reserve arose out of the fact, he said, that the boats upon which they were placed were not the ones which would be utilized in the event of war. The reserves are not placed upon battleships or battle cruisers or swift cruisers or torpedo boats or, at least, destroyers; but, as was indicated by the Senator from Washington, they are placed upon the little Eagle boats. It is quite likely that some benefit may be derived from training upon the Eagle boats, but, if I am to judge from the statement made to me by the gentleman to whom I refer, the benefit which is derived from the two weeks' cruise upon the Eagle boats is not very great and is not commensurate with the expenditure which is made. He ventured the assertion that it would be far better to enlarge the Navy, if that is what is desired, by a thousand seamen; and he said far better results would be attained with the augmentation of the Navy by 1,000 men than by the maintenance of the Naval Reserve system.

It does seem to me that if we are going to have the reserve the present plan should be greatly modified, simplified, and improved. There ought to be some plan by which the reservists will receive intensive training upon boats which will be used during war, not upon boats which are obsolete and which would give them no particular training that would be advantageous to them in the event of a naval conflict.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment which has been offered by the committee and support the provision as it came from the House. The House committee, as I have heretofore stated, gave a great deal of attention to this bill; that is, they gave it far more attention than did the Senate committee; and yet I am constrained to say that an examination of the testimony which was submitted before the House committee leaves very much to be said in favor of a fuller examination of witnesses. Much of the examination consists of the mere presentation by the naval officers of their demands.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there was a much more complete showing made before the Senate Appropriations Committee or the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on the subject of a Naval Reserve. Captain Parker, of Boston, who is probably more familiar with the subject than is any other individual, appeared before the committee and also prepared a written statement, which is much more definite and much more instructive than are the hearings from which the Senator has read.

Mr. KING. I was not reading from the House hearings with respect to this particular item. I was speaking generally and stating that while the House hearings were much fuller, generally speaking, and comprised a volume of seven or eight hundred pages, there was much left unsaid that ought to have been said to enable persons who desired to ascertain the condition of the Navy and the need of these appropriations to form a matured judgment as to the justification for these enormous appropriations. I have read what was stated in the Senate hearings, but the Senator will bear me out when I state that the Senate hearings were very much abbreviated. Perhaps there is less than 100 pages in the aggregate in the Senate hearing and six or seven or eight hundred pages in the House hearings.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, when Captain Parker came here and testified before the Senate committee on the subject of the Naval Reserve we did not have a stenographer, and we held up the proceedings for 15 or 20 minutes waiting to get one, but could not get one; so his testimony does not appear in the hearings. It was very illuminating testimony on this subject, and I am sorry the Senator could not have heard it.

Mr. KING. I say I have read all the hearings which have been published, both before the House committee and before the Senate committee; and I confess that with respect to the Naval Reserve the testimony is very unsatisfactory, as it is with respect to many other items that are found in this bill.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has spoken about the proportion of officers to men in the reserve. I take it that he gets this information from page 151 of the House hearings. I myself made the same mistake that the Senator made. As a matter of fact, when a large number of men in the Naval Reserve were disenrolled, a small number of them went into class 6, which gets no pay. This table represents substantially that number of men. Quite a large number of officers stayed in class 6, but the men mostly went out. Since that time they have been building up the organizations and getting the men to enlist.

On page 151 the statement is made that at Portland, Me.—my own home town—there were seven officers and four men. I took exception to this when the matter came up in the committee, and I recalled that we used to have a Naval Reserve company there of something over 100 men and a proper number of officers, and the city of Portland took a great pride in the company. That seemed to be very different from the conditions mentioned in this statement. I now find, on talking with Captain Parker, who has charge of the first district, that they already have 8 officers and 30 men enrolled.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator what is the total number of officers and men now in the Reserve Force?

Mr. HALE. Until the 1st of January these men do not go in under pay. They simply remain in class 6; and that list on page 151 represents those men who were in class 6. Under the new arrangement, instead of 4,000 officers there will be somewhere between 1,500 and 2,000. They will not all go into the new class under pay, and the number of men will be cut down from 8,000 to somewhere below 6,000.

Mr. KING. Then, if I understand the Senator, with the enlarged appropriation carried by the Senate bill there will be less than 1,500 officers and approximately 5,000 men?

Mr. HALE. No; next year there will be more than 1,500. They hope to have 2,000 officers and substantially 6,000 men, whereas the appropriation for this year provided for 1,500 officers and 5,000 men, but applies for only six months of the year. If the Senator will read the hearings of last year he will see that the statement was made that they did not have retainer pay enough to take care of this full number of men, and therefore that they could only pay them for one-half the year. This year we hope to pay them for the full year.

Mr. KING. A reference to the House hearings, at pages 151 and 152, shows that the number of reservists attached to each station in each district, as shown upon those pages, is 4,440 officers and 8,751 men.

Mr. HALE. Those men do not go under pay, however.

Mr. KING. That is for 1924.

Mr. HALE. Those are the men who are enrolled in class 6 and who are not under pay. When they are taken in under the provisions of this bill they will be cut down in number and a certain number of them will go under pay.

Mr. KING. Then what becomes of the residue?

Mr. HALE. They keep on in class 6 without pay.

Mr. KING. What sort of an organization do they have and what drill?

Mr. HALE. They are honorary naval reserves, practically. They do not get any retainer pay.

Mr. KING. They do no drilling?

Mr. HALE. Not under pay.

Mr. KING. Neither on shore nor at sea?

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. KING. Then what advantage are they to the Navy?

Mr. HALE. They are interested in the reserve. They simply keep on and hold themselves in readiness in case of a war. They do not get any retainer pay at all.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator how the authorities would discriminate if all of them desired to join and get on the pay roll?

Mr. HALE. They would pick out the ones that were most suitable for the work.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that we ought to limit the number?

Mr. HALE. I do.

Mr. KING. At any rate, the proposition now is to expend approximately $4,000,000 for the Naval Reserve, and with that $4,000,000 to get enrolled approximately 1,500 to 2,000 officers and 5,000 men?

Mr. HALE. Five to six thousand men, yes; and I think it would be very well worth while for the country if we could make the plan successful.

Mr. KING. The Senator has heard the criticism that I made in regard to the present system. The Senator, as a member of the committee, has gone into the matter more fully than I have, and I should like to inquire of him whether he is satisfied with the present system.

Mr. HALE. The Senator means with this system?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. HALE. For the Naval Reserve?

Mr. KING. With the present law.

Mr. HALE. I think eventually we shall have to enact a fuller Naval Reserve law. I think we should take that up in the Naval Committee, of which the Senator is a member.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps I did not understand the Senator from Maine. Did I understand him to say that these officers and men in the Naval Reserve do not drill?

Mr. HALE. Not these men that are left in class 6. All of the men that come under the appropriation in the bill will drill.

Mr. McKELLAR. All of them will drill?

Mr. HALE. They will.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am willing to take a vote. I think we should reject the Senate amendment and adhere to the House provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, in the items for the Naval Reserve Force and Naval Militia, on page 13, line 21, to change the total from "$2,994,000" to "$3,994,000."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee about a provision in the bill, on page 9, for the Office of Naval Intelligence. I see that there is $30,000 appropriated for that purpose. Can the Senator tell us anything about the advantage of an appropriation of that kind? I call his attention to the fact that some days ago there was printed in the papers a statement from New York showing that more than $1,000,000 worth of Navy material had been stolen and that the Office of Naval Intelligence knew nothing about it, and it was ascertained through arrests made at the instance of the Department of Justice. If such is the case, if the Office of Naval Intelligence does not function, if it does not prevent this kind of a theft, why should we appropriate the amount contained in this proviso for that purpose?

Mr. POINDEXTER. What proviso does the Senator refer to?

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 9, the Office of Naval Intelligence.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator any other criticism of the Office of Naval Intelligence except what he has just mentioned?

Mr. McKELLAR. I should say that this was enough. I read from the Evening Star of December 20 the headline:

Million-dollar theft from navy yard is charged to 23. Twenty-two are arrested in New York by Federal agents. Clothing and material is taken by truck load. Detectives pose as thieves, are accepted by men, and get evidence.

Without reading all the article, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to put the whole article in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hearing none, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of Wednesday, December 20, 1922.]

$1,000,000 THEFT FROM NAVY YARD IS CHARGED TO 23—22 ARE ARRESTED IN NEW YORK BY FEDERAL AGENTS—CLOTHING AND MATERIAL ARE TAKEN BY TRUCK LOAD—DETECTIVES POSE AS THIEVES, ARE ACCEPTED BY MEN, AND GET EVIDENCE.

(By the Associated Press.)

NEW YORK, December 20.—Twenty-two civilian employees at the Brooklyn Navy Base were arrested to-day on indictments returned several months ago by a Federal grand jury charging that Government property to the value of more than $1,000,000 had been stolen since the war.

The arrests were made by agents of the Department of Justice.

The grand jurors indicted 23 men after its investigation of the alleged wholesale thefts, which the authorities said included clothing, oil, and various other materials used at the navy yard. The twenty-third man under indictment was not found to-day. The investigation has been under way for months.

YARD DETECTIVES FAIL.

Navy intelligence officers undertook to find out the cause for the discrepancies between the inventories and the stock supposed to be on hand; but the thieves were too cunning for the regular naval detective force, the members of which were apparently well known to those who were doing the stealing.

William J. Burns, chief of the bureau of investigation of the Department of Justice, then was asked for help, and ordered Edward J. Brennan, head of the bureau's New York office, to assign operatives.

Brennan consulted Police Commissioner Enright and borrowed the services of Detective Francis Trainor.

Under the direction of Federal Agents Robert Walsh and Ralph Navarro and Detective Trainor, men were put into the warehouses as checkers, laborers, watchmen, and bookkeepers.

WERE WATCHED CLOSELY.

These detectives found themselves watched narrowly until they took advantage of opportunities obviously put in their way of stealing small articles, such as wrist watches and marine glasses. Not until they actually concealed these articles and pretended to steal them were they able to get any evidence against the men now in custody.

They then learned that Government property was being stolen by the truck load, including great boxes of clothing, paint by the barrel, crates of glass, and commercial alcohol by the gallon. Instances were found in which waste and salvage bought by contractors was substituted by new goods or by other merchandise than that mentioned in the contract; in other cases twice the quantity of actual salvaged stuff contracted for was delivered.

START OF WIDE CLEAN-UP.

It was indicated by prosecuting officials that to-day's arrests were but the start of a general clean-up involving Navy warehouse laborers, elevator operators, clerks, chauffeurs, watchmen, and packers, as well as fences, junkmen, and other accomplices on the outside.

Some of the missing material was said to have been located in warehouses in Brooklyn and Manhattan, and it was announced that the United States attorney would be asked to take steps for its recovery.

Government operators and detectives reported to Washington shortly after they began operations that heads of some of the departments in the buildings were the ring leaders in the conspiracy.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call attention to this part of it, without reading it all:

Navy intelligence officers undertook to find out the cause for the discrepancies between the inventories and the stock supposed to be on hand, but the thieves were too cunning for the regular naval detective force, the members of which were apparently well known to those who were doing the stealing.

Then it goes on to show how the Department of Justice had accomplished the discovery. It seems to me we probably had better leave these matters to the Department of Justice, and not appropriate money for the purpose of keeping up a department that seems absolutely unable to cope with the situation. If $30,000 is the amount provided for the Office of Naval Intelligence, I take it that it is wholly inadequate to effect the purpose, and it ought to be cut out of the bill entirely, in view of this report from New York. It seems to me we had better leave it to the agents of the Department of Justice and save that much money for the people.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator has answered his own question. He just pointed out that $30,000 was not enough money to employ detectives to guard all of the property of our Navy, with stations on both coasts. The purpose of the Office of Naval Intelligence is primarily of an entirely different character. I do not understand that the Senator from Tennessee has any objection to the use of the secret service or of the agents of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice to apprehend criminals who commit crimes against the United States. That is one of the purposes for which it is organized. In fact, that is one of the purposes for which the Department of Justice was established and is maintained. The Senator says that we had better make appropriations for the Department of Justice to do this work, and that is exactly what we do, and that is why the Department of Justice investigated the matter, and apparently investigated it successfully.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then that makes it all the more imperative that this provision of the bill should be stricken out, and I will offer an amendment to strike it out, for the reason that evidently this is just one of those things which have grown up in the department which ought to be corrected, a number of employees drawing from $1,800 to $2,000 a year who make a plaything of this naval intelligence, and while it is their duty to prevent the very kind of theft that is mentioned in this newspaper article they did not do it. I imagine that any kind of naval intelligence that could not keep up with a theft of that sort, done almost openly and in the manner pointed out in this article, surely ought to be abolished. Let us leave the investigation of that sort of thing to one department. Why have two departments doing it? The trouble is that in these various departments we have duplication of service, and what is everybody's business is nobody's business. We ought to strike this out entirely, and ought to put the duty upon the Department of Justice to prevent such thefts from the Navy Department.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is not necessary to go into a defense of the officers of the Naval Intelligence. I am acquainted with them. I do not know to what extent the Senator from Tennessee has personal knowledge of this office, in condemnation of which he has just spoken. My opinion is that instead of being useless men, as he describes them, men who are interested only in drawing their pay, there are no harder-working officers of the Government, no more competent or able officers, and none more successful in performing the services for which they are employed and for which their office is established. They gather information from all parts of the world for the use of the Navy in the bearing it may have on naval activities. The Senator picks up an article in a newspaper and, without further information, apparently accepts as accurate its statements about the case to which he refers. As a lawyer, I do not think if he were put upon the responsibility of acting upon this matter he would act upon any such evidence as that, nor would he condemn an office of the Navy as he has condemned this, if he were speaking seriously and really undertaking to decide the matter, without making further investigation of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am endeavoring to make that investigation in the very place where it should be made, and in the very manner, and the only manner, in which Senators can investigate such a subject. The Senator having the bill in charge has reported a bill making a certain appropriation, and I have produced this article, which very greatly reflects upon this service of the Navy. As I understand, the Senator does not know what the facts are. We have had no report about them. There has been no answer to this article, so far as I know, and I would really like to know, before this bill is passed, whether the Office of Naval Intelligence of the Navy has permitted these thefts by negligence, or in what way they have been permitted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator take the position that this little office, maintained on an appropriation of $30,000, ought to prevent all crimes in connection with the Navy?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Or ought to prevent the commission of any theft?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but this article said they were there, but that the thieves were too cunning for them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Tennessee know that the article states the facts as they actually were?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is an Associated Press article, and by long experience we have found that the Associated Press is generally very accurate. The Associated Press would not dare to make charges against officers of the Navy which could not be substantiated, in my judgment. I believe that almost any lawyer, or any other man with good intelligence and a knowledge of the character of this institution, whether he was a lawyer or not, would say the same thing. The Associated Press is not going to print head lines like these, a significant article like this, a sensational article like this, and give it out unless there is something behind it; and it seems to me an explanation is due from the department about this enormous theft of naval material. We appropriate nearly $300,000,000 a year for this department for all sorts of purposes. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] reminds me it is over $300,000,000; and that is true, because there are a lot of unexpended balances reappropriated in this bill, bringing the total up to something like three and a quarter million dollars a year. Under these circumstances it does seem to me that when the Associated Press charges an office in the Government with having permitted thefts amounting to a million dollars or more, before we appropriate additional money to keep up that office there ought to be some explanation of the matter and some excuse at least given for these officers who apparently have neglected their duties.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will give the Senator an explanation. The explanation is that it is not the duty of the Office of Naval Intelligence to maintain guards at the warehouses where the property of the Navy is stored. There is no appropriation made for that purpose, and it would be utterly impossible for them to do it, even if they undertook it. Of course, the Associated Press is a great institution, and I join with the Senator in his eulogy, but even the Associated Press is very often misinformed and mistaken in what it has printed. The Senator's attention has been attracted by that, and he wants to be informed about it. It is not the business of the Office of Naval Intelligence to do what they have been charged with neglecting, but if the Senator is really looking for information, I have no doubt that the Office of Naval Intelligence or the Secretary of the Navy will be very glad indeed to give him a full report on that matter. No doubt he could have had a report on it if he had asked for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am a little surprised that the Associated Press would accuse these officers of doing something it was not their business under the law to do. The Senator from Washington says that it was not their business to look after this matter. The charge in the Associated Press dispatch is that they were actually looking after it, but were incompetent to do it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me correct the Senator in his quotation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I heard what the Senator said. Of course, I am perfectly willing to have him correct it or change it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator heard what I said, but he did not hear correctly, or else misquoted me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not intend to do so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What I said was a comment on the remark of the Senator from Tennessee to the effect that these officers were charged with malfeasance or incompetence in permitting this crime to occur. I said that it was not their business to prevent the commissoin of crimes or to maintain guards over naval property.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is what they were charged with:

> Navy intelligence officers undertook to find out the cause for the discrepancies between the inventories and the stock supposed to be on hand.

Apparently this was their business and they were executing it, carrying out, or attempting to perform, the duties of their office. Then the article goes on to say:

> But the thieves were too cunning for the regular naval detective force, the members of which were apparently well known to those who were doing the stealing.

It does seem to me that this is a very grave charge against this office of the Navy, over a million dollars' worth of goods being stolen. Of course, in the Senate and in the House we appropriated money very freely, other people's money, and we forget that a million dollars amounts to anything. What is a million dollars—a little, trifling sum like a million dollars! No Senator ought to rise in his place and ask about the loss of a million dollars in a bureau of the Government! But it does seem to me that a million dollars is a considerable sum, and it is a sum about which we ought to make some inquiry. An officer of the Government is charged by the Associated Press in all the papers of the land with working on discrepancies, which afterwards turned out to be the stealing of a million dollars' worth of goods, and it does seem to me that the department should furnish a statement of the facts. If those officers have been guilty of such gross negligence, if it was their duty, as this article charges it was their duty, to prevent this very kind of theft, and they have failed in their duty, surely we should not undertake to appropriate money to keep those men in office. I hope the Senator will let this go over until to-morrow, so that we can find out something about this affair, who was to blame for it, and what steps have been taken to punish those who are responsible for it. There is no reason in the world why a million dollars' worth of goods of the Navy Department should be stolen, and where that has happened there has been wrongdoing somewhere, and it ought to be investigated by the department, and Congress ought not to appropriate additional money to keep that sort of men in office until there has been an investigation of it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have heard nothing in the account the Senator has read which would lead me to suppose that the Office of Naval Intelligence was charged with the responsibility of guarding those stores. Those stores were stolen, and afterwards the Office of Naval Intelligence was apparently set to work to find out who committed the theft. As yet they have apparently not been successful in locating the guilty parties. They may be able to do so before they get through. Similar things happen in cases coming before the civil authorities.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why maintain that office, if the officers are utterly unable to even ascertain that $1,000,000 worth of goods are gone?

Mr. HALE. That happened very recently.

Mr. McKELLAR. An intelligence officer of that kind could not detect bear tracks in a snowstorm here on the Capitol Grounds. It would be impossible for him to detect anything if he could not detect the loss of $1,000,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Nobody could do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know; I think if I saw bear tracks in front of me in the snow I could tell what they were.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator might give the department a little time to work out the problem.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am perfectly willing that this should go over until to-morrow, and I hope it will. If the officers have not been derelict in their duty, of course the criticism that is here offered is not right; but the charge standing unexplained, we ought not to appropriate any more money for an office of that kind. I have offered the amendment to-night, and I hope the Senator will let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there is a committee amendment pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending amendment is, on page 13, line 21, in the total for the Naval Reserve Force and Naval Militia, to strike out "$2,994,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,994,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that all the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer the following amendment: On page 9, line 1, I move to strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, strike out lines 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, as follows:

OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE.

For employees in the Office of Naval Intelligence, $30,000: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except two persons at $2,000 each.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, it is now 5 o'clock and I think we had better have an executive session, as I understand it is desired to have one.

I opposed the plan of Republican leaders of keeping here during the Christmas holidays Senators who have been here all the year attending regularly the sessions of the Senate. I am not willing that some of us who have been here all day remain here any longer when others have gone home for the night. I shall suggest the absence of a quorum unless——

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will withhold that for a moment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought the Senator suggested having an executive session?

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator from Washington is ready to go into executive session and end the legislative session now I shall withhold the point of no quorum. You forced us to remain here during Christmas and you have got to have a quorum to transact business.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, under the order previously made, until to-morrow, Thursday, December 28, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 27, 1922.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 27, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of life and light, of time and eternity, the world is Thine and Thou art near. We have only to wait to hear Thy voice and to feel Thy presence. We thank Thee that we are not the victims of chance and fate, but we live in Thy life and move in Thy strength. With us may the happiness and comfort of all be the object of each. As Thou art above all and over all, so help us to think, to feel, and to speak with good will toward all and hate for none. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 23, 1922, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 4172) to authorize the building of a bridge across the Great Pee Dee River, in South Carolina, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider H. R. 13559, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on the bill be limited to an hour and a half, three-quarters of an hour on each side, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and one-half by myself.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I have requests for about an hour on this side.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask for two hours of general debate, of which one-half is to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill; and pending that motion he asks unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to two hours, half to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the old days at Rome every legislative proposal in the forum, every new religion brought in by strangers, every new idea of any kind, had to meet the test, "Cui bono," "What is the good of it?"

It seems to me that such a question should be put to congressional appropriations now as never before. The people of America are bending under the most grievous burden of taxation ever laid in any nation. Every dollar in taxes levied under such circumstances should mean as nearly as possible a hundred contribution to the general welfare.

This bill contains an appropriation of $13,312,805 for the maintenance of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Very few persons, in or out of Congress, realize what a colossal sum that is, compared with the expenditures for other governmental activities.

The entire Department of State, with its bureaus, divisions, and world-wide activities, costs the taxpayers of America less than the Indian Bureau.

That is, we can pay for the Secretary of State, his assistants, and all the clerks needed for the conduct of this great executive department; we can pay the salaries of all our ambassadors and ministers, secretaries and clerks and interpreters at embassies and legations, United States consuls, vice consuls, and other helpers; we can pay for the transportation of all our Diplomatic and Consular officers, for the rent of all our embassy, legation, and consular buildings and grounds; we can pay the expenses of carrying out all our international obligations and commissions, such as the Pan American Union; we can pay all these expenses in connection with our official intercourse with all the world and still have $4,000,000 left, compared to the cost of maintaining the Indian Bureau and its activities which have grown like the fabulous bean stalk.

The entire judicial system of the United States, including the Supreme Court, circuit court of appeals, district courts, Hawaiian and Porto Rican courts, courts of customs appeals, courts of claims, Territorial courts, with all their United States marshals and deputies, their United States attorneys and assistants, their clerks and commissioners, and all other expenses, amount to $11,790,700. The Indian Bureau is to cost next year more than $13,000,000.

This Bureau of Indian Affairs, which 50 years ago was declared to be only a temporary activity, will next year spend about as much as the entire Customs Service, which brings $400,000,000 into the Treasury. It will cost the taxpayers about the same as the entire Coast Guard, about whose wonderful work we have heard so much recently. It will spend millions more than the entire Bureau of Engraving and Printing, which issues all the currency and securities of the United States. It will cost millions more than the entire Public Health Service, with all the far-flung activities dealing with the health of all Americans.

Think of the Department of Labor. It has a Bureau of Immigration which administers our laws relative to all immigrants. It has a Bureau of Naturalization which must look after the admission of all aliens into American citizenship. Under that department is the Children's Bureau, the Women's Bureau, and the Bureau of Labor Statistics. But for all these great activities, together with all salaries, rents, and all other expenses, the cost is but $6,618,556, while the Indian Bureau alone takes eleven millions out of the Treasury this year, besides the tribal funds of the Indians.

We finance the entire Department of Commerce, with the exception of the Bureau of Lighthouses, for less than the Bureau of Indian Affairs. We have had many efforts to economize here and there in the Department of Commerce by cutting down appropriations a few thousands. Is it not time to realize that the millions of dollars involved in the handling of Indian affairs are worthy of our attention?

Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask, "Cui bono"—what is the good of it?

First, what benefit comes to the American people from the expenditure of this thirteen millions?

It is spent to enable more than 5,000 Government employees to supervise and superintend less than 50,000 Indian families. It assigns a Government agent to every 10 families for 1923, as has been the case for many years. The public pays the bill.

Shall we say that the benefit comes to the American public in protection against the bloody menace of Indian wars? I will admit that thirteen millions is not too much to pay for a year's security against the scalping knife and tomahawk. If there were deadly danger that the Crows and the Blackfeet, who refused to shed the blood of the white men, even while they were being robbed of their hunting grounds, might descend upon Chicago and ravage the Windy City with knife and fire, the money would be well spent. If the Sioux and the Apaches, instead of being decimated by tuberculosis and trachoma, were threatening to go on the warpath against Omaha and St. Louis, the expenditure of thirteen millions would be amply justified.

But the difficulty is that no advocate of the costly system of Indian Bureau control will say that this great sum is necessary to protect the American people against the Indians. They admit that we must send the taxgatherers out to collect these millions from the earnings of the people and then pay it out largely to nonproducers and Government functionaries, but they do not argue that there is any benefit in return to the taxpayers, who produce it.

No, Mr. Chairman; they say that America must sacrifice many millions in tax money for the benefit of the Indians. These 50,000 families must be protected and guarded. One agent must be allotted to every 10 families, not to help the American taxpayers but to help the Indians.

That, then, is the crux of the matter. The whole case of the Indian Bureau is based on the assumption that it benefits the Indians to the extent of the $13,000,000 contributed by the American people.

If it be shown that no such benefit comes to the Indians through the bureau the case falls. But if it be shown that the expenditure of the millions taken out of the pockets of the American public in fact works an injury on the Indians themselves, then the appropriation of further funds is infamous.

Mr. Chairman, I deny that this $13,000,000 appropriation benefits the Indians. I propose to prove to the satisfaction of any person, save one who profits from the present bureau system, that it injures them. I believe that the Indian would be better off to-day if the Indian Bureau had been abolished 25 years ago.

Here are 300,000 human beings of a race which for 90 years has been under complete control of the Indian Bureau. During that time they have been forcibly driven off their home lands of the Eastern States and herded into reservations west of the Mississippi. These reservations, whose bounds were laid out in sacred treaties, have been cut in two oftentimes without a word to the Indians concerned. Not a treaty made by the United States Government with the Indians has been kept and these acts of faithlessness have either been initiated or approved by the Indian Bureau, this great protector of a helpless people.

But let us forget that black, hideous page of our history. These reservations, diminished even as they have been, have become very valuable. The building up of the West and the increase of population have added to the value of every acre. On some reservations great oil deposits have been discovered and minerals of various kinds have been found. There are valuable forests on others.

Not because of the Indian Bureau but because of the national growth of America and in spite of the Indian Bureau the lands still left to the Indians became valuable.

In all, the 50,000 families under the control of the Indian Bureau have lands and other property worth a billion dollars to-day.

That means for every Indian family wealth of $15,000 and more. It means an average income of $900 for every family, which is more than the average income for all the families of the United States.

These Indians are possessors of wealth, but they are starving for lack of the necessaries of life. Does it benefit the Indian to lock up his own possessions in order to keep him forever dangling to a pauperizing, degrading bureau system? Does it benefit the Indian to have bureau agents dissipate his property while they spend millions in tax funds as well?

Listen to James McLaughlin, for 50 years an American official dealing with the Indian problem. He has been superintendent of Indian agencies and Indian inspectors, and I have heard him given credit for knowing more about the Indians than any man in the United States. In his book, My Friend the Indian, he gives actual facts to prove that the expenditure of these millions does not benefit the Indian. He says:

> The fund belonging to the Indians held in the Treasury of the United States might be described as an endowment for the creation of paupers and the perpetuation of the present state of dependence among the people to whose credit it stands.

It appears to me that it is the duty of the Government to make some provision presently for the emancipation of these unhappy victims, to deliver them from the evils that guarantee a future of ungentle paupery, by giving to the Indian his portion and turning him adrift to work out his own salvation.

Mr. Chairman, Major McLaughlin made that declaration of policy in 1910. In the 12 years succeeding, instead of taking any steps to free the Indians, we have bound them in countless new schemes and toils, bringing them more surely under the system which he so deplored.

This enlightened man declares that the Indians to-day are not as desirable a class of people as they were 40 years ago.

Why is this true? Let Major McLaughlin answer:

The Indian was in turns browbeaten and cajoled, bribed and punished, threatened and rewarded, and all the worst elements in his character developed for want of firm, consistent, and honest treatment.

He describes in detail the condition of a South Dakota tribe of Indians which for many years lived on its own resources and which conquered its difficulties. Then came tribal funds through sales of lands and the consequent control of the Indian Bureau.

I have no hesitancy in saying that the conditions of these Indians to-day is not as hopeful as it was when they had no wealth in expectancy and no payments to depend upon—

Says Major McLaughlin.

Their advancement has been greatly retarded by the system under which they live. Fifteen years of annuity drawing has made of a people that was struggling to the surface by personal effort a set of paupers in chancery. They would be better off, as far as the future is concerned, if they stood as blanketed Indians on the virgin prairie.

Major McLaughlin draws a vivid picture of this particular tribe and then states:

I instance this band as a sample of what has been accomplished by governmental administration of Indian funds. They prove incontrovertably the demoralizing effect of the present system and they stand as a fair sample of people treated as they have been. The Indian who has nothing at all, either at present or in expectancy, is much better off and infinitely better material upon which to work.

Fifty years of study and observation and experience have brought Major McLaughlin to one conclusion:

Give the Indians the money they have coming. Give it to them as soon as possible. Do away with the leading strings and check rein by which the Indian is now so handicapped, and he will immediately feel the necessity for demonstrating his capacity to manage his own estate. By this means only can the Indian be saved from chronic indigence and ultimate and absolute paupery. I am sufficiently well acquainted with Indian nature to venture the prophesy that a large majority of those under 50 years of age will develop the capacity to hustle for themselves exactly in the proportion that their needs press them. Take away his annuity by letting him handle the principal, and the Indian will be given a start on the road to complete civilization and independence that will land him at the desired goal in nine cases out of ten.

That is advice this Congress would do well to follow. Every added dollar of appropriation works an injury to the Indians.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is loudly declared that these great appropriations must continue because it would be cruel and brutal to reverse our policy of 90 years. These self-styled friends of the Indians cry out that the Indians do not want freedom and its responsibilities. "Oh, no," they exclaim, "The Indians are begging to be allowed to remain under the sheltering wings of the Indian Bureau."

It has cost millions of American dollars to build up that falsehood and foist it upon the American people. The officials of the Indian Bureau know that statement is not true. They know the tricks and schemes and foxlike watchfulness necessary to give it even a semblance of reality. They fight to death any plan to settle the question by fair vote. They oppose any election which would show that the wings of the bureau give shelter to the Indians just as the hawk's wings shelter the partridge.

The best plan yet devised by the mind of man for ascertaining the will of a large body of men and women is through the direct election of representatives. Upon that principle is built our system of representative democracy.

The desires of the American Indians, wherever a free opportunity is given, have been shown to favor freedom and to oppose bureaucratic control. This fact is so well known to the Indian Bureau that it has for years arrogated to itself the right to supervise and control the election of council members and tribal delegates.

The superintendent of the reservation must put his seal of approval on the Indians who vote. He must approve the delegates elected. He assumes the right to fill all vacancies. As a final quencher of free representation, the Washington office exercises the right of recognizing only such delegates as it desires.

Is any man so foolish as to believe that an honest expression of opinion can be secured under such duress. Every Member of Congress has had experience enough in things political to know that if his political enemies had the right to scan the voting lists and select the voters he would have little chance of representing his constituency here or anywhere else.

If an Indian has shown any activity against the bureau system of control, he may have the support of a vast majority of the members of his tribe, but that means nothing if the superintendent says "Nay." It would take volumes to record the schemes which have been used to overthrow the will of the majority and substitute the will of a minority. Rump conventions, meetings of the few faithful, without notice to any others, refusal to authorize traveling expenses; they are many and devious, but are effective in smothering the desires of the Indians. It is brutal business, but necessary if the bureau is to endure.

The Flathead Indians had a council in 1921 which represented them. They selected Max J. Barnaby and Mary Lemery to come to Washington to correct certain abuses in administration.

The bureau could not deny the election, but nullified it by officially declaring that the business committee of the Flatheads was the real tribal council. Since the superintendent had named members of the business committee, he felt justified in making it the official body representing the Indians.

The two regularly elected delegates came to Washington with their credentials. They were not recognized by the bureau, and when Senator THOMAS J. WALSH took up the question of the payment of expenses from Indian funds he received this answer:

The council from which Miss Lemery and Mr. Barnaby claimed authority to come to Washington was not an official tribal council of the Flathead Tribe, and both are familiar with the order against coming to Washington at the expense of the tribe without procuring authority in advance.

It was not an official council because it was not completely under the control of the bureau officials. "Authority in advance" is only given those who represent the bureau rather than the Indians.

Mr. Chairman, if the Indian Bureau believed that the Indians are so devoted to their kindly control, would they stoop to such methods? The fact is that the bureau knows that a fair and free expression of the will of the Indians would show such an overwhelming majority in favor of freedom that it would end forever the expensive legend that these original Americans are hugging their fetters in ecstasy.

Oh, no, the bureau does not allow them to elect their delegates freely, nor can the Indians even select their own attorneys.

The Indians have interest which forever will conflict with the interest of the Indian Bureau. They might as well be unrepresented as to have an attorney whose only chance of employment lies in the approval of the bureau. It is a fraud and mockery to talk of representation under such circumstances.

These are not all the powers and the plots used to silence the Indians. Officials on the reservation and in Washington promise special favors for the silence of leaders who have voiced complaints. It is very easy to throw money and position in the way of the man who is a potential trouble maker for the bureau. Many have been tempted and some have fallen, but it is well to record for the sake of human nature that the great majority have spurned the bureau bribe and have refused to sell out their fellows for individual gain. "Divide and conquer" was the advice of the Hapsburgs to every holder of unjust power. It is the policy of the Indian Bureau.

The Flatheads are set against the Blackfeet, the Sioux against the Crows, and so forth. Although organization on nation-wide scale is the very key to modern development, it has never been permitted to get foothold among the Indians.

When the Pueblo delegation came to Washington and requested James J. Coffey, a Chippewa, to accompany them to the Indian Office for conference, they were soon given to understand the heinous crime they had committed. When Coffey tried to speak for them he was silenced. Assistant Commissioner Meritt said to the Pueblos:

We would be glad to consider anything you want done to help, but we want you to do it yourselves and not get anyone from any other reservation to help you.

Mr. Chairman, when any volunteer organization, like the Society of American Indians, undertakes to secure the cooperation of all the Indians in their common cause, it is made the target of unlimited abuse. Its members are denounced as agitators and the Star-Spangled Banner is called into use to drape over a most un-American institution. The Indians are forbidden by the bureau to form any kind of organization looking to their emancipation. They can not make a donation to Indians who have left the reservations and are eager to help their brothers escape.

This attempt to prostitute high American ideals into use against those who stand for American equality and square deal is disheartening evidence of the fact that "patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel."

Mr. Chairman, do you not understand how this system I have outlined tends to prevent expression on the part of the Indians? Do you not see the net in which they are held? Do you not realize that the great cry of protest which is coming from these reservations is in itself proof of heroism and bravery worthy of noble men and women?

Let any white man go to one of these reservations and tell the Indians that all men are created equal and have inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Let him tell the Indians that they should be freed from bureaucratic control and compelled to obey laws of State and Nation as Americans.

That is high treason. Such heresies threaten the very ark of the covenant. There is an Indian Bureau official to stamp out these infamous doctrines. Back of that autocrat is a jail and police, and back of all stands the entire Government of the United States. Out goes this dangerous disturber of the peace—of the bureau.

If that be the fate of a white American citizen, what must be the abject helplessness of the uneducated, isolated Indian, and what must be his heroism when he dares fight on against such overwhelming odds?

It is an Indian saying that courage is the noblest quality of the heart. They lived by that motto when they faced overpowering foes unafraid. But no Indian attacked by savage beast or savage man ever exhibited greater bravery than those Indians who have dared to assail the Indian Bureau system of control.

Remember, he can be thrown into jail on the simple complaint of a bureau official. Remember, he can be tried and sentenced without jury or evidence. He can not have an attorney to defend him without the consent of those who are prosecuting him. His money, his property, and his means of livelihood are in the hands of the prosecutor.

Gentlemen of the committee, to fight in such an unequal battle as that requires a man. Fifty years of that oppression would crush the spirit out of any people that did not have inherent qualities of nobility and self-respect. Yet there are thousands of red men whose heads are bloody but unbowed. They have triumphed over the degeneracy and decay which accompany the segregated reservation system. The bureau has put them in prison but has not had power to chain their spirit. They have beaten down ignorance and idleness. They have retained not only their fleetness of foot and keenness of vision but also their qualities of endurance and high courage. They have the confidence of their people, who are eager to follow in their footsteps once the burdens are taken from their backs.

They are entitled to a fair chance, and I propose to do anything in my power to see that they get it. They have a right to have America know that the great sums spent by the Indian Office are not for the benefit of the Indian.

Mr. Chairman, the present system is wrong. In a day which has seen the crashing down of kaisers and czars, the Indian Bureau is a despot out of date. It is "fruit left too late, high on a blighted bough, ripe till it's rotten."

To live at the whim of bureau officials is the last and worst misery that human beings can feel. It is calculated to convert men into creatures without ambition, because without hope. I have heard an old Indian say, "Our grandfathers died in slavery; our fathers died in slavery; we may die in slavery, and our children may die in slavery, but something will come of it at last."

Something will come of it now if Congress has Americanism enough in its make-up. It is high time to reverse the maxim of bureaucracy, "The Indian is made for the bureau and not the bureau for the Indian."

Mr. Chairman, this is not the only bureau in American history which has undertaken to guide every detail of the lives of helpless human beings.

The Freedmen's Bureau was established in 1865 in order to do for the negroes exactly what the Indian Bureau is supposed to do for the Indians. Its record of maladministration has been outdone by the Indian Bureau and its abolition by Congress should be followed by similar action as to the Indian Bureau.

After Appomattox there were 4,880,000 negroes who were neither slaves nor citizens. They were dubbed "wards of the Nation," just as the American Indians are to-day.

The Freedmen's Bureau was given sovereign powers in dealing with these negroes. It undertook to regulate life, morals, and conduct. It had charge of every labor contract entered into by a negro. It had final authority over the sale, leasing, and cultivation of abandoned and confiscated lands in the South. It distributed rations, medicines, clothing, and other supplies. It looked after the transportation of all freedmen and bureau officials. It had power to provide for all educational facilities and to look after the savings of the freedmen.

In short, it had the same powers as the Indian Bureau to-day. It was a government within itself, legislative, judicial, and executive. It was independent of and superior to the civil governments in the various States. It established its own courts and supervised the action of the State courts.

The bureau was established as a temporary agency and was to go out of existence one year from the conclusion of the war. In 1866 it was extended for two years more, and later was extended to June 20, 1872, when it was finally abolished.

Its commissioner was Gen. O. O. Howard, one of the finest gentlemen and bravest soldiers in American history. In spite of that fact the Freedmen's Bureau made a record for corruption and debauchery which has shamed American annals.

It was organized to benefit the negroes. What was the result? History records that the ministrations of the bureau resulted in harsh treatment of the negroes, disease, pauperism, and death.

The freedmen were exploited by a horde of incompetent and unscrupulous officeholders. These deluded victims were told that they were to be given "40 acres and a mule" upon payment of a small sum. Agents sold the negroes red, white, and blue sticks and told them they could stake out their 40 acres wherever they desired.

In the public archives there is a deed for land which was handed over with these red, white, and blue sticks. It was headed "Office, Bureau of Freedmen," and was as follows:

> Know all men by these presents that a naught is a naught and a figure is a figure: all for the white man and none for the nigure. And whereas Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so also have I lifted this nigure out of four dollars and six bits. Amen, Selah, Nix Cum Rouse. (Seal.)

Then there was organized the Freedman's Savings & Trust Co., whose founder was John W. Alvord, superintendent of the educational work of the Freedmen's Bureau. Although it was a private corporation chartered by Congress, the negroes were told that it was a Government institution. A picture of Abraham Lincoln adorned the cover of the bank books used, and there was also an official statement that it was an auxiliary to the Freedmen's Bureau.

The negroes were swindled by those who were appointed to guard and protect them. The bank failed in 1874, owing $3,299,201 to the deluded and helpless depositors, and although many bills have been introduced to reimburse them not a cent has ever been returned to the victims.

The bureau, like every bureaucracy dealing with helpless peoples, puts its hands into everything and corrupted everything. It started many schools and spent $5,262,511.26 for education, and yet never had one-tenth of the negro children in school. It issued more than 15,000,000 rations, at a cost of $8,000,000, which resulted, according to Walter H. Fleming, of the West Virginia University, in "the negroes crowding into the towns, where much suffering and disease resulted."

It established hospitals, camps, dispensaries, and communities at a cost of millions, and every one proved a failure. In all, the total expenditures in about seven years were reported as $13,359,065.58 out of the United States Treasury. Many more millions were contributed by charitable organizations and were spent by the bureau.

Such expenditures were regarded as ruinous, and finally the bureau was abolished, in spite of tremendous pressure from officeholders, who prophesied the destruction of the Republic if their bloodsucking institution should be touched with impious hands.

It was a wise act to stop its operations. If it had grown as has the Indian Bureau, dealing with millions of people instead of thousands, its expenditures to-day would require the total receipts of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, the Indian Bureau deals with some 300,000 persons. Yet in one year it spends more money than the Freedmen's Bureau in its entire history, dealing with fifteen times as many persons.

The negroes to-day, thrown upon their own resources and forced to sink or swim, have made giant strides toward self-reliance and self-support, compared to the Indians. The Indians have been herded into reservations, ground down by regulations issued by petty officeholders. Practically the Indians belong to the Indian Bureau, as Legree said of Uncle Tom, "body and soul."

"Poorer every year," sighs the Indian; and it is true, in spite of the fact that the wealth of Indian provinces has been spent by the bureau.

These appropriations benefit the Indians? You will never say so when you study the history of any of these tribes and know the audacious injustices perpetrated upon them down the years.

Let us take the Blackfeet Indians, for example. In 1855 the United States negotiated a treaty with the Blackfeet formally recognizing their ownership of a great tract of plains and mountains bounded on the north by the Canadian line, on the west by the summit of the Rockies, and on the south by the Musselshell River and the Missouri to the mouth of the Milk River, and on the east from the mouth of the Milk River north to the Canadian line.

That territory was to be the home and hunting grounds of these Indians. But in 1867 an Executive order fixed the southern boundary on the Missouri River. Other Executive orders took away half the land left. The Indians were never consulted about this diminishing of their reservations. In fact, the first they even knew about it was when United States soldiers rounded them up in their buffalo grounds and drove them north.

The Indian Bureau was to furnish them food supplies, but in the winter of 1883, 500 Blackfeet died of starvation because there was no provision made for them.

Then, in 1887, the United States besought the Indians to sell a great tract in the eastern part of the reservation. Finally they yielded, and for the sum of $1,500,000 they parted with their heritage. Once more, in 1896, representatives of the Government came to them and persuaded them to sell the western part of their reservation, the region which is now Glacier National Park, for another $1,500,000.

The money received was placed in the Treasury. All of it, and a great sum besides, has been spent by the Indian Bureau for the alleged benefit of these duped and deluded Americans.

The tribe has been decimated by disease and starvation, and for more than a generation they have suffered misery which could come only to serfs despised and neglected by their masters.

In 1915 United States Senator Harry Lane, of Oregon, made a personal inspection of the reservation and reported to the Joint Commission to Investigate Indian Affairs. Here is what he said:

> The condition of the full-blooded Indians in this district, many of whose homes I visited, was pitiable. I found families consisting of as many as six or eight persons living in single-room shacks, and in some instances the beds were made down with insufficient bedding; such bedding as they did have frequently consisted of old rags and sacks or scraps of coverlets. This condition is bad for them and will result eventually in their entire destruction, no doubt, for the reason that if one member of the family becomes infected with tuberculosis or trachoma or any other contagious disease, every condition is favorable for the disease to spread to all the members of the family and to other visiting Indians.
> There is no game in this country, or at least not enough to afford them subsistence. I was informed that to keep from starving they had killed and eaten all the prairie dogs and also had resorted to eating skunks.
>
> They are unable to protect themselves from acts of injustice done them, and are thus deprived of any remedy for their relief, and have been left to rot through the incompetence or willful neglect of those in charge of them and their affairs. Indeed, it has heretofore and is now said to be unsafe for anyone who can be "reached" to present their claims or complaints to Congress. It is "cords to the wrists and gyves to the heels" for anyone who undertakes the thankless task, and such persons are pursued and harassed, and the sole effort which is afterwards made seems to be to cover up the evidence and put upon trial the complaining witness in place of trying to remedy the evil or punish those guilty of wrongdoing.
> While upon the reservation I had experience with these tactics. I was informed by some of the Indians who had talked with me that the police of the agency had warned them against doing it, and had threatened to arrest some of them for attending illegal meetings. Right foxy and well able to take care of themselves are the gentry who are responsible for the gross mismanagement of the Blackfeet and other Indians.
> If the condition of the Blackfeet Indians at this time is to be taken as an index of the character of the trusteeship which the Government imposes upon other Indians, the work has been a failure. The spectacle is a depressing one and calls not only for immediate relief but for an entire and permanent change in the manner of handling their affairs.

Senator Lane made his investigation and his scathing criticisms more than seven years ago. Not one inch advance has been made in that time toward better conditions. Every year since the Indian Bureau, under color of devotion to the Indians' welfare, has fastened tighter its strangle hold upon the Indians for its own selfish and sinister purposes.

Under date of September 28, 1922, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in response to my request, gave me a statement as to the financial condition of the Blackfeet Indians.

He stated that there is $54,196.26 in the United States Treasury to the credit of the tribe. The receipts from grazing leases were $32,586.20 in 1917, but they dropped to $1,503.54 in 1922.

In the meantime the appropriations from the Treasury for the support and civilization of these Indians increased from $24,681.94 in 1917 to $59,348.33 in 1922.

The commissioner reports that the bureau placed a tribal herd on the reservation on the reimbursable plan. The total cost of the herd was $367,053.46. Of this amount $61,957.84 was paid out for salaries and wages to bureau employees.

It is stated that the herd was sold at a net loss of $54,523, not counting equipment. The loss on this one venture is more than the entire amount to the credit of the tribe in the Treasury.

The whole scheme of tribal herds and communistic property is a bureau scheme to prevent the Indians becoming Americans. It is entirely wrong in principle, even though it should be successful as a dollar and cents proposition. But what shall we say when, after investing the money of the Indians without their knowledge or consent, the bureau loses the money invested and beggars the Indians?

Remember that the main argument of the bureau officials for the continuance of their bureaucracy is the business incapacity of their ward. How did they demonstate their efficiency?

There came a drought in the Blackfeet country and the grass failed. The supervisor in charge ordered the cattle turned into the allotments of Indians who had been endeavoring to make their own livelihoods on their lands. Even the little hay that they had toiled to secure was eaten by the tribal herds.

Then the supervisor became panic stricken and ordered that the cattle must be shipped out at once. They had to be dipped before they could be shipped and this was ordered done in severe winter weather. The cattlemen dipped their cattle in the summer time, but this tribal herd, the property of the Indians, was dipped when the thermometer was 30 degrees below zero. These cattle were crowded into a liquid bath which covered them completely and then came out of it to freeze to death.

Some of them died at once, others died on the railroad cars, but there was no recourse. The guardianship of the Indian Bureau had been exemplified once more. It was but one more illustration of the value of a system which puts the Indians, their lives and lands, their money and morals, in the hands of the Indian Bureau.

I have been told by members of the Blackfeet Tribe that the cattle of this tribal herd were branded with the same brand used by a Montana stockman. Little wonder that five or six hundred head of cattle disappeared from the reservation and that no effort was made to recover them. Fish Wolf Robe is a Blackfeet who had an allotment upon which he worked faithfully in an effort to put up enough hay to provide the necessaries of life. He had about 20 tons cured when the agency employees ran the tribal herd into his meadows. The cattle ate up his hay and left him destitute. When he complained he was threatened with jail. He was told that the official had leased his land for the use of the tribal herd.

He had never desired to lease his land and never received any money for a lease. But what mattered these little details when he was an Indian, who must be guarded and protected against himself?

Mr. Chairman, the whole system is intolerable enough to "stir a fever in the blood of age and make infant sinew strong as steel."

Do you realize that this losing venture of a tribal herd stands as a mortgage against the property of the Indians? Those cattle were bought with reimbursable funds. Even the Indians whose individual holdings were ravaged by the herd are held responsible for their due share of the losses. The Indians were not consulted, but they are expected to pay. They did not have a voice in the arrangement, but they must meet the bureau invoice of losses.

Still this tragedy of errors in regard to the tribal herd which dissipated every dollar of their tribal funds is not the greatest calamity endured by the Blackfeet.

The tribal herd has run its course over the reservation and has done its damage. The losses have been stopped.

A far greater liability is the irrigation system which has been fastened upon this reservation in violation of every vestige of common sense. The commissioner in his letter to me states that since 1910 $1,095,251.15 has been spent for irrigation on this reservation. In the last fiscal year the amount was $31,299.77. This great sum has been spent, not with the approval of the Indians whose property is mortgaged to pay for it, but over their protests.

Not even the bureau can defend the policy now. Assistant Commissioner Meritt testified before the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee dealing with the Interior Department bill of 1923. He said:

> This irrigation project has not proven successful in the past because of climatic conditions. They sometimes have frosts in May and snows in August.

Of course, the Indian Bureau only learned this habit of nature after a million dollars had been spent. For uncounted ages this territory in the Rockies, stretching to the Canadian border, has had killing frosts in the summer time. The Indians knew it, but, of course, they are incompetent, and must not be encouraged to offer advice to their masters.

There are 47,000 acres in that irrigation project already under irrigation. Only 2,005 acres have ever been cultivated by Indians. It cost for operation and maintenance last year $27,666 in order that a few incurably optimistic Indians might attempt to grow crops under such conditions—$14 an acre in costs—and the Indians secured only a small fraction of that in crops.

Could there be a more flagrant instance of the willful waste of money than that? Could the poor Indians, so incompetent in the eyes of a paternal bureau, have done worse?

I do not want to be unjust. Assistant Commissioner Meritt insisted before the committee that the irrigation project is an engineering success. Yes; the water runs in the canal, when it does not freeze. It is a success similar to that of the surgeon who performs a delicate operation most successfully, save that the patient dies.

Mr. Chairman, the fact is that bureau officials who look down with scorn upon the Indians and claim a divine right to order their every action led them into a trap which has cost more than a million dollars; not only led them into it, but expects them to pay for the trap, for this is another reimbursable hoax and the Indians are helpless to prevent liens against their property to meet the costs of this infamous irrigation bubble.

Unless something is done the Blackfeet Indians are doomed. They are almost at the end of the trail. The divine-right theory has nearly reached its end—destruction. The President asked Congress to appropriate money for their relief last year and we passed a bill, but it was like putting a sticking plaster on a cancer.

James Willard Schultz, author of several books dealing with Indian life, has issued a piteous appeal to charitably inclined Americans to send money to the Blackfeet Indians relief fund, at Browning, Mont., so that rations may be issued to the starving.

Here is a paragraph from his appeal:

Owing to the starved condition of the Blackfeet, tuberculosis and infectious diseases of the eye are rapidly increasing among them. I saw one of the three physicians on the reservation who are in the Indian Service. I hear many complaints about him. It can be proven that he would not go 300 yards from his house to see a sick man who had become delirious; and that he would not come out of his house to see a woman who had an infected hand, because, as his wife said, "that was his vacation time of two weeks."

Mr. Chairman, the pathetic history of the Blackfeet is eloquent answer to the question as to whether this great annual contribution from the American taxpayers is of benefit to the Indians.

I maintain that practically every dollar of this appropriation works an injury to the Indians, in whose name it is taken from the Treasury.

Let any one who doubts that statement compare the Chippewa Indians of Michigan with the Chippewas of Minnesota.

The Michigan Indians are not under the bureau, while their brothers of Minnesota are held securely under bureau domination. That offers a fair test. Here are the same Indians, with the same ancestry and the same blood and breeding, but with different environment.

What has been the result? The Chippewas of Michigan became citizens through treaty and legislation in 1845. The last payments under the treaty were made in 1872, and they have been required to shift for themselves since that time.

They have established common schools and they are a part of the American communities where they live. They speak the English language. Though they do not have the majority of voters in the townships Indians have been elected to all the offices within the gift of the electorate. There have been Indian school directors, supervisors, and justices of the peace, while a number have held county offices. Two-thirds of them own their own homes, and there are no more paupers among them than among the white population. Out of their ranks have come ministers, lawyers, and teachers. Some of them are mechanics and others are farmers. Whether in industrial cities or on the farms they have made good in competition with all the world. They are real American citizens, of whom America may well be proud.

What of their brothers in Minnesota who have been guarded and sustained by the Indian Bureau? The current law provides $95,000 for the "civilization and support" of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota. It provides $51,000 for the support and education of Indian pupils in Indians schools. It provides $46,570 for the tuition of Indian pupils in other schools. It provides for superintendents and teachers and employees by the score to hold the reins tight over these Indians.

What has this money accomplished for the Indians? Listen to the letter sent out by the official council of the Chippewas of Minnesota, copy of which was addressed to every Member of Congress within the past six months:

As a tribe we have been dispossessed of our homes, our liberties, our lands, our wild-rice beds, our wild-berry fields, our timber, our sugar bushes, our hunting and trapping grounds. Our basket making, rug and blanket weaving, bead work, and canoe making are so imitated and cheaply manufactured by the white man that we can no longer compete. We are a people who under the present paternal system of Indian administration are deprived of every self-independent right, who are languishing in misery and dying of starvation.

You can call the roll of the Indian tribes of America and the response will be one great chorus of protest against the present system of control and the money distributed in a way to perpetuate the Indian Bureau.

However, Mr. Chairman, I know how quickly will come back the answer that these benighted Indians are not capable of knowing what is best for themselves. They are ignorant and are unworthy of attention.

In God's name, who is responsible for that situation? The Indian Bureau has had absolute power over the Indians for a long, long time. Its employees have trained these Indians under the reservation system in the way they said was best. Now they find fault with the Indian and his intelligence, but never with the system which blighted his intelligence and enforced his ignorance. Even a cat or dog or a bird can be trained if the method is right. But wrong methods through 50 years have left many Indians to-day who can not even speak the English language. If the Indians to-day are not able to speak intelligently concerning their own problems, the fault is the bureau's alone.

The Government is something separate and apart from these Indians. They have been made inferior through autocratic control, and then because they are inferior they are barred from exercising any rights or responsibilities. The Indian Bureau is exactly as logical as the brutal son who murdered his father and mother and then besought the judge for mercy on the ground that he was an orphan.

The only way to make any people responsible is to give them responsibilities. To forbid them any voice in their own affairs is to take away every inducement to allegiance and loyalty to the Government. It makes the victims incompetent, spiritless, and sullen.

The Indian Bureau has cunningly and with method reached out for new undertakings. It has bound them round with red tape and confusions, adding more complexities at every step. The result is useless agencies, silly duplication, and wicked waste of money.

The Indian Bureau is a despot which can do as it likes with the life, liberties, the possessions, and the occupation of every individual Indian on the rolls. Its only thought in meeting a problem is through tyrannical exercise of arbitrary power. Not by counsel but by coercion does it undertake its tasks. It relies on force, never on fellowship. Its policy is the exact opposite of the fundamental principles upon which the American Nation was founded. To its inspection and control and interference is subject everything that an Indian does or says or thinks or has. It is the most determined enemy of personal freedom and civil liberty that can be found anywhere on earth since the Czar of all the Russias lost his throne.

The Indian Bureau is not an agency of service; it is a great army of officeholders paid out of the Treasury and performing work which in large measure injures the Indians and the common welfare.

Mr. Chairman, I know many Indians do not have business ability to-day. How could they have when their training has come through a system in itself woefully unbusinesslike and inefficient?

H. N. Graves, accountant with the United States Bureau of Efficiency, testified before the Indian Affairs Committee of the House in the last Congress. Denouncing the bureau for lack of even the most ordinary care in its bookkeeping system, he said:

It is my opinion that the property accounting system up to July, 1917, was practically worthless, accomplished no purpose whatever. No such thing as an inventory was taken.

Mr. Graves undertook to put in an accounting system. He stated that his plan was designed so that data would be obtained as to the cost of operating each activity—such as dormitories, schools, farms, gardens, and so forth.

Our idea was—

Said Mr. Graves—

that if it happened that the farm was operated at a loss, our system would disclose the fact. This was not popular. Few people in the Indian Service are interested to know whether farms are being operated at a loss. Consequently the feature has been eliminated.

Of course, direct methods and businesslike plans were unpopular and were eliminated. The bureau system depends upon confusion, complexity, and circumlocution.

Out on the reservations nothing is permitted, everything is either ordered or forbidden. The veriest trifle must be referred to some official who starts in through a maze of red-tape procedure.

What can an Indian learn of forestry when he is compelled to deal with supervisors of forests, forest examiners, forest rangers, forest assistants, forest guards, each of whom may issue different orders and regulations to these helpless wards.

If an Indian needs seed for his garden, he may apply to the farmer of his district, who refers it to the clerk at the agency, who refers it to the superintendent, who refers it to the subsection head at Washington, who refers it to the section chief, who refers it to the field supervisor, who refers it to the field inspector, who refers it to the superintendent of the agency, who refers it to the clerk, who refers it to the farmer. The farmer makes a complete investigation and reports that the Indian might possibly use the seed to advantage if the cost is reimbursed out of his crop. That report goes up the spiral stairway and back again until it reaches the agency office.

The superintendent orders his clerk to get the seed to the Indian. The clerk orders an Indian messenger boy to deliver the package. The boy can pass it no further down the line. He kicks his dog and sullenly delivers the seed to the Indian, whose garden is buried beneath the snows of winter.

On page 196 of the hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill for the year 1923, Assistant Commissioner Meritt explains that the bureau uses Indian labor and Indian boys in the construction and repair of agency buildings. He states that they make good carpenters, stonemasons, and painters when they have a leader. But here is the pencil of light pointing at the system. Mr. Meritt says:

> We put up a building at a cost to the Government of $5,000 ordinarily, that if constructed outside by a private individual would cost $20,000 or $25,000, because we are not required to pay for labor. It is a part of the training of the boys.

Great credit is taken for this cheap construction, but nothing could show more clearly the utter misconception of the true purpose of the bureau. The bureau does not secure its right to exist because it can erect reservation buildings cheaply through involuntary servitude. The bureau was really established to help the Indians become self-supporting, self-respecting citizens. Self-respect comes from an honest day's pay for an honest day's work. If these Indians make "good carpenters, stonemasons, and painters," they are entitled to the pay due for their labors.

Mr. Chairman, it would be far better to build self-respecting American manhood than to build reservation buildings without labor costs.

It would be far better to abolish the bureau than to abolish the opportunities for these human beings to get what they earn by faithful, constructive service.

W. H. Gibbs, formerly inspector in the Indian Service, who resigned because of this refusal on the part of the bureau to give the Indian a fair chance, said:

> Entering the Indian Service in the belief that the bureau was designed and conducted as a benefaction to the race, I am leaving it convinced that it is the Indian Old Man of the Sea, who will try to cling to his neck in a strangle hold forever.

Mr. Chairman, the money spent to keep these Indians under a guardhouse system works a deadly injury to the Indians themselves.

Would anyone advocate the reservation and agency system for the immigrants who come here from foreign lands? Would anyone propose to resurrect the freedman's bureau and put all negroes under a bureaucracy? Then, why continue to pay out millions in order that the Indians may be segregated, supervised, and schooled on reservations remote from contact with American life?

All we need is a very small fraction of the faith of William Penn, whose treaty with the Indians 240 years ago was kept inviolate. From the day that treaty was made to the death of William Penn not a white man in Penn's woodlands was killed by an Indian nor was an Indian killed by a white man. Voltaire says it was the only treaty never sworn to and never broken.

Why was it that when other colonies were suffering from Indian wars Pennsylvania was free from every menace? Why was it that for generations the Indian tribes revered and protected the followers of William Penn?

There was but one reason. William Penn treated the Indians as men entitled to every human right. Even when wilderness was king and the Indians were the product of savage environment this statesman did not fear to deal with them as equals.

To the Indians gathered under the great elm he said:

> The Great Spirit who rules the heavens and earth and who knows the inmost thoughts of man knows that we have a hearty desire to live in peace and friendship with you and to serve you to the utmost of our power.

That was a splendid sentiment, but, of course, it was utterly worthless unless translated into action. The Indian Bureau also prates about friendship for the Indian and desiring to serve him.

But William Penn was not trying to exploit the Indians. His treaty recited that the Indians were not to be molested in their lawful pursuits, even in the territory they had sold. They were to have the same liberty to do all things relating to the improvement of their lands and the support of their families that the English had.

That was the secret of the strength of William Penn's treaty. The Indian was treated as a man, not a serf.

> I will not compare our friendship to a chain—

Said William Penn—

> for the rain might rust it or a tree fall and break it, but I shall consider you as the same flesh and blood with us and the same as if one man's body were to be divided into two parts.

"Equal rights" was the motto of William Penn, and how successful it proved. "All paths shall be open and free to both Christian and Indian" ran the treaty. Is it any wonder that such a league of friendship was kept bright and clean without a spot and was held firm to the third and fourth generation of those who made it?

This great treaty was made with an Indian council. Penn was enthusiastic for such a plan of action. In a letter written in 1683 to friends in England he said:

> Every king has his council, and that consists of all the old and wise men of his nation. Nothing of moment is undertaken, be it war, peace, selling of land, or traffic, without advising with them, and, what is more, with the young men, too.

William Penn took steps to enforce his views. Not a settler could come to Pennsylvania unless he subscribed to the conditions.

> No man shall by any ways or means, in word or deed, wrong any Indian but shall incur the same penalty of the law as if he had committed it against his fellow planters.

If an Indian wronged a planter, the white man was not permitted to be his own judge upon the Indian, but must bring his case before the courts for determination. As long as any of these Indians lived in Pennsylvania they would assemble in some spot as nearly as possible like that where they met their friend. There they would lay the speeches of William Penn upon a blanket and with great satisfaction review the proceedings of the great treaty.

Even when exiled from the lands of their ancestors, these Indians taught their children the name of the friend, William Penn, who a century and a half before had treated them as human beings.

William Penn believed that in all ages—

> Every human heart is human;
> That in even savage bosoms
> There are longings, yearnings, strivings
> For the good they comprehend not;
> That the feeble hands and helpless,
> Groping blindly in the darkness,
> Touch God's right hand in that darkness
> And are lifted up and strengthened.

William Penn had the sense of the brotherhood of mankind. The Indian Bureau is built on the false assumption that the Indians are inferior beings, possessed of no rights which bureau employees should recognize. In my estimation that belief and policy degrades these self-styled superiors more than their despised fellow creatures.

Mr. Chairman, the Indian problem will disappear when the Indian is treated as a man. The great difficulty is that some 5,000 persons look upon the Indian question as their official pasture, where they graze at governmental expense.

They have "helped" the Indians until he is now helpless. It is time to give the Indian the property to which he is entitled and then let him shift for himself. Some of them will fail, but that is the fate of some white men, too, in the race of life. Better that than slavery.

But as a matter of fact, the vast majority of Indians, thrown on their own resources, will make good. They will find work and do it. Fewer employees will be on the bureau pay roll, but more Indians will be civilized.

Abraham Lincoln, in a message to Congress in 1864, said:

> I submit for your special consideration whether our Indian system shall not be remodeled. Many wise and good men have impressed me that this can be profitably done.

Sixty years have passed since that recommendation. The Indian Bureau, which then was beginning to show its possibilities for evil power, has become a Frankenstein creation. For every reason that Lincoln had for remodeling the system there are ten thousand now. In 60 years there has been a multiplication of taxes and expenditures. The solution is simply the old-time command, "Let this people go." All Indians born within the limits of the United States should be declared citizens and entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens.

Every reservation should be allotted to the Indians so that each may have his individual homestead. The tribal property should be divided. Minors and incompetents should be treated exactly as are similar persons of the white race, their property administered in the courts of the States.

There should be arrangements for a final accounting by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at a certain fixed date. Each Indian tribe should be permitted to act through its freely elected council and a final settlement made, so that in all the future these original Americans shall be members of America.

Mr. Chairman, the Indian Bureau system is a wastrel, profligate beyond description. It wastes every year millions of dollars collected from American taxpayers and millions more abstracted from the possessions of the Indians themselves. It wastes still other millions which would accrue from this untaxed Indian wealth once it was Americanized. It wastes the self-respect of a race and the possibilities of a proud people. It wastes material resources by inefficiency and spiritual resources by dependency and pauperism. It wastes the confidence of the Indians by setting up decoys that lead them to their doom. It wastes their labor by setting them at futile tasks which have no value in American civilization. It wastes their youth in segregated schools which perpetuate tribalism. It wastes their maturity by keeping them in wigwam and tepee and making them aliens in the land of their fathers. It wastes money and manhood, character and citizenship, and conserves only idleness and ignorance and vice.

In this day of conservation, it is time to stop this waste. In this day when overburdened taxpayers are praying for economy it is time to save money whose expenditure works injury to the American Indian and the American public alike.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a very great deal of interest to the very earnest speech of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]. I think perhaps it is well to have a speech of that sort made occasionally in regard to the Indian appropriations, or in regard to any other appropriations. I think a speech of that kind calling attention, with possibly a little exaggeration, to some of the evils that necessarily and unavoidably creep into Government operations is a good thing, and yet I think the gentleman himself, who knows a good deal about Indians and the Indian question, although he has not lived among the red men, I imagine, very much, would scarcely subscribe to some of the suggestions that were made by some of those he quoted.

The Indian problem is a very great one and has been from the beginning of white settlement in America. In so far as we have erred in the management, development, and settlement of that problem, I think we have erred in generosity, in doing too much rather than doing too little. I have very little patience with those who constantly and continuously wail about the alleged frauds against the Indians and constantly assert that we have not performed our duty toward them. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we have overcoddled the Indians. We have unwisely undertaken some development of his land that should not have been undertaken. It has all been done out of a spirit of generosity and out of a desire to do our duty to those people who are the wards of the Government. But I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania will agree that we can scarcely turn the red man adrift. It is a long, long, weary, trying road from barbarism to civilization, and even those red men who were most advanced when our forefathers found them here had a long and weary road to travel to reach the goal of the white man's civilization. Many of them have not reached it yet. We are trying to civilize the Indian by moral suasion—that is, trying to give him our kind of civilization. That civilization is based on work, hard work, self-sacrifice. He is not given to exertion or self-sacrifice except in the chase and in war.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Right there will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment.

And it takes a long time for him to learn the lessons of self-sacrifice, of self-control, and of thought for the future, of work, of effort.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states that civilization is based on hard work and effort?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is it not rather based on contact with civilization? And by keeping Indians on reservations we are keeping them from civilization?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is confusing a fact with a method. I agree with the gentleman that one of the best ways to civilize a man is to bring him in close contact with civilization. That is one reason why I have been in favor of allowing the Indian on the unopened reservation to sell his surplus land or to sell the lands of his deceased ancestors in order that white settlers may be brought onto the reservation, and in order that he may secure the benefit of contact with those white settlers. We should constantly reduce the number of Indians over whom we exercise supervision. But that separation of the Indian from Government supervision can not and must not be done hurriedly, without thought, care, and preparation. It is all very well to talk about putting these men not accustomed to the ways of civilization on their own feet and compelling them to make their way among white men. That all sounds very well, but our experience has been that in many cases where we have attempted to do that the Indian has become a pauper. His condition has grown infinitely worse instead of better. And yet we should just as rapidly as possible, and through the best methods that experience justifies, place the Indian in a position of self-support, of self-respect, and of independence. But it must be done with reason. It must be done with judgment. It must be done with intelligence. We have no greater problem before us than that. For quite a number of years and under several Commissioners of Indian Affairs we were gradually passing their lands to the Indians in individual ownership and control. We were reducing the reservations. We were reducing the number of Indians with whom we had official contact. That was the proper procedure. Then under commissioners in the last administration we reversed that policy, unwisely, in my opinion, and at least one commissioner seemed delighted to go afield and find men in Texas, in Georgia and in Florida, and possibly in Maine, who had some little Indian blood whom he could bring under the Government's tent. It was all wrong. It was all a mistake.

There are some items in this bill that are here by reason of that reversal of policy. We should return, we are returning, we have returned, under the present management of the Indian Office, as I understand it, to the policy of gradually putting the Indian on his feet and placing him in a position where he can care for himself. But it is still a tedious procedure, and it must be pursued with very great care and with full knowledge of the very great responsibility we have upon us.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Before I yield I want to pay a tribute to the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, well known to the membership of this House, a man who served here with very great credit for many years.

I believe he is the best Commissioner of Indian Affairs we have ever had, and I believe that under his management we will have the development of a policy which my friend from Pennsylvania would, I think, in the main approve; a policy under which we shall gradually and as rapidly as we may with safety, having due regard for the interest of the Indian, remove him from governmental restrictions and place him upon his own feet when we are sure that he will be able to stand and maintain himself.

Now I yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am disappointed, I will say to the gentleman, by the fact that there is over a million dollars' increase in this bill over last year.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the fact of an increased appropriation necessarily proves an extension of the bureau's activity. Such an increase may be necessary to the development of the policy of gradually making the Indian self-reliant and self-supporting.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have one minute more?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. We might for a year, or even for a series of years, increase the appropriations and still be steadily following the policy of gradually reducing the number of Government wards and limiting the Federal control over them.

I do not know the character of the items by which the bill is increased. I do agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that a great mistake was made in attempting to irrigate on an extensive scale the lands of the Blackfeet Indians, for instance. I know that territory very well. I know that it was very unwise to attempt that irrigation on a large, expensive scale. And yet there were many people, locally and friends of the Indians generally, who were as insistent in regard to that expenditure as men ever were for any good cause in the world.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. As I recall, the Blackfeet appropriation is reimbursable from tribal funds.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; if there ever are any tribal funds. But even assuming that is so, we should lay no obligation on these Indians for ditches that may never be used for irrigation development that is not practicable, where the end does not justify the expenditure, because we assume that the lands over which these ditches are built are some time in the distant future to pay the obligation. They probably never will. We shall be very fortunate, indeed, if we can care for the Blackfeet Tribe as we should care for them with the resources that can be secured from their property without any very large lien upon it for irrigation purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss for a little while two matters relating to taxation. The first one has arisen within the last two or three days. Last June we passed through the House a bill increasing the right of States as to the taxation of national banks, authorizing them where they desired to be progressive and to impose income taxes instead of property taxes to tax the income of national banks instead of a property tax on the stock of national banks, provided they did not tax them at a higher rate than they taxed the income from other securities. In another body in the last day or two there has been considerable criticism by a distinguished citizen, acceded to by another distinguished citizen, of the fact that the House did not do anything for the people in that legislation. One citizen makes the statement that we now can only tax national-bank stock as we tax other ordinary citizens; that formerly we could tax stock the same as we could other competing capital, and not higher, but that now, under recent decisions, we can only tax it the same as we tax the property of ordinary individuals invested in choses in action and in other investments, and that it has caused great trouble in the State of New York. And he puts in an interview with Mayor Hylan, in which he threatens to go to jail because of the decision of the court of New York. Another gentleman arises in such other body and says that Massachusetts is in the same fix.

Now, what is the truth about it? The statement made in the other body that we are not now confined to taxing the national banks at the same rate as applied to competing capital refers to the decision of the New York Court of Appeals on the very question in which the full court says, "The taxing of national bank shares must not discriminate in favor of capital entering into competition with national banks." It says:

> The tax on national-bank shares must not discriminate in favor of moneyed capital entering into competition with the national banks. The court below has found that the competing capital in the hands of individuals, subject only to the personal property income tax, is very large.
> If the principle of substantial equality of taxation under State authority, as between capital so invested and other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens however invested, operates to disturb the peculiar policy of some of the States in respect of revenue derived from taxation, the remedy therefor is with another department of the Government and does not belong to this court.

The act which was passed by this House says that bank stock must not be taxed at a higher rate than other competing capital, and yet we have these distinguished men criticizing the House because it did not take care of them in that very way.

What was the situation in New York? The situation is found by the court in New York that the ordinary individuals—those put into a class by these distinguished gentlemen as ordinary individuals—with whom we had to equalize the national banks, operated with $200,000,000 capital in banking in the city of New York, and these are given as the names of ordinary individuals. They are J. P. Morgan & Co.; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; H. W. Seligman; Hallgarten & Co.; Lodenbury, Thalman & Co.; Goldman, Sacks & Co.; Blair & Co.; and others. These are the ordinary individuals, with $200,000,000 that come in competition with the banks. Under the law the national banks were taxed $1,000 on every hundred thousand dollars, while these ordinary individuals were taxed not exceeding $300—less than one-third. Yet complaint is made that we are destroying the rights of the States because we do not allow the States to enact legislation to kill national banks, which, by the way, was prepared, I am informed, by the tax association, at that time presided over by the distinguished Member of this House from New York [Mr. MILLS].

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts in another body says that Massachusetts is in the same fix. Let us see about Massachusetts. Massachusetts's own member of the Banking and Currency Committee admitted that the national banks in Massachusetts in 1921 paid $2,999,000 in taxes, but if they had been taxed on the same basis that Lee Higinson & Co., Kidder, Peabody & Co., and other international bankers that occupied the same business relations in Boston that Morgan & Co. did in New York they would be taxed only $490,000.

And yet they say in criticism that the House of Representatives went ahead and refused to give authority to continue the tremendous preference to these people. We did refuse to help them perpetuate this outrageous discrimination against the banks that are the very foundation of our reserve banks.

That is all I have to say about that feature of taxation. The record of the House of Representatives is one of fairness. I was on the committee that prepared it, and there is no escape from the logical conclusion reached as to what legislation was needed.

Now, I want to discuss for a little while the proposed constitutional amendment as to the taxing of State securities. What is the proposition? What do we propose to do? In the first place we want to look for a minute at the terms of the proposed amendment. That is the first thing to consider. You will notice that it says:

> The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of any State but without discrimination against income derived from such securities and in favor of income derived from securities issued after the ratification of this article by or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

Notice it uses the same term—

> By or under the authority of the United States or any other State.

The contention was made here the other day that that applied also to the taxation of railroad bonds or any other kind of bonds that are issued by railroad companies organized under the authority of the State. I do not know where the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] got his authority, but that was his contention. You will notice that the same term is used. You are to tax the securities issued by or under the authority of the States. You must not, in doing so, discriminate against the securities issued by or under the authority of the United States or any other State. Therefore we must conclude that the term "by or under the authority" refers to the same securities in these instances, to use the identical term; and there being no reason why there should be conferred upon the United States the power to tax railroad securities, for instance, because they happen to be issued by a corporation organized by the State, there is absolutely no sense in putting it into the first, and therefore there can not be any use for concluding that the same term used in the second sentence means anything other than that which it means in the first. Therefore I conclude that the term means that the United States can tax it, but that it can not, in so taxing, discriminate in favor of the United States securities, which are not taxable now, and can not discriminate in favor of these securities which are not taxable now, and it has no reference in the world to any other class of securities, because they are all taxed at the present time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That matter was all gone over very carefully by the committee when this amendment was prepared. The United States, in addition to its own securities, has other securities issued under its authority—issued by or under the authority of the United States, which are not taxable.

Mr. STEVENSON. I submit that the gentleman should not take up my time in stating that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And that is contrary to what the gentleman said.

Mr. STEVENSON. Not at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Those securities stand in just exactly the same light as the corporation securities.

Mr. STEVENSON. What are the securities?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Bonds of the War Finance Corporation, bonds of the farm loan banks, and other bonds that perhaps I may not think of at this time.

Mr. STEVENSON. I was not differentiating as to those. I can not give my friend any more time. He can get time from his own side.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is not fair in so doing. I have not quite concluded.

Mr. STEVENSON. But I have not much time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This has all been gone over by the Treasury authorities. The legal authorities there believe that this applies to corporation securities.

Mr. STEVENSON. What corporation securities?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All corporation securities under the authority of the State and under the authority of the United States.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman contend that it applies to railroad corporations, where the railroad is incorporated by the State?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is not the slightest question about that.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is his position?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is my position and, so far as I know, the position of every other attorney.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I would like the gentleman from Iowa to get from the hearings or to get a letter from the legal department of the Treasury a statement that this is their interpretation of the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have such a letter from the Treasury Department, addressed to me, and I shall put it into the RECORD at the proper time.

Mr. STEVENSON. If that is the intention, then the United States Government can only tax income from railroad securities as it taxes income from the securities of the city of Alexandria, under this proposition that is put there. I do not concede that that is the case, but let us suppose it is. Then there is another proposition which has come forward, and that is this, that the amendment will enable the United States Government for the next 20 years to tax State and farm-loan bonds, because we have it now admitted that that is intended—and I supposed it was—to tax them, and yet not let a State have a single dollar of tax out of a United States security. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] said the other day that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] said the United States would not owe any debts, and that that was a mistake, that the United States would always owe debts. The gentleman from Texas did not say that. The gentleman said that in all probability for 20 years the United States would not issue any new bonds. That being the case, there is nothing to prevent the United States from taxing the bonds of States at such a high rate as to absolutely put an incubus upon them; and that is the proposition the gentleman from Texas made, and which I reiterate—and I do reiterate—that the purpose of this is twofold.

It is, first, to burden the States and tax out of existence the power of the States in their operations. The President himself says tax-exempt securities are drying up the sources of Federal taxation and are encouraging unproductive expenditures by the municipalities. He further says:

> There is more than the menace in mounting public debt, there is the dissipation of capital which should be made available to the needs of productive industry. The proposed amendment will place the State and Federal Governments and all political subdivisions on an exact equality and will correct the growing menace of public borrowing, which if left unchecked may soon threaten the stability of our institutions.

The necessity for this amendment, if there were any, has certainly not been demonstrated by the facts which have been stated. Mr. Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, says that there is probably a billion dollars of additional indebtedness being issued every year. Let us see about that. The income of the United States is $50,000,000,000; in 1920, $23,700,000,000 was taxable income, as against $6,300,000,000 taxable in 1916, 300 per cent increase in four years. If the States and counties are issuing a billion dollars additional a year, what effect does it have? Two per cent only of the income of the United States will absorb the whole business, or 4 per cent of the taxable income. Does that make a great shelter for all of the great income-tax payers or show a drying up of the sources of supply—$17,400,000,000 increase in taxable incomes in four years? But I do not accept the proposition that there is a billion being issued every year. There has been no adequate evidence of it. There is less than $11,000,000,000 outstanding now, and the States and municipalities have been issuing bonds ever since long before the Civil War. But suppose you cut it off at the Civil War, and suppose there was a clean slate. For 55 years we have had issued only $11,000,000,000; in other words, $200,000,000 a year, and that is the average. I do not believe it has been accelerated five times within the last two or three years.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall have to be excused.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has misstated what the Secretary said.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall get what the Secretary said.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He said it was increasing at the rate of a billion dollars a year.

Mr. STEVENSON. The statement is made by Mr. Mellon and all of you, and that is what he says, that the tax-exempt securities are increasing at the rate of a billion dollars a year; that many more are being issued every year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; that many more outstanding.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the same thing. If it is increasing at the rate of a billion dollars a year, they have to be issued in order to be there, and if there is only a billion increase a year, there is only a billion dollars issued a year as a new debt, and that which retires old debts is no increase.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All right, if the gentleman wants to stand on that statement.

Mr. STEVENSON. I shall stand on my own statement. What effect is it going to have? Take the record of the sale of bonds of the United States—and Mr. MILLS has put in here a table—that are taxable and those that are not. You will find that the Secretary of the Treasury's report contains that statement. But let us take United States bonds, nontaxable and taxable. Take for the last two or three weeks, and you will find that the average difference between the return on nontaxable and taxable bonds is from 96 cents to a dollar on every hundred dollars. In other words, people go out on the market to buy United States bonds. They buy a nontaxable bond, and they pay more for it, and get less return. It has been running $3.42 on a hundred dollars. If they buy a taxable bond, they require a higher return. In other words, they pay a lower price. They have been running at about $4.38 on a hundred dollars on taxable bonds. See the market statements every morning in New York and Washington papers where the return on each kind of United States bonds is given.

Well, what does that mean? It means an increase of 1 per cent that they are requiring on account of the taxable feature. All right. Put an increase of 1 per cent on the farm-loan bonds now issued, $300,000,000 a year, making the rate to farmers 7 per cent instead of 6. What will it amount to? Three million dollars the first year. If they go on and do not put out more than $300,000,000 a year, at the end of 10 years, as a burden to be laid on the farmers' backs, there will be $30,000,000 of an annual interest charge added by this taxation; and as the gentleman from Iowa said, that is one of the things that will go on.

Not only that, but you take the States and they will increase. Let me see; $11,000,000,000 are outstanding to-day. They say they are issuing a billion a year, or they are increasing a billion a year. That will be an average. The increased interest charge at 1 per cent will amount to $10,000,000 a year; that is, the increased interest that is put on of 1 per cent. But now you must remember, when you are dealing with the United States securities that are taxed only by the United States, the investor requires a difference of 1 per cent between the taxed and the untaxed bonds. Now, if you will allow the States to tax, where will you land? When the State puts its tax on, you will see they will require 2 per cent, or 1 per cent more, and if they issue one billion a year with 1 per cent additional interest it will be $20,000,000 in 10 years of increased taxation as long as you issue those bonds; and in 20 years, if you do not increase the tax and increase the difference, you would have $2,110,000,000 additional tax levied on the people of this country and collected to pay the interest on bonds because of this tax that you levy, and much of which you will not get because they will hide it out. If you put it at 2 per cent, 1 per cent to care for State tax, it will be $4,220,000,000 in 20 years.

Now, the whole thing about this is that it is boldly proclaimed, and you will see it in the speech of Mr. MACGREGOR, of New York, and in the speech of Mr. MILLS, of New York, and you will see it in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the idea is to stop or greatly decrease the issuance of State and municipal bonds, to tax them out of existence.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The President says it is a menace to the country.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. The President has made the same statement. You may say, "No; you will never tax anything out of existence." I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was here in 1865–66, but you will recall reading that they put on a 10 per cent tax on bank notes paid out by national banks. Over in Arkansas they made a bank pay $160,000 in that way, and it was settled that the tax had to be paid. The United States Supreme Court said this tax is undoubtedly for the purpose of preventing that issue and preventing the States from issuing money, but it is within the power of Congress, and it is not for the court to say that Congress can not tax it out of existence.

Now, in every message and in every speech and document they proclaim that this is for the purpose of putting out of business the matter of issuing securities by and under the authority of the State. Yet they say there will be no danger of taxing them out of existence, when it is the evident purpose in every document that you have.

In the language of the Supreme Court, "Power of Congress to use a tax to destroy can not be questioned." (Bank v. Fenns, 8 Wall. 533.)

Also it says the power to issue free from taxation its securities either by State or Nation free from interference by the other "is an essential element of sovereignty of each." (Pollock v. Fownes L. & T. Co., 157 U. S. 586.)

Now, to come back to the question of the scope of this amendment. What is the object of the proposed legislation? Let us get at its genesis and see. The President in his address to the House on December 8, 1922, made the following statement:

> One year ago I suggested the submission of an amendment so that we may lawfully restrict the issues of tax-exempt securities, and I renew that recommendation now. Tax-exempt securities are drying up the sources of Federal taxation and they are encouraging unproductive and extravagant expenditures by States and municipalities. There is more than the menace in mounting public debt; there is the dissipation of capital which should be made available to the needs of productive industry. The proposed amendment will place the State and Federal Governments and all political subdivisions on an exact equality, and will correct the growing menace of public borrowing, which if left unchecked may soon threaten the stability of our institutions.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his report for 1922 made the following statement:

> A constitutional amendment, satisfactory to the Treasury and approved by the Attorney General, has already been proposed by joint resolution favorably reported to the last session of Congress by the Committee on Ways and Means. This amendment would apply equally and without discrimination to the Federal Government on the one hand and the State and municipal governments on the other hand, and would, in effect, put an end to future issues of tax-exempt securities, making it possible for the Federal Government to tax income from future issues by or under authority of the several States if, as, and to the extent that it taxes future issues of Federal securities, and for the State governments to tax income from future issues of Federal securities if, as, and to the extent that they tax future issues of their own securities. The amendment, which appears in House Joint Resolution 314, reads as follows—

So the idea is that this merely provides for the taxation of incomes from securities heretofore tax free. Now corporate securities, such as railroad securities, are not in the tax-free list. Hence no power is given over them to either the Nation or State, for such power is already possessed. The bonds of the State and their governmental agencies, such as counties, cities, towns, and school districts, are the only bonds affected by the taxation to be imposed hereunder. Such being the case, the words in the first clause, "by or under the authority of any State," must refer to bonds heretofore tax free. Then the same clause in the latter part of the section, "by or under the authority of the United States or any other State," must refer to the same class of securities, to wit, issues of State or governmental agencies heretofore nontaxable.

When the same phrase is used twice in the same statute the same construction should be used in both. In the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in United States v. Central Pacific Railway Co. (118 U. S. p. 240), referring to a similar repetition of language in two statutes referring to the same thing, "we must give the same meaning to like expressions in both."

The Supreme Court of Ohio says that where the same words are used twice in the same section that it is a fundamental rule of construction that if in one case the meaning is clear and in the other obscure, the meaning where it is clear controls both.

Rhodes v. Weldy (46 Ohio St. 242):

> A word or phrase repeated in a statute will bear the same meaning throughout the statute unless a different intention appears.

Sutherland on statutory construction, section 399, cites many decisions. Certainly nothing appears to show a different meaning between the words "issued by or under authority of" in the two clauses of section 1. The first certainly refers to securities issued by States and their agencies not now subject to taxation, and the second must refer to securities of the United States and "other" States likewise now exempt. If not, and if it refers to railroad securities, why insert the word "other" before State at the end? It thus provides that in taxing State bonds the United States can not discriminate against bonds of other States which are rendered taxable by this amendment and can not refer to the mass of bonds of private corporations which were always taxable and are not affected by this amendment. These bonds are set off in a class to themselves in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S. 583) to such an extent that the sixteenth amendment, giving authority to tax incomes "from whatever source derived," was held not to involve this class in the Gore case (Evans v. Gore, 253 U. S., p. 246). But Mr. GREEN, author of the amendment, says he and the committee agree that the words "issued by or under the authority of, and so forth," embrace all railroad bonds issued by virtue of authority conferred on a railroad corporation by a State or Nation. If that be so, then the United States can not tax income from railroad bonds or any other kind of bonds at a higher rate than it taxes State bond incomes. If that is the joker, it means a drive by the holders of millions of railroad bonds to get under cover with their income. Naturally a low rate will be contended for by everybody on incomes from State issues, and it must not discriminate against the income from railroad bonds issued by or under authority of "any State"; hence it makes a low rate for railroad bonds. Is this an explanation of the activity of some of the railroad magnates for this bill? Taking the words "under and by authority of" throughout the whole amendment to refer to corporate bonds of private as well as public corporations, it will prevent any higher rate being put on one class than the other.

The first paragraph allows the United States to tax State securities, which includes, according to Mr. GREEN of Iowa, railroad securities, and provides that they, the railroad securities, shall not be discriminated against in favor of United States securities or any other State securities. It simply brings railroad securities in under the protecting wing of United States securities and State securities.

I do not believe the court would construe it that way, but Mr. GREEN of Iowa does, and he says everybody connected with passing it does also, and, if so, then it is building a shelter for holders of railroad bonds. Every railroad mortgage in this country would be foreclosed and the new bonds issued after this amendment is adopted, and all of them come under its terms and stand on the same rate of income taxation as the State and Government bonds.

I warn the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that his construction of this amendment is not final. The sixteenth amendment was supposed to cover every kind of income, and so distinguished a man as Governor Hughes, of New York, so construed it in transmitting it to the legislature, but the Supreme Court in Evans against Gore made that theory look like "two bits."

Now, where do the States come in under the amendment? They can tax their own securities now. Why do not they? Because (a) it increases their interest charge, and (b) in most States they get no tax because all the bonds practically are owned in centers of capital and the State can only get tax on those held by residents. It pays the higher rate and gets nothing in return.

The following statement from Evans v. Gore (253 U. S. pp. 255–256) might well be pondered by the people before adopting this:

> When we consider what was done in those cases—

Referring to cases holding securities of States and their governmental agencies exempt—> what is comprehended in the congressional power to tax, it becomes additionally manifest that the prohibition now under discussion was intended to embrace any diminution through the exertion of that power, for, as this court has repeatedly held, the power to tax carries with it the power to embarrass and destroy; may be applied to every object within its range in such measure as Congress may determine; enables that body to select one calling and omit another; to tax one class of property and forbear to tax another; and may be applied in different ways to different objects so long as there is geographical uniformity in the duties, excises, and imposts imposed.

I ask again if this is a device to make secure the place of railroad and other corporate bonds under provision that they can not be discriminated against in favor of income from the United States, and if it is the power to select one and leave another that this proposed amendment is intended to limit? If passed, could a tax be laid on the income of a railroad bond if none were imposed on United States bonds? Mr. GREEN'S construction would lead to the negative answer. The first section, as construed by him and written out, would read:

> The United States shall have power to lay and collect taxes on income derived from State, county, municipal, and school district, and railroad and other corporate bonds issued under authority of any State, but without discrimination against such State and railroad bonds, etc., and in favor of income on any like bonds issued by or under authority of the United States or any State.

Hence, if only normal tax is levied on United States bonds, only normal tax can be levied on railroad bonds, and so forth.

This will be a shelter for railroad and other corporate bonds if that view is sustained by the courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I want to pay my respects to the able Secretary of the Interior and to the different heads of the bureaus under him and say that I believe that department of our Government is being administered with great efficiency and ability. I am sorry I shall not have time to discuss the work of the various branches of this department with something of thoroughness. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] a few minutes ago discussed at some length the Indian Bureau. During the consideration of the bill I shall refer to particular features of his criticism. At this time, however, I wish to refer to the general effect of his criticism of our Indian policy and what we hope to do. For the head of the important Bureau of Indian Affairs I have profound respect. I do not like to make comparisons, but I will say that in my judgment there never was a man who presided over that bureau who surpassed Commissioner Burke in any line, whether in understanding the problems of the bureau or in administration, whether from the standpoint of coming into contact with the wards of the Government on the one hand or presenting his problem to the Congress on the other.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred to the Indian Bureau as one that ought to be wiped out. I think we are all in favor of that, but we are in favor of taking a little more time than he would take in accomplishing this result. The gentleman has referred to the negro problem and how the work of caring for the negroes in something of a similar paternal way following the Civil War was abandoned after a few years' trial. Well and good. It should have been abandoned. But in the Indian problem you have one that is entirely different from the problem that confronted the country at that time. True enough, millions of negroes were transformed from slaves into free men; they were ignorant, and they were without property. But the case of the negro is not the case of the Indian. First of all, the negroes could speak the language of the community where they had lived in a degree that would permit them to get along, earn a livelihood, and do the work they were accustomed to do.

Not so with the Indian. The negroes were accustomed to living in homes, modest it may be, most of them, but at any rate a home, and the system of the home, and the manner of their living, were factors that modified the problem of transition from a status of slavery to one of freemen. But what of the Indian? We are taking the Indians from the time when they were able to roam over a great continent, a population of possibly 400,000, a time when they earned their livelihood not in the field but by their prowess most of all as huntsmen, and we are asking them to compete in a highly organized age among people who themselves are industriously working to bring from the soil that which will support a large population. The negroes at the close of the Civil War were neighbors to the whites, and fairly evenly scattered amongst a large white population. The Indians never were so scattered. They have held together as tribes speaking their own language and following customs and habits different and apart from their white rivals.

I do not assume we have not made mistakes. We have made many blunders. But to suddenly wipe out the Indian Bureau and forget that we have an Indian problem would be the greatest blunder we could now commit. More, it would be a colossal crime.

What is our problem? When I was a boy and lived in what we call the Palouse country, a fine band of Indians called the Nez Perces had been placed upon their tribal lands. These lands were not allotted at that time but they belonged to the tribe. But the lands turned over to the Indians though now supporting thousands of people were not sufficient to support a comparatively small tribe of some 1,500 Indians in the way they had been accustomed to live.

At that time northern Idaho and eastern Washington were not very thickly populated, and while these Indians had their tribal bounds they roamed over areas of hundreds of thousands of acres beyond those tribal bounds for the purpose of hunting and fishing and gathering fruit for their livelihood and for the coming winter. As a boy I remember seeing them go by our home. In the woods I remember seeing bundles or rolls of mesh—sticks woven together by rawhide—upon which they would dry their fruit or their fish, and then roll the mesh into a bundle and put it into a place where it could be found the succeeding year—100 or 200 miles from where the Indians lived.

Then white people came in, the country settled up, and it was up to our Government to provide some way to help those Indians, to provide them some way to earn their livelihood. These Indians are not pauper Indians. They never have been. Most of them are not yet good farmers, but they are learning. They can not roam and hunt as they did 25 or 35 years ago; they must earn their support from the lands that were allotted to them when their reservation was opened to settlement nearly 30 years ago.

Another picture: A few years ago I fell into conversation on an eastbound train with one of the brightest Indians I ever met, who told me that he came from the Macaw Tribe of Indians over on Puget Sound. He told me some of the tribal history. He pointed back to about 130 years ago when his tribe had a population of 3,000. He related that through the barter of skins and other products to some Spanish traders for clothing the members of his tribe had become infected with smallpox, and that after the scourge had swept over that Indian tribe only one-tenth of the population remained.

He told me further that that was the first introduction of smallpox into the Northwest, and it reduced other tribes in enormous degree. The Indians in their native state had their medicine men and some helpful herbs, but they have not been able to cope with adjustments of what we call civilization.

If you will take up the reports of the Nez Perce Indians you will find that 50 years ago the medical officers of the Government reported that there was not a single case of tuberculosis among them. If you will take up the reports to-day you will find that notwithstanding as much of the outdoor life as they are able to lead the percentage of tuberculosis among the Indians is as great as it is among the white people, and that it is found in active or latent type among probably 90 per cent of the members of that tribe. We have, then, the problem of health to consider.

The problem of education is another one that we must consider. Twenty-five years ago, when I was a boy in that country, there came back to his home people the first Indian boy who had gone away to the Carlisle School, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] referred. He was regarded in the school as one of the brilliant students, one of the ablest men. Yet in less than six months he had gone back to the ways of the wikiup and was living the life of a blanket Indian, and why? Well, the greatest reason was because he did not have fellows to associate with who had had his experience, who had caught the inspiration of scholarship, and who by meeting and association could help, each the other, to maintain it. To-day, in increasing degree, the Indian students bring with them the ideals and benefits of the educational opportunities that they have had, and they are not so inclined to go back to the wikiup. And why? Companionship. The first boy who returned had not a single associate with whom he could talk over the experiences of his school days amid happy surroundings. He was alone. But when it came about that in another few years 10, 15, or 50 young men had the same experience, they were able to form something of a companionship and were able to maintain more of the standard of what we call civilization.

I raised this question in connection with the hearings on this bill, and I was told by the head of the educational service of the Indian Bureau that this phenomenon to-day is looming large. The report shows that to-day there is a larger school population in the Indian schools than ever before.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. May I have three or four minutes more?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. FRENCH. Not only have we a larger school enrollment than ever before but the children of parents who were given the advantages of school 20 or 30 years ago, even though those parents did not avail themselves much of the ways of the white man's living, are to-day the children readiest in learning in the schools. They not only are the readiest during the first few years, in the beginning of their school work, but all through their school courses they are showing the effects of the training of the parents, although the parents themselves for practical purposes fell back to the life of the tribe.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. If I have the time.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman realize that there are now some 20,000 Indian children of school age who are not in school at all?

Mr. FRENCH. In general figures there are 25,000 Indian children who are not in school, of whom 7,000 are physically unfit to be in school.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I mean outside of that number.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman wants the exact figures and I have them for the last fiscal year. There were 91,968 children of school age, of which number 64,943 were in school, 6,279 ineligible on account of illness or deformity, and 20,746 not in school at all.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. We have provided $200,000 additional for those children in this bill.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] refers to the total amount for the Indian Bureau he will find that nearly half of that, aggregating $5,100,000, is for educational work among the children of the Indians of our country. Surely this great work must not stop.

Nor can our Government immediately withdraw its supervision of Indian property. Indians to-day have property aggregating more than $727,000,000 in value. Many Indians would be as helpless as children in handling their personal estates if left to their own discretion. Some of these Indians want their property turned over to their own disposition as soon as possible. These Indians are spurred on by a horde of sharpers, who would make short shrift of the Indians' burdens. Then what? Well, the next thing many of these Indians would be paupers upon the counties where they live.

No. I am for winding up the affairs of the Indians with the Government as speedily as possible, but sound sense dictates that it will take years of time, patience, and care on our part and the gradual pushing off onto the backs of competent Indians responsibilities that more and more they shall be able to bear.

Another thing, we are paying some attention to irrigation. Gentlemen, we must, whether we like to or not. Water rights are passing away, and unless the Government acts now, Indians will awaken in another 25 years to find that they have land that is desert and no available water with which to irrigate. We must act now if we would protect the interests of our wards in a responsibility that we can not throw aside.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. CARTER. I yield that time to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this appropriation bill provides the funds to carry on all the various activities of the Department of the Interior. That department is in many respects a department of public works, because Congress has placed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior a number of bureaus for whose efficient conduct the best engineering talent and a high degree of constructive ability are required. The United States Reclamation Service has built great reservoirs and canal systems. The Indian Service is likewise engaged in the reclamation of waste lands. The Alaskan Railroad is being constructed and operated under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. The United States Geological Survey is not only making a study of geological formations but also makes topographic maps of great value. The Bureau of Mines is performing a most beneficial work for the mining industry. All of this constructive effort is essential to the welfare of the Nation and Congress should not be niggardly in providing the necessary funds to enable it to be properly prosecuted in the interest of the entire country.

I want to comment briefly on the attitude of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of this bill with respect to the appropriations for the Department of the Interior. Apparently the members of this subcommittee have been profoundly awed by the Director of the Budget. It seems that, in their opinion, the Budget Director is a grand llama whose edicts they must religiously follow. They have not dared, except in but a few minor instances, to suggest any kind of an increase over the amount allowed in the Budget for the maintenance of this great department.

The subcommittee having charge of the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture recently reported a bill which shows that they had a much more independent attitude of mind. That subcommittee reported the Agricultural bill to the House, carrying over $68,000,000, and its action was approved by the House, with only 10 reductions in items authorized by the Budget. These reductions did not amount to anything, except in the appropriations for public roads, the remainder of which will be carried in the next deficiency bill, so that no Federal aid will be lost. But that subcommittee made 10 increases in the Agricultural bill which aggregated $574,700, of which $160,000 was for eradicating the cattle tick and $150,000 for the eradication of the barberry bush.

Now, let us compare this excellent record with that of the subcommittee in charge of the appropriations for the Interior Department. The bill before us contains 67 reductions under the amounts authorized by the Budget, totaling $1,092,000. This subcommittee has made but four increases, three of them out of the Treasury, aggregating $34,400, and one out of Indian tribal funds, amounting to $35,000. Balancing these total increases of but $69,400 against the $574,700 of increases made in the Agricultural bill, am I not justified in saying that this subcommittee did not have either the initiative or the independence which the agricultural subcommittee has conclusively shown that it possessed?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Arizona realize that what he is saying is a splendid tribute to this subcommittee?

Mr. HAYDEN. Upon the contrary, I am paying my tribute to the subcommittee which had in charge the appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, which exercised its own independent judgment. Its members looked into the facts, ascertained what was necessary to be done, and did not hesitate to disagree with the Director of the Budget. They boldly increased essential appropriations, and the House approved of every one of their recommendations. This subcommittee has timidly refused to go beyond the sums stated in the Budget. They were no more responsive to appeals for additional funds than a blank wall. Regardless of the merits of any proposal, if it was not in the sacred Budget it was not to be even considered.

I hope that next year the members of this subcommittee will cultivate a more open mind. It may be that in the rush of a short session of Congress they have not had the time to make independent investigations of the needs of the public service. But I trust that next December they will go outside of the limited data contained in the Budget and see for themselves what is needed. Let the subcommittee exercise its own judgment, because I am sure that the House will have more confidence in any independent conclusions that its Members may reach than we have in the Director of the Budget.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has paid a tribute to the subcommittee by saying that he has more confidence in their opinion than that of the Budget. Of course, he will follow them without question in all the reductions which they have made.

Mr. HAYDEN. I may follow the subcommittee in a great many instances, but what I want the members of the subcommittee to do is to exercise their own mental faculties. I have confidence in them as men and Members of this House. We have reposed a trust in them and I desire that they shall fully exercise the power that has been granted and to do what in their best judgment ought to be done instead of arbitrarily limiting the scope of their authority by an unyielding determination not to go beyond that which has been authorized by the Budget.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE INDIAN SERVICE.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] a few moments ago submitted some remarks on the appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I should like to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that of the $11,000,000 carried in this bill for appropriations out of the Treasury for the Indian Service $5,200,000 is expended for the education of the Indians.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. How does the gentleman know that the $1,977,000 for the general school fund is used for education?

Mr. HAYDEN. Because it is all devoted to that purpose.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is not some of it devoted to and used for stockmen and farmers? It has been used in part for that purpose.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no. The appropriation for the school is a specific appropriation to be used only for schools, and the stockmen and farmers come under another item in the bill—under the industrial appropriations.

Mr. HAYDEN. In addition to the $5,200,000 appropriated for education over $2,000,000 is devoted to Indian irrigation developments of one character or another. So that over $7,000,000 of the $11,000,000 contained in the gratuity appropriations for the Indian Bureau are for these two most useful and civilizing purposes.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has given the House much alleged information about the Indian problem. I would be pleased to know how and where he acquired it, whether by reading what somebody else has written or by talking with somebody who has been on the Indian reservations, or whether he made any investigations for himself?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows where I got most of this information. I sat with him on the Indian Affairs Committee for two years and I have been on the reservations and visited the schools.

Mr. HAYDEN. How many reservations and schools?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. A number of them. I spent several weeks at the Carlisle School and I have been on some of the western reservations.

Mr. HAYDEN. Which Indian reservations?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Crow and the Blackfeet.

Mr. HAYDEN. Those are the only two? The gentleman has personally visited the Carlisle Indian School in Pennsylvania and the Crow and Blackfeet Reservations in Montana?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And for two years I made extensive study with the gentleman on the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, I served with the gentleman on that committee and listened to the testimony of many witnesses, but I want to say to the gentleman that one look is better than a thousand words. If one goes upon the reservations he can see and know the facts, but when some one else tells about the conditions there, without a background of experience, no man can form a mental picture of the situation or reach an accurate understanding of the facts.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman from Arizona will yield to me, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the fact that the farmers are provided for under the industrial item on page 25.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I shall quote a statement by the assistant commissioner where he says that he took out of this education fund a sum for stockmen and farmers.

Mr. HAYDEN. The opinions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are not based on any intimate personal knowledge of actual conditions on the Indian reservations. He confesses that he has been to but one school and to but two reservations. Therefore the conclusions which the gentleman has submitted to this House must not be taken as seriously as though they were based upon information which he had acquired himself. His views are founded upon what somebody else told him. He brings practically nothing but secondhand information. It is hearsay evidence that he has presented to the House. Those of us who have personally visited many Indian reservations, who have seen the Indian school system in actual operation, who know of the good work done in reclamation of lands, and who have observed the conduct of the business of the Indian Service generally, will not confirm the very serious charges made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania against the Indian Bureau.

This bill very properly carries the sum that it does for education, which is almost half of the total of the appropriations for the Indian Bureau. The only way to qualify the rising generation of Indians for citizenship is to send them to Indian schools. The gentleman himself, if he were to visit the reservations in the Southwest, where there are many thousands of non-English-speaking Indians, would be the last one to urge that Congress dispense with the present school system. That would also be true if he actually saw the successful Indian irrigation projects there in operation. He happened to go upon two projects situated in the far north where even white men have not made a success of irrigation and therefore he condemns all irrigation projects in other places. I now yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] made a strong point upon the number of employees that this department has. Has the gentleman any information as to the work that has been accomplished, for instance, under the appropriations for reclamation?

Mr. HAYDEN. I shall be very glad to furnish the gentleman from Utah with any information of that kind that he may desire.

Mr. COLTON. Are there a larger number of employees than is required to do consistently what is being done under the department?

Mr. HAYDEN. My judgment is that if the scale of salaries were higher for positions in the Indian Service there would undoubtedly be more efficiency among the employees. The rates of pay are low and are fixed by a basis which was established a long time ago. So far as the building of irrigation systems or any other constructive work done on the reservations are concerned, I am sure that the Indian Service gets as good results for the money expended as does the Reclamation Service or any other branch of the Government engaged in like public works.

THE SALT RIVER RECLAMATION PROJECT, ARIZONA.

There is a very remarkable statement in the hearings to which I want to direct the attention of the House, in order to correct a serious misapprehension of the facts. I refer to the hearings, where the chairman of this subcommittee questioned the Director of the United States Reclamation Service on the conduct of the affairs of that bureau.

Mr. SNELL. On what page?

Mr. HAYDEN. On page 619. These remarks of the chairman of the subcommittee refer to the Salt River reclamation project in Arizona:

> Mr. CRAMTON. So that, in this case, the Government took all of the chances, put in millions and millions of dollars, loaned the money without interest, gave them 20 years in which to repay it, and then postponed for 10 years the beginning of any payments, and with no interest running; constructed a power project; planned and financed it; made a success of it, and then turned the power project over to the water users in order that they might use the receipts from the power project to pay for the land made tremendously valuable by irrigation?

Then a little later in the hearings the gentleman from Michigan says that the water users under that project might be termed "profiteers."

Complaint is not only made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] but I have heard it made elsewhere, that the Salt River project should have been declared completed much sooner than it was, and reimbursement begun by the water users. That project, instead of being completed in 1910, as the gentleman from Michigan stated in the hearings, was never actually completed by the Reclamation Service. According to the tenth annual report of the Director of the Reclamation Service, the contractor finished work on the Roosevelt Dam on February 5, 1911. On March 10, 1911, the dam was dedicated by President Roosevelt, so that particular feature of the project was completed at that time. The project was officially declared completed, although, in fact, much construction remained to be done, and turned over to the water users on November 1, 1917. Between 1911 and 1917 there is a period of 6 years instead of 10 years, as the gentleman has asserted, wherein there was apparently no repayment to the United States.

But let us look a little further into the financial relations of the Salt River project to the Government. On the 30th of June, 1911, this report of the Director of the Reclamation Service shows that there had been expended on that project $9,878,521. Had the Salt River project been declared completed at that time, that is the sum of money that would have been required to be reimbursed to the United States. But it was by no means completed, and that is the very good reason why repayments were not commenced. It was not completed in any sense until 1917, and then, as I have said, the project was not finished. At that time the construction expenditures from the reclamation fund had risen to $12,744,222, which was an increase of $2,865,701 over the total construction charge in 1911. This conclusively proves that the gentleman from Michigan was mistaken, because if the Salt River project was completed in 1911, why was it necessary to expend nearly $3,000,000 additional on its construction?

Within that period of six years the Reclamation Service had been collecting rental charges for the use of water, and actually collecting more than it cost to operate and maintain the project. These reports of the Director of the Reclamation Service which I have before me show that between 1911 and 1917 over $1,600,000 was collected from the water users of the Salt River project in excess of what was actually necessary to pay for the cost of delivering water to their lands. So that, according to the records, there was a repayment to the reclamation fund within that six-year period of that sum of money.

If the Salt River project had been declared completed in 1911 and payments had begun under the terms of the reclamation act, 2 per cent for four years and 4 per cent for two years, instead of there being returned to the reclamation fund over $1,600,000, the net repayments would have been $1,580,563. Therefore by not opening the project by a public notice and by collecting excess money on rental contracts from the water users during that six-year period more money was actually returned to the reclamation fund than there would have been if the Salt River project had been declared completed in 1911.

The gentleman from Michigan apparently was not aware of these facts. I am sure that he did not want to intentionally do any injustice to the water users of the Salt River project, but in making such statements he has done them a great wrong. The figures which I have presented clearly show that the water users during that six-year period were not "profiteers" but actually paid more money into the reclamation fund than the reimbursement would have been if the plan about which he now complains had not been adopted.

To read what the gentleman from Michigan has said anyone would conclude that the entire cost of all power developments on the Salt River project had been paid from the reclamation fund, but such is not the fact. The Reclamation Service expended on the hydroelectric plants a little over $2,843,000 prior to 1911. They were not completed and could not produce power in any substantiated amount. They were of practically no value. The project manager stated that no more money could be obtained from the reclamation fund for that purpose, so the water users on the project voluntarily assessed themselves $1,200,000 and completed the power development as planned. Being completed and in operation these power plants have produced a substantial revenue, the benefit of which the project has very properly enjoyed.

The Salt River project was turned over to the water users in November, 1917, but the price fixed in the contract was not the gross construction cost of $12,744,222. It was that sum less the total amount paid in by the water users toward construction, or a net construction charge of $10,548,119, repayable to the reclamation fund in 20 years. That is the amount charged against the project in 1917, but it was not a completed project. Since 1917 the water users have assessed themselves $2,146,000 for additional construction which has been determined to be absolutely necessary.

I am not referring to the operation and maintenance charges. I am not referring to the money that has been raised to pay the $600,000 which has been returned to the reclamation fund. I am referring to such burdens as the assessments levied to the extent of over $400,000 to install pumps and drain out water-logged land. It was necessary to expend $1,500,000 in additions to the power plants, and that was done. Drainage ditches and numerous other works were carried out on the project to complete it. So far as the farmers on the Salt River project are concerned, they have paid out more money from their own pockets than the farmers on any other reclamation project in the United States.

If the gentleman from Michigan will take into consideration the fact that the water users of the Salt River project have borne a great financial burden all the time during the past 10 years, if he will understand that the Government did not hand over to them a completed project, and that they were of necessity compelled to complete it with their own funds, he will not have the temerity to again assert, as he did during the hearings, that they have obtained vast benefits without effort or expense on their part.

I can understand how the gentleman and others who have made similar assertions have fallen into this error. They read the annual reports of the Director of the Reclamation Service and note that over $10,000,000 has been expended by the United States, of which only $600,000 has been repaid, and then jump to the conclusion that the water users of the Salt River project have not done their full duty toward the Government. But let us look at the situation of the individual water user on that project. What he is interested in is not so much how the money is divided after it is collected from him, but the total amount which he has to pay each year.

The last annual report of the United States Reclamation Service shows that during the past three years there has been collected from the water users of the Salt River project in assessments the total sum of $2,246,726, of which $610,717 was paid to the Government for the purpose of reimbursing the reclamation fund for the cost of the construction of the project. It is not a fair statement of the financial relationship between the water users and the Reclamation Service to mention nothing except this $610,000 and to utterly ignore the more than $2,000,000 which these same farmers have also contributed to the improvement of an uncompleted project.

The fact that the water users of the Salt River project have been able to pay these large assessments is conclusive proof that the Salt River project is a financial and economic success. The farmers on that project have suffered the same hardships as the producers of agricultural products elsewhere in the United States due to the great deflation in prices, but under ordinary conditions they can and will bring wealth from the soil sufficient to meet all of their future obligations to the Government.

The results that have thus far been obtained on the Salt River project completely justify a continuation of the reclamation of arid lands as a great national policy. The water users of the Salt River Valley are fully aware of the fact that all of the money which they repay to the reclamation fund is immediately used toward providing water for the irrigation of other lands in the West, where other American citizens are creating homes in what was once a desert. They are anxious to see this good work continue and can be counted upon to do their full share, as they have in the past, toward the accomplishment of this most beneficent purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not understand that the gentleman can reserve any time.

Mr. HAYDEN. I supposed that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who is not present at the moment, might want to use some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves five minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Sixteen minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will ask the Chair to remind me when I have used 14 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the pending bill, which provides for carrying on all the activities of the Department of the Interior, appears for the second time in its present form, the second year in which the present policy has been followed. Naturally the bill carries many items of very great interest to the Members of the House and particularly to Members from the West, and it is easy to see that there can be a wide difference of opinion as to the wisdom of the amounts passed by the committee.

That has been illustrated this morning by the vigorous attack made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] upon the appropriations for the Indian Service, which he characterizes as entirely too large and as amounts which should be wiped out wholly, and, on the other hand, the protest of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] that in many cases we have not gone beyond the figures presented by the Budget Bureau. I want to take a minute in which to say this: It has been the desire of the subcommittee who framed this bill to keep in mind always that there confronts the Treasury of the United States to-day, as much as at any time in the last three or four years and as much as at any time in the history of the Government, the need for absolute economy. It is necessary, as the President pointed out in his message accompanying the Budget, to keep even our expenditures below our receipts. We can not afford now to provide any new taxes, and the only alternative is to see that the appropriations made by this Congress are within the estimated revenues of the Government. And in order to accomplish that purpose of securing the greatest measure of economy with the proper conduct of the Government the Congress a year or two ago organized the Budget Bureau, not as a puppet to be knocked down but as the servant of Congress to aid in carrying into effect its policy of retrenchment.

Having been created for that purpose, and having secured the services of a gentleman as the head of the Budget Bureau, General Lord, who is performing his duty in an admirable and successful way, it is the duty of this subcommittee, and the duty of the House as well, to give their support and indorsement to his work. The aim of the subcommittee has been to supplement the economies that the Budget has recommended, rather than to do away with and defeat the economies that it has indorsed. Hence the occasions where the amounts recommended by the Budget have been increased by the committee have been very rare indeed.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] made a vigorous attack upon the expenditures for the Indians. The Indian problem has been one that has been with the Government for many generations. In fact, since Columbus first touched our shores the problem has been what should be done by the white race with the race that originally owned this continent. It is a problem in the working out of which there have been many mistakes, and it is not the province of the subcommittee to defend all those who have made mistakes. The Congress has created agencies and policies have been adopted, and I think it is safe to say that never in our history has there been any one at the head of the Indian Bureau who has been trying more conscientiously to economize with the money of the people of the country and at the same time to do the utmost for the final working out of this problem than Mr. Burke, who is now Commissioner of Indian Affairs. [Applause.]

The appropriations at present for the Indian Bureau are only about $7,191,000—the gratuity items. Those are items that are not paid for by the Indians and are not reimbursable. The gentleman from Pennsylvania would make us understand that we are making these appropriations mount constantly to greater figures, but in 1920 they were $7,501,095 and in the bill before us they are only $7,191,375. The gratuity items and the reimbursable items total together about $10,000,000. For schools and education the appropriations are between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

Would the gentleman from Pennsylvania have the Government cease to educate the Indian, to make him capable of self-support? For irrigation $2,500,000 is appropriated. Would the gentleman have us try to turn the Indian adrift without industrial preparation? For administration, we appropriate $3,000,000 for caring for several hundred thousand Indians. Medical relief, $370,000. The gentleman's speech carried to its logical conclusion would mean the elimination of that item altogether.

What are we doing with the Indians now? Are we making any progress? Are we adopting any better methods? There are now 43,000 Indians cultivating 900,000 acres of land themselves as against only 20,000, 10 years ago cultivating 550,000 acres.

The number of full-blood Indians has increased from 160,000 in 1912 to 165,000 now. The total property of the Indians amounts to about $1,000,000,000.

The death rate in 1913 was 32 to the thousand and in 1920 only 22 to the thousand. The first hospital that we provided for the Indians was in 1882. Now there are 78 hospitals that treated 20,000 Indians last year.

In 1911, only about 10 years ago, $40,000 was the total appropriation for the health of the Indians. Now it amounts to $370,000.

There are 20,000 Indian children not in the schools. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] says we should wipe out all those schools and turn the Indian children adrift. Yet he complains that there are as many as 20,000 now adrift.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I regret that I can not. I gave the gentleman more time than I reserved for myself. This year there are 3,000 more Indian children in school than there were a year ago, and this bill to which the gentleman objects because it is increased in amount provides for taking care of more of those 20,000 children that are adrift than ever were provided for before. The gentleman protests against this bill as too large, and the only increases in it are for education, to provide more school facilities for the Indians, and for increased irrigation to provide for their industrial preparedness.

As to that irrigation, only those items have been considered that are already under construction and that need to be completed in order to make some use of money heretofore appropriated. Only those projects have been considered either by the Indian Office or by this subcommittee.

Let me say this one word as to the success in educating the Indians. Commissioner Burke says there can not be any question about the benefits of education among the Indians; that that policy is necessary to make them self-supporting. Read his statement in the hearings. Mr. Burke lived for years in the West. He was 10 years in this House, and was head of the Committee on Indian Affairs of which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is now a member, and since he has been Indian Commissioner he has visited practically every school and reservation except those in Oklahoma. He knows what he is talking about. Read his indorsement of the success of education among the Indians. Then if you are not satisfied with that, take the indorsement of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], himself of Indian blood. There is no man in the country better fitted to discuss that subject, and he gives unqualified indorsement to the program of Indian education. [Applause.]

In the few minutes I have I can only touch upon one or two other activities which are provided for in this bill, those which I think most interesting to the House.

The bill also carries the appropriation for pensions. You will be interested to know that 21 years ago our pension roll had the largest number of pensioners upon it of any time in the history of our pension legislation. In 1902 there were 999,446 persons on the pension roll. Still it was not until 1921 that the amount spent for pensions was the greatest, and that was $260,110,747.22. Even that was not the peak, because the Bursum bill that is just about to become a law will cause us to spend next year, in 1924, between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000 for pensions.

The pensioners of the Civil War are particularly close to the hearts of Members of Congress. In 1918 the number of them on the rolls was 591,793. Death has so rapidly cut their ranks that in 1922 they were reduced to 466,075, and they are going at the rate of more than 20,000 a month.

The Patent Office is another activity of the Interior Department. In 1919, three years ago, the total number of patent applications was 62,735. Last year that number was increased to 88,243, 40.6 per cent increase. Applications with reference to designs increased from 2,787 to 5,645, or a 102 per cent increase. Trade-mark applications increased from 8,561 to 17,029, an increase of 99 per cent. Still the showing made before this committee was that the Patent Office, with that tremendous increase in the number of applications and some increase in clerical force, is making gains upon its work of catching up, and the gains are even entirely beyond the increased personnel given to that office.

The Bureau of Education carries only $644,000 in the pending bill, an increase of only $23,000. That bureau touches all of the educational facilities of the country, the millions of school children, and your subcommittee are satisfied that the new Commissioner of Education is a man who has put great judgment and energy into the discharge of the duties of his office and that the money will be well expended.

The question of reclamation is one that is of great interest to the country, particularly to the West. The policy of this committee this year is the same as last year. Its policy was adopted this year by the Budget Office; that is, the policy of making appropriations in such an amount that the people of the West who are interested in these projects can feel sure that the work will be done for which appropriations are made. Before the appropriations were so large an amount the reclamation fund had insufficient money coming in, and hence there was often disappointment and complaint. We are satisfied there will be money enough in the fund for which we are appropriating and that the work here provided for will be carried on.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Very briefly.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. What is the total amount in the fund?

Mr. CRAMTON. The appropration is $12,250,000. In connection with this your committee are fully satisfied of the importance of the reclamation work and of its success; but I want to sound a word of warning to the West represented by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] and others, that they who seek from Congress a great advance in reclamation, who seek money to be appropriated by Congress for this purpose, might better put their reclamation work on a business basis. [Applause.] Let the money that Congress appropriates bear interest if they want to borrow from the Government. Let them borrow the money of the Government at a lower rate of interest than they can get it anywhere else, but let it bear interest, and having borrowed that money let them pay it back at some time.

In connection with that I want to call your attention to one fact. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] spoke about the Salt River project and felt that we had not been entirely fair as to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want only one minute for this. On page 61 of the hearings the Director of Reclamation says there was a dependable water supply available on the Salt River project in 1910, but the first public notice was not given until 1917, seven years thereafter, and no payments became due until such public notice.

And still this chart [pointing] shows that the Salt River project has produced in farm values more than any other reclamation project in the country, including the famous $1.25-a-pound cotton in war-time periods. Here is a representation of the construction cost that has been repaid, less than $1,000,000 on a cost of $10,000,000 to the Government. But the commodities produced run to $81,000,000. Why under heaven's name should not they be paying back to the Government the money to be used for other reclamation projects? The same and probably more could be said of the Uncompahgre project shown down here. There are farm products worth $16,000,000 on a $6,000,000 construction cost, and not one red cent has been paid back into the Treasury.

Now the Alaskan Railroad is included. We have provided for that and its completion of construction and for the deficit estimated in its operation. We feel that the railroad is making a favorable showing under the difficulties it faces, and I regret that the opportunity does not give me time to go into the details, but those will be reached later on in the bill.

The total of the bill provides an expenditure of $294,265,300—a reduction of $2,241,765 under the current year's expenditure and $1,092,000 below the estimate of the Budget. We are glad to have been able to supplement the work of the Budget to that extent and hope to have the indorsement of the House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

SALARIES.

Secretary of the Interior, $12,000; First Assistant Secretary, $5,000; Assistant Secretary, $4,500; chief clerk, who shall be chief executive officer of the department and who may be designated by the Secretary to sign official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary and Assistant Secretaries, $3,500; assistant to the Secretary, $2,750; private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; assistant attorney, $2,500; two special inspectors (whose employment shall be limited to the inspection of offices and the work in the several offices under the control of the department), at $2,500 each; 6 inspectors, at $2,500 each; chief disbursing clerk, $2,500; chiefs of divisions—1 of supplies, $2,250, 1 of appointments, mails, and files, $2,250, and 1 of publications, $2,250; expert accountant, $2,000; clerks—4 at $2,000 each, 12 of class 4, 2 at $1,740 each, 14 of class 3, 20 of class 2, 1 $1,320, 20 of class 1, 1 $1,140, 3 at $1,000 each; returns office clerk, $1,600; female clerk, to be designated by the President, to sign land patents, $1,200; 8 copyists, at $900 each; multigraph operator, $900; assistant multigraph operator, $720; 2 telephone switchboard operators, at $720 each; automobile mechanic, $1,400; chauffeurs—1 $1,080, 8 at $720 each; 12 messengers, at $840 each; 6 assistant messengers, at $720 each; laborers—3 at $660 each, 1 $600; messenger boys—1 $540, 3 at $420 each; 5 packers, at $660 each; clerk to sign, under the direction of the Secretary, in his name and for him his approval of all tribal deeds to allottees and deeds for town lots made and executed according to law for any of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians in the Indian Territory, $1,200; in all, $221,520.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so to inquire about the reduction in the salary of the chief clerk of the Interior Department. I understand there has been a cut of $500 in the pay of Mr. Harvey.

Mr. CRAMTON. The chief clerk has heretofore had $4,000, which included $500 as superintendent of buildings. Last year the custody of the four large buildings of that department was transferred from the Interior to the superintendent of the State, War, and Navy Buildings, and that transfer is to be continued. These duties being no longer incumbent upon Mr. Harvey as superintendent, we felt that the $500 that went with it should be dropped out.

Mr. HAYDEN. How does this salary compare with the salaries of the chief clerks of other departments?

Mr. CRAMTON. The chief clerk of the State Department has $3,000. The chief clerk of the War Department has $4,000. The chief clerk of the Navy Department has $3,000. The chief clerk of the Treasury Department has $4,000. The chief clerk of the Post Office Department has $4,000. The chief clerk of the Department of Justice has $3,500, and the chief clerk of the Agricultural Department has $3,500. The chief clerk of the Department of Commerce has $3,000, and the chief clerk of the Department of Labor has $3,000. There are three departments where the chief clerk has a salary higher than $3,500.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is it not true that in the three departments where the salary is $4,000 the chief clerks have no more important duties or greater responsibilities than in this department? Does it not require the same degree of ability to be the chief clerk of the Interior Department as is required in the War Department, the Treasury Department, and the Post Office Department?

Mr. CRAMTON. The committee felt that $3,500 was in keeping with the ability of the gentleman and the responsibility that he has.

Mr. HAYDEN. The chief clerk of the Interior Department has as responsible a position as that of any other chief clerk. It seems to me to be exceedingly small to make a cut of $500 in a salary which has been paid for many years merely because a very minor duty has been done away with. If it was true that he had been relieved of a large part of his duties that might justify the reduction. But when he has practically the same work and the same responsibilities, I think he should retain the full salary. Where is the place in the bill that this salary is provided for? Apparently it is in line 8, page 2.

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out on line 8, page 2, the figures $3,500 and inserting $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out $3,500 and insert $4,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SOLICITOR.

Salaries: Three members of a board of appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $4,000 each; assistant attorneys—1 $3,000, 2 at $2,750 each, 4 at $2,500 each, 7 at $2,250 each, 11 at $2,000 each; medical expert, $2,000; clerks—1 of class 4, 6 of class 3 (1 of whom shall act as stenographer and 1 of whom shall be a stenographer and typewriter), 3 of class 2, 1 of class 1; copyist, $900; messenger, $840; 3 assistant messengers, at $720 each; in all, $90,950.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that for this office of solicitor in the paragraph just read there is allowed the sum of $90,950. That is in keeping with the rule with regard to almost every department of the Government. They are gradually year after year building up a system of having an enormous force of legal advisers in every bureau of their own department irrespective of access to the legal advice in other departments of the Government and their access to the Department of Justice legal experts, an army of which we have provided. I want to call the chairman's attention to this provision where we provide three members of a board of appeals, at $4,000 each per year, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, which has been carried in the bill heretofore. Just what function does this board of appeals perform? I notice that you passed over this $90,500,000 in the hearings with just a casual observation.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that that has been in the bill for a great many years. These appeals are taken from various bureaus to the Secretary and are mostly Land Office matters, as I now recall.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that in the Land Office a proper appeal is there provided for and they have legal advisers in the Land Office.

Mr. CARTER. When they come here they have the right to appeal to the Secretary, and it goes to the board of appeals. I expect my friend from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] can give better information in relation to this subject than I can.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. For a great many years there has been something of a controversy in the West as to whether or not land disputes should be handled in separate land courts or handled by the registrars and receivers of land offices in the first instance, then with permission of appeal to the commissioner's office, and permission of appeal from there to the Secretary of the Interior. From the decision of the Secretary of the Interior appeal may be made to the Federal courts. There has been a very strong contention on the part of many that this matter of appeal from the registrars and receivers should go direct to some kind of land court, as has been suggested. However, the sentiment in favor of it has not been controlling, and the Congress has not provided the separate land court; but we do have in the Interior Department what might be called two courts. One of them is in connection with the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office——

Mr. BLANTON. That was the point that I called attention to, as I thought the one there sufficient.

Mr. FRENCH. And the other one under the Secretary of the Interior and to which reference is made here. This board is made up of men of very high class, who are thoroughly familiar with the public land laws, and I refer to the public land laws especially, because the bulk of the work that this board has to do arises from the public-land litigations throughout the United States. This board is made up of high-class men, and it helps the department to steer a consistent course touching the patenting of the public domain under the various land laws and the adjudication of rights that arise under the various laws of the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. If I understand the gentleman, he admits that the controversies arise first in the registrar and receiver's office?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, I would say——

Mr. BLANTON. And then they are passed on to the land commissioner's office. There he has a force of legal experts who pass on the controversy, and they decide the matter by affirming or setting aside the award. And they are provided with another appellate court, as it were, in this board of appeals in the Secretary's office?

Mr. COLTON. If the gentleman will permit, it is really the supreme court of the Interior Department.

Mr. BLANTON. We are having too many supreme courts in the various departments of the Government.

Mr. FRENCH. Let me make this suggestion, that while I said that the registrar and receiver are charged with the first responsibility for the most part, there is no controversy. For the most part the entries that are made pass on to final patent and consummation without any controversy.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; and the gentleman is sufficiently familiar with the business of the Public Land Office to know that most of the controversies are settled in the registrar and receivers' office in the first instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Most of these controversies are settled in the first instance in the office of the registrar and receiver, but the ones that fail of settlement there go on up through this system of appeals. There is too much duplication. I take it that we ought to have but one appellate tribunal in this department. The one in the Land Office ought to be sufficient. Then, if we are to permit the parties aggrieved to go to any other court, we ought to force them to carry their appeals to the courts of the land for final adjudication, as is now done in some States, like Texas.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken; they have no rights to go into the courts at all. The disposition of public land is in the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. He can let a man obtain a patent or not. The man can not go to the court and get a patent.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not talking about getting a patent, but about getting a final judgment in a court.

Mr. HAYDEN. Not with respect to the disposition of public lands. That is an administrative function, and the duty devolves on the Secretary of the Interior, and this board of appeals provides the law for the Secretary.

Mr. BLANTON. And after all they have a final supreme arbiter in the gentleman's committee by coming to Congress, and the gentleman from Arizona takes care of them by bringing in special bills, most of which he gets through because he stands up here and fights for them until he does get them through.

The point that I am making is that we are having too many attorneys in every single department of this Government. Besides having numerous legal experts in the Land Office, I call attention to the fact that in the Secretary's office, under this heading of solicitor, we have three persons appointed by the Secretary of the Interior at $4,000 each; assistant attorneys—1 at $3,000, which is the salary of a circuit judge in many of the States, 2 lawyers at $2,750 each, 4 lawyers at $2,500 each, 7 lawyers at $2,250 each, and 11 lawyers at $2,000 each. They are supposed to be legal experts, and many additional ones are provided for other bureaus in this department; and I want to tell you the practice is growing in every single department and bureau of this Government, and if we do not watch out we never will be able to collect enough taxes to pay the expenses of the Government.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. The gentleman would not have the Secretary of the Interior the final arbiter in the Land Office without giving him a legal department to settle the questions?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, certainly he has another legal department in the Land Office.

Mr. COLTON. That is under the supervision of the commissioner.

Mr. BLANTON. How many legal departments do we want? In the gentleman's State, if it is anything like my own, he has a court of appeals and a supreme court, and that is the end of it.

Mr. COLTON. That is it, exactly. The registrar and receivers, of course, may be compared to the justice of the peace court. Then you have your district court.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is in substance the trial court—the register and receivers' office—because all of the facts are developed in the proceedings held in that office. Then they go to the Land Office for review, and there it ought to end.

Mr. COLTON. I think the gentleman is not quite right. The registrar and receiver are not authorized to make final decisions. They make recommendations.

Mr. BLANTON. It is after all really the trial court, because the facts are developed there upon which the whole controversy is to be finally determined.

Mr. COLTON. But they simply act as referees and make recommendations to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so that is really the first course.

Mr. BLANTON. I repeat what I said in the beginning. I believe we are having too many lawyers in most of these bureaus and departments of the Government, and I think the committees ought to watch each bureau every time they frame an appropriation bill. Now in the hearings this whole item of $90,950 was dismissed with just one little careless observation from one member of the committee. He asked one question about this great department of lawyers costing $90,950 of the people's money, and the matter was then dismissed, and the committee passed on to something else. Our committee, I think, ought to watch this legal expert part of all the bureaus in every single bill which they bring in here.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I have already indicated the procedure followed in connection with land matters. I make this further observation, that the registers and receivers are not necessarily lawyers. Oftentimes they are not lawyers, and as the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] said, they act rather in the capacity of referees in obtaining the information upon which the office of Commissioner of the General Land Office acts.

Again, the work of this board of appeals in the Secretary's office does not confine itself altogether to the work of the Land Office. While that is a large part of the work, yet there are many bureaus under the Department of the Interior, and from the best legal advice within these different bureaus appeals are sometimes made. The Patent Office, for instance, is an important one, and the Pension Office is an important one, and the Mining Bureau is an important one. It is true that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is given legal advice and a board to assist him in decisions, yet that board has to do with land matters alone, whereas this board of appeals has to do with appeals taken from the different bureaus on matters upon which the Secretary of the Interior himself must, under the law, pass, and he is charged with this great responsibility.

Let me make this further observation: The board of appeals has so much work to do that until the last few years one of the greatest complaints throughout the West was about the tardiness with which that board was able to pass upon decisions to be made by the office of the Secretary. The department was two or three years behind. The Land Office work was congested in the land offices and congested in the board that was responsible to the Secretary; and your committee is satisfied that just now, although the work is being brought more nearly current than it has been for many years past, it presents such a demand upon the Government in cases that ought to be heard expeditiously that we can not at this time reduce the item.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, my attention was drawn to this item of $68,250 and the language of this paragraph, and it struck me that there is a great plethora of lawyers, composed of clerks and solicitors and assistant attorneys, of which there are 11 at $2,000 each. I have heard a great deal about the skill and the qualifications of lawyers, but I wonder how they are able to employ lawyers at $2,000 each whose advice and legal knowledge is worth anything. I would like if the chairman of the subcommittee would explain, so that we at least understand it better—myself and other members of the committee.

It was stated and admitted by the members of the committee that this department was handling appeals where the evidence was assembled in the Land Office. It looks to me as if it were a duplication of the provision on page 8, under the title of the General Land Office. You will find there an assistant commissioner at $3,500, a chief clerk at $3,000, a chief law clerk at $2,500, and two law clerks at $2,200. It seemed to me that there was a duplication of work, and it is stated there that there are three law examiners under the surveyors general and district land offices—the same identical functions that are said to be performed by the lawyers whose aggregate salaries amount to $68,250 on page 3 under the title of "Office of the solicitor." Is that right? Can the gentleman from Idaho tell us? Is that a duplication?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the committee has tried to guard against duplication, and I am of opinion that there is no duplication of work along the line the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] has suggested. In the bill we carried several items under the heading of assistant attorneys—1 at $3,000, 2 at $2,750, 4 at $2,500, and 7 at $2,250.

The gentleman must know that the more numerous of these classes referred to are lawyers who are qualified largely as clerks, as well as attorneys, who at this time are giving their time essentially to assisting the more responsible attorneys in the department who pass upon the decisions, briefing the decisions, maybe, looking up citations, maybe, briefing citations, it may be, doing work that must fall upon as high a class of attorney clerk as can be employed by the bureau as assistants to the more responsible board of appeals or the more responsible attorneys connected with the office.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there further?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I wanted to say also that these clerks and attorneys are engaged in answering correspondence from Congressmen and from people all over the country, and giving them legal opinions to help them in their private letters.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I think the gentleman is right, absolutely right, on account of some of the things I have had from this department. They must have been written by $2,000 men, or even $1,000 men, because it would seem to me you could not employ any lawyer who had any efficiency or competency who could be guilty of writing such letters. I do not see how you could get a competent lawyer for $2,000, unless he wanted to eke out a little money to assist him through a law school here—at the George Washington University, for example—which would be a commendable thing. But I find myself wondering and still wondering, although it is not strictly pertinent to this subject, how long it would take for one of these $2,000 men to graduate into a $30,000 man with the Shipping Board. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. About five minutes. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

For contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary and the bureaus, offices, and buildings of the department: furniture, carpets, ice, lumber, hardware, dry goods, advertising, telegraphing, street-car fares not exceeding $250, and expressage; for the purchase for the use of the Secretary of the Interior, at a cost not to exceed $5,000, of one passenger-carrying automobile to replace one present passenger-carrying automobile, which may be exchanged or traded in part payment thereof; not exceeding $500 shall be available for the payment of damages caused to private property by department motor vehicles exclusive of those operated by the Government fuel yards; purchase and exchange of motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor trucks, motor cycles, and bicycles, to be used only for official purposes; diagrams, awnings, filing and labor-saving devices; constructing model and other cases and furniture; and other absolutely necessary expenses not hereinbefore provided for, including traveling expenses, fuel and lights, typewriting and labor-saving machines, $79,200.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 3, beginning with line 25, the following language:

For the purchase for the use of the Secretary of the Interior, at a cost not to exceed $5,000, of one passenger-carrying automobile to replace one present passenger-carrying automobile, which may be exchanged or traded in part payment thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 3, line 25, after the semicolon strike out the remainder of line 25, and all of lines 1, 2, and 3, to and including the word "thereof" in line 4, on page 4.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, after the war ceased I was hopeful that we would stop the habit of granting $5,000 automobiles to various of our public officers. I think we ought to quit it. We pay our Cabinet officers $12,000 a year, or $4,500 more than a Representative or Senator gets. Then we grant them these $5,000 cars, and maintenance, and then they draft a civil employee, who draws another salary from the Government, to drive the car for them in many cases. This provision shows conclusively that the Secretary already has a car furnished by the Government. It has not been long since it was bought. If the committee will look it up they will see that it has been used by him only a comparatively short time. Yet this $5,000 is not to buy a new car, but it is just to pay the difference between his present car and a new one in exchange. I have a car, which I had to pay for myself, that I have been using a couple of years. It stands over at the House Office Building every day, out in the weather, and, of course, it was not looking very good. So I took it to the Studebaker Co. down here to see what they would allow me for it in exchange for a new one. They said they could allow me only $500 for it. That is all they would allow me, but I took it to an expert painter and paid him $50, and he painted it for me, and it now looks just as good as a new one and I am going to drive it two more years. I should think maybe the Secretary could have his car painted up, and it would not cost this Government $5,000 more in exchange. I am not picayunish. I believe in fellows spending their own money just as extravagantly as they want to, but I do not think we ought to spend this $5,000 of public money to enable our Secretary of the Interior to exchange his car, when the money comes out of the people's taxes. We ought to quit it. How long are we going to keep it up? It is just a continual increase of the number of officers for whom we allow these cars. I think the time has come when we ought to pin right down and cut them off. Let them furnish their own cars. Let them furnish everything else that other people furnish. Pay them their salaries, but when we pay them their salaries let us stop and not just keep adding these extras year after year. I think it ought to go out.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I will only say that the only thing furnished to the Department of the Interior was an authorization for the department to secure one from the War Department. The statement set forth in the hearings is that when the Interior Department endeavored to obtain the new Cadillac, pursuant to the appropriation act, they were informed that there were no new cars on hand, but that a used limousine could be obtained at Camp Holabird or that a touring car could be had at Camp Jeffersonville, Ind. On delivery of the latter car it was found that it had been used very slightly, but that it is a very old model, paint badly worn, and aged, and that it is such an old type that the wheels, tires, and most of the principal parts are entirely different from the present Cadillac models. Your committee has simply desired to give this Cabinet officer the same courtesy that has been extended to other Cabinet officials.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The list price of a new Cadillac touring car, if I am not mistaken, is now $2,485, delivered. Yet we are proposing to allow the Secretary of the Interior $5,000 cash to use in exchanging his present car for a new one.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 9, noes 11.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the chairman [Mr. CRAMTON] of the subcommittee in charge of this bill made reference in a disparaging manner to the Uncompahgre Valley reclamation project, one of the two Government irrigation projects in my congressional district in the State of Colorado. Referring first to the Salt River project in Arizona, he said:

Here is a representation of the construction cost that has been repaid, less than $1,000,000 on a cost of $10,000,000 to the Government. But the commodities produced run to $81,000,000. Why under heaven's name should not they be paying back to the Government the money to be used for other reclamation projects? The same and probably more could be said of the Uncompahgre project shown down here. There are farm products worth $16,000,000 on a $6,000,000 construction cost, and not one red cent has been paid back into the Treasury.

And at the hearing before this subcommittee some six pages (pages 612 to 618) are given to an examination of Director Davis and an arraignment of the settlers under these two projects for not repaying to the Government the cost of their construction.

I feel that I would be derelict in my duty if I allowed those expressions to remain in the RECORD without a word of explanation. The history of the Uncompahgre Valley project would make several large volumes. Much of it would not be a happy record. I, of course, will not attempt to recite it but I want to mention just a few matters briefly to give some little idea of the viewpoint of the settlers under that project.

The Uncompahgre Valley project is in Montrose and Delta Counties. My home is in the adjoining county of Garfield. I have lived right beside and among those people for nearly 40 years, and I personally know the entire history of that project, and the long years and hard struggles, hardships, privations, and discouraging disappointments of the people under that project ever since it was started, some 15 years ago. I think that reclamation project was the first one started by the Government in the United States. Soon after the United States reclamation law was enacted on June 17, 1902, there was an agitation commenced to induce the Government to create that reclamation project and construct a tunnel 6 miles long through a high mountain, to divert the water from the Gunnison River over into the Uncompahgre Valley. The Gunnison is a large river with an abundance of unappropriated water.

The Uncompahgre Valley at that time was fairly well settled, and the people were fairly prosperous. But there was not sufficient water in the Uncompahgre River to practically irrigate all of that valley, and the settlers desired to have the Government build that large Gunnison tunnel to a capacity of 1,200 cubic feet of water per second of time, and turn it from the Gunnison River into that valley to supplement the water rights which the settlers then had. In other words, give them more water and a better water right.

The Reclamation Service, through their engineers, made a thorough investigation of the project and decided that it was perfectly practical that the tunnel could be built and that vast amount of water furnished to the settlers at a charge or cost of $17 per acre, and promised a maximum cost of not to exceed $25 per acre. That was the original official estimate of the engineers and the official, publicly announced and widely advertised, inducement held out by the Government to the then settlers and also to all prospective settlers. That $25 per acre cost limit was put in the contract. The project was intended to cover about 140,000 acres of land, of which fully 100,000 acres was represented to be good land and practically irrigable under the project.

The Uncompahgre Valley is naturally one of the richest valleys in the world. The land is the finest kind of soil. The climate is as healthful and good as can be found anywhere under the shining sun. The altitude is about the same as Denver, and it is an ideal country for practically all kinds of fruit and agricultural products that can be raised anywhere throughout the Temperate Zone. There is everything there for a thoroughly practical reclamation project. In fact, it is a perfectly legitimate and splendid project. And the people were all delighted to have the Government accept the project and let the contract for the construction of that tunnel.

The first main contract was let to the celebrated contractors, Orman & Crook, who had a wide reputation as being one of the best engineering contracting firms in the country. The senior member, the Hon. James B. Orman, was the governor of our State.

Those contractors encountered all kinds of obstacles—hot water, bad air, more difficult rock formations, and other utterly unlooked for conditions that no one could foretell, and they practically lost the savings of a lifetime trying to build that tunnel, and went completely bankrupt and were compelled to give it up. Thereupon the Reclamation Service took the matter up and undertook to construct the tunnel themselves by employing day labor. That turned out to be a disastrously expensive experiment. In fact, this first project is now required to pay for many expensive governmental experiments that other projects are now getting the benefit of. However, the Government engineers finally, in the fall of 1909, declared the tunnel completed, and President Taft went out there to attend the opening and dedicate the tunnel. The President very kindly accorded me the honor and pleasure of riding with him across the State on his special train to attend that opening. There was a vast crowd of people and the President made one of his memorable, happy, and splendid speeches. And the people were all buoyant, optimistic, hopeful, and happy. But, alas, their illusions were soon dispelled. It first developed that instead of carrying 1,200 or more cubic feet of water per second, the tunnel did not then, and never has since, and will not now, carry 75 per cent of that expected amount of water. And regardless of what anybody may say or figure out theoretically, the actual irrigators under that project have always and do now insist that the tunnel does not carry sufficient water, and that they never have had during the dry seasons the sufficient quantity of water that was promised them.

But that was only the beginning of their disappointments and troubles. There had to be many adjustments made between both the old and the new settlers and the Reclamation Service. Some of the settlers had sufficient water, others had only partly sufficient, while others had none. Consequently there ensued years and years of jangling and bickering back and forth between the settlers and the Government officials as to a fair adjustment of their respective rights and obligations, and the charges that should be imposed and paid for, between the Reclamation Service and the people. There was great delay and trouble in bringing in the older canals and ditches in the valley and unifying the canal systems, and the Government finally decided to buy up most if not all of those old canals, ditches, and laterals.

Moreover, the mere running of the water through the tunnel and turning it from the Gunnison River over into the Uncompahgre Valley was not sufficient, and it became necessary to build two very large, long, and expensive canals and some smaller ones, and the Government undertook that additional construction. And that cost a vast amount more than was expected. The canals ran many miles through gypsum foothills. Gypsum will not hold water and the canals had to be concreted. The reclamation officials used, or permitted to be used, inferior cement that the alkali dissolved, and it all had to be largely rebuilt. That was another lesson to the Reclamation Service that was most awfully expensive and for which these people must now pay. About the 1st of April, 1917, about the time we declared war against Germany, the Reclamation Service announced that on June 1, 1917, they would open up the project and begin to collect construction cost. The settlers vigorously protested and sent a committee of prominent citizens down here to Washington, as is stated by Director Davis in the hearings before the subcommittee. At that time the Reclamation Service intended to open the project on a cost basis of $60 per acre.

That committee demonstrated conclusively to Secretary Lane of the Interior Department, and he very justly decided that the project was not completed or in proper condition to be opened and that the Government had not fulfilled its contract or proper obligations to the settlers, and that there was a large amount of work that the Government should perform before it would be in a position in good faith to require or expect the settlers to commence paying the cost of construction by the 20 annual payments. Secretary Lane conducted an extensive hearing and made a thorough investigation of all the facts and conditions and formally decided that it would not be acting in good faith or fairly, but it would be unconscionable and outrageous to declare that project open until such time as very much further adjustment, development, and construction was accomplished. Those water users under the project and, in fact, everybody else in western Colorado very naturally hoped and believed that that decision of Secretary Lane settled the matter. No one ever dreamed that those settlers would be criticized year in and year out thereafter and their motives impugned, and they bitterly resent these nagging, petty, and utterly unjust accusations and reinvestigations of that matter.

Moreover, the people were in no condition whatever financially to commence paying the construction charges in 1917. It was all they could do to pay—which they were doing and ever since have done—the annual cost of operation and maintenance. The Government has charged and collected from them $80 a year for every cubic foot of that water. Those people have been paying for all the water they have ever received during all of these years, which has been a heavy burden upon many of them most of the time at that rate.

The settlers insisted upon, and made such a complete showing that Secretary Lane decided that it would be at least five years under the then existing conditions, and in view of the difficulty of reclaiming the lands and settling the ditches and canals, before the Government would be warranted in declaring the project completed and open for the payment of construction charges. And, moreover, it would be that long in all probability before the settlers would be in financial position to commence paying the construction charges in addition to their annual operation and maintenance charges. That was the formal decision and official order of Secretary Lane rendered the latter part of May, 1917. No Secretary of the Interior in the history of this Government ever rendered a more honest, or meritorious, or justifiable, or humane, or even absolutely necessary judgment than that decision of Secretary Lane. If he had not so decided, further construction would have ceased. It would have meant confiscation of a very large part of the valley. Many of the settlers would have been compelled to move off the project. It would have been a monstrous wrong; and those two wonderfully rich counties, Delta and Montrose, would have relapsed practically back to where they were before the Reclamation Service was ever heard of. Fortunately Secretary Lane, who was one of the greatest men that this generation has produced in this or any other country, was big enough and broad enough to fully realize that impending disaster, and was honest and courageous enough to prevent it.

I have forgotten the exact amount that had been expended at the time of that extension; but my recollection is that it was something over $5,000,000.

That that extension of time was both necessary and just is proved by the subsequent facts that the Government has expended something over a million dollars on the project and toward completing it since that extension was made in May, 1917.

So at the present time it is correct, as reported in the hearings and by the department, that over $6,700,000 has been expended by the Government, and no part of it has been repaid to the Government. But no fair-minded person who knows the conditions can say that that extension was unjust or unnecessary, or that the Government has been imposed upon in the slightest degree, or that the Government has in reality lost a dollar by reason of that extension. The Government has a blanket lien on that whole valley and holds all that 100,000 acres of rich land as security.

Instead of the Government requiring those settlers to pay $25 an acre, as they originally were promised and agreed to, the charge is now $70 per acre, and Secretary of the Interior Fall has officially fixed that amount as the price that those settlers must pay the Government for whatever amount of water that tunnel will carry. In other words, the Government figures on 100,000 acres of land at $70 an acre, making a total of $7,000,000, and is demanding the first one of the 20-year annual payments. That payment of $1.40 per acre (besides the operation and maintenance charges) was due on the first day of this month. Those people are absolutely and utterly unable to make the first payment at this time and are now appealing for a further extension of time. On the 21st of last September I introduced a bill (H. R. 12780) providing for further extensions of five years more. The Interior Department was opposed to the bill, so I have now joined with the western Senators in support of the McNary bill (S. 4187), giving the Secretary discretionary authority to grant a further extension for two years.

In justice to the Director of the Reclamation Service, Mr. Davis, and the subcommittee that held those hearings, I should say that they all fully realized that the present year has been a most disastrous one to the settlers under that project—not through any fault whatever of the settlers, or lack of water, or through any fault of the Reclamation Service, or of the soil, or season, or the crops, but caused almost entirely by the deplorably inefficient service of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad. A branch or side line of that road is the only railroad there is in that country. They have no other means of shipping out their products, and that branch during the past 10 months has practically failed to function as a railroad. It has been more like the Toonerville Trolley, especially the narrow-gauge section throughout southwestern Colorado. The road has had the shopmen's strike to contend with, and its rolling stock has been very badly run down. But, personally, I feel that the management of the road is so thoroughly incompetent that it amounts to a colossal crime upon that entire valley. As the Governor of the State of Colorado recently wrote to Secretary of the Interior Fall:

> The condition of the people under the Uncompahgre reclamation project is pathetically appalling.

At page 615 of the hearings on this bill, on the 11th of this month, Diretcor Davis said:

> Mr. CRAMTON. But apart from the exceptional financial conditions of this time, is that project an unsuccessful project and one that should not have been developed?
> Mr. DAVIS. Not by any means. It is a project where not only is the production great and successful agriculturally, but I think it is above the average of projects that could be obtained. I was recently there at the request of the people and there is no question but what that project is to-day in one of the worst conditions of any project or any region that I know of in the country; not due to any lack or failure of crops or of the water supply or anything except two items, the lack of price for their products and the lack of transportation; by far the greatest difficulty is the lack of transportation. The reports that were made to me, that appear to me well substantiated, are that the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad has practically collapsed as a means of transportation.

The operation of that railroad this year has been a cold-blooded calamity; in fact, a tragedy. It has utterly failed to furnish cars at the necessary time for the shipment of the fruit and potato crops, and hundreds and hundreds of carloads of the finest peaches, pears, apples, and plums that are grown anywhere in the world were left to rot upon the trees or upon the ground. Fruit and early potatoes and early onions and other summer and early fall perishable produce must be shipped in refrigerator cars. And about half of what cars the road did furnish were box cars and cattle cars, and nearly everything shipped in them was rotted and lost, and the shippers had to pay the freight besides. That valley has a wonderful reputation for a specially fine variety of early potatoes, and they supply the early markets throughout the country before other potatoes come in when they can secure transportation, and 3,000 cars of the finest potatoes in the world are to-day rotting in the ground and not harvested. That has caused financial ruination to hundreds of families. Fully 20 per cent of all the renters abandoned their crops, and the owners of the land were left to harvest them if they cared to do so. The farmers on the project raised an enormous crop of those early potatoes, and the prices were high from August 1 to October 1 and fair up to October 15 this year. And while a few cars were furnished them, they were not furnished promptly or on time or at the proper time, but so irregularly and so uncertain that dealers could not rely upon them, and neither could the farmers, and therefore orders for over 400 carloads of fruit were compelled to be canceled and all that produce rotted. One of the main banks in Montrose suspended with 1,400 depositors. The banks, as everyone knows, very largely advance the money to the farmers to put in their crops, expecting to get their payments when the crops are harvested. And there have been, comparatively speaking, not sufficient crops harvested to anywhere near pay the cost of raising, and there is very little money and widespread loss and deplorable suffering.

A great many people are going to be bankrupt, and the valley has been dealt the most crushing blow in its entire history. And all of this, I repeat, is through no fault of the project or of the Reclamation Service, and certainly through no fault of the settlers. They have worked hard and have raised abundant crops, and have lost them. As everyone knows, this has been a bad year for farmers everywhere, and the prices are low, especially of potatoes; but if refrigerator cars had been furnished at the time the potatoes and fruit had to be shipped a very large part of that could have been sold and hundreds of people saved from ruinous loss. That railroad has for some 10 months been in the hands of a receiver under the control of the Federal court in Denver and the Interstate Commerce Commission here in Washington, and has in that way been practically operated under Government supervision, and that kind of operation, or lack of operation, has been the main outstanding cause of the financial assassination of that valley during the past summer and fall. Besides, there are other serious obstacles that must be considered, and from which the settlers are most justly entitled to and must have relief:

First. The freight rates on that travesty of a railroad are so excessively high that they are almost confiscatory and are prohibitive of practical farming in that valley at this time, and there is no earthly reason why they should not be reduced to such an amount that the farmers can pay. The freight is from 50 to 60 per cent of the selling price, but the farmers might possibly pay even that if they had any decent service and could market their crops.

Second. The high cost of farming in any irrigation district, especially under a Government reclamation project, where the cost per year per acre for water and excessive overhead charges is a very large and heavy burden.

Neither the Federal Farm Loan Board, the Federal reserve banks, nor any other Federal agency will loan these settlers under Government reclamation projects any money at a low rate or any rate of interest as other farmers throughout the United States can secure. The Government will not loan these settlers money upon any conditions whatever, so that they are deprived of all possibility of making necessary farm developments not only by the outrageous and infamous transportation situation but by the excessive high cost of the project and unreasonably high overhead cost, but are even denied the privilege of getting any Federal money to make developments. The Federal Farm Loan and War Finance Boards and all other Federal functions are an utter delusion, a mockery, and a sham, so far as these very needy people are concerned. In other words, the Government ties their hands with these insurmountable obstacles and then demands payments when there is no human possibility of making payments under the conditions that now prevail under that project.

The interest rate both on real estate and all other property is so exorbitantly high that it is almost prohibitive. Ninety per cent of all those farmers have chattel mortgages to almost the full extent of the value of their farming stock and machinery. The Government itself even charges these settlers 12 per cent per annum interest on all delinquent water payments, while at the same time we are loaning billions and billions of dollars to foreign governments at some 3 or 4 per cent interest, and the eastern bankers and big newspapers and international speculators and many prominent Federal officials are constantly urging its canceling all of those debts. It does seem to me that good will, charity, brotherly love, and especially humane treatment, fair dealing, and justice should begin at home.

Fifth. There must be some—either Federal or State or both—legislation providing cold-storage warehouses and bonded depositories for farm produce. And it seems to me the Federal Government might well undertake that service, especially upon these reclamation projects; and Sixth. I think great improvement might be made in the system of cooperative marketing.

These are a few of the afflictions that are imposed upon these settlers and that must be corrected; otherwise not only most of the farmers but the merchants there and many other classes of people will be practically ruined. A majority of the farmers will not make enough this year to pay their taxes, while their crops would have been worth several millions of dollars if they could have been promptly and properly marketed. One or two years' extension of payment of construction charges are not at all sufficient. It is not a human possibility for these farmers to recover from the present calamity and be in position to commence paying for the project in less than five years.

This project is a worthy and good one. There is no complaint that it ought not to have been made a Government project, and there is no complaint as to its being impractical; but it is handicapped by a load of unnecessary or at least extravagant and unforeseen expenditures by the Government officials, outrageous and ruinous treatment by the railroad, and many other unforeseen obstacles for which the settlers are not to blame.

The project can be made a great success, and everyone hopes and believes that the present obstacles can be largely overcome and hardships much relieved, but it will be several years; and it will have to be under better and more competent and efficient management than now before that railroad will be in position to give those settlers the necessary transportation service. I think everybody in Colorado hopes that the Burlington or Rock Island or any efficient and capable railroad system may soon take over the Rio Grande and make a railroad of it and run it for the upbuilding of Colorado. It would be a marvelous godsend to about 30 counties of Colorado through which that railroad tracK runs if there could be a real up-to-date railroad operated on it. But under present conditions it is absolutely unreasonable, it is not even common sense to expect those settlers to commence repaying the Government that $70 an acre for their water.

There is no use of crimination or recrimination at this time. It is a heartbreaking condition that confronts us. It would not only be cruelly inhuman to force those settlers off of their lands and compel them to lose their homes and the meager savings of a lifetime of hard work for not paying money which they have not got and can not possibly get; it would be not only brutally outrageous but the height of stupidity and idiocy on the part of the Government to put those people off of the lands and put new people or settlers on them. I can not believe that anything of that kind is going to be undertaken or even seriously considered, because the Government holds the land, and it is ample security, and it would be sheer folly to take any course that would even discourage much less drive the farmers off their lands. Even if others could be induced to go on the lands under the existing conditions the new settlers could never make anywhere near as much of a success as the old ones have done. It has been a long, hard struggle. I could say a great deal more. Those settlers deserve much better treatment than being criticized by any Federal officials.

They are not seeking to repudiate one dollar of all that $7,000,000 expended on the project, although they were promised and had long hoped that it would only be about one-third of that amount. They are not complaining at being the pioneer project and paying dearly for it. They can and will ultimately pay that $70 an acre. But if Uncle Sam puts impossibly harsh conditions upon them he may discourage them into abandoning their homes. He may return portions of that project largely into a desert, but he can never by any possibility get money out of people who have not got it and can not get it. Their present condition is one in which pressure from the Government will not and can not accomplish any good purpose.

There is no community in the United States that rendered greater services in proportion to its numbers, or subscribed more to Liberty bonds and other relief activities, or did more in any other respect toward upholding the hands of the Government during the war to the utmost of its ability than the people of the Uncompahgre Valley. There is no better or more patriotic class of people in any two of the 3,078 counties of the United States than in Montrose and Delta Counties. And all they ask of our Government is that they be given a fair and reasonable opportunity to raise and market their crops sufficient to sustain themselves and their families and pay off this Government obligation of $7,000,000. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING.

For printing and binding for the Department of the Interior, but not including printing and binding for the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, or the Patent Office, $145,000: Provided, That the annual reports of the department and of all its bureaus and establishments, including the Reclamation Service, shall not exceed a total of 1,250 pages.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, lines 21, 22, and 23, strike out the following: "But not including printing and binding for the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, or the Patent Office, $145,000," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Including all its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere except the Geological Survey, Bureau of Mines, and Patent Office, $145,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is offered to make sure that the language in the paragraph is effective in carrying out the requirements of the provision in the legislative appropriation act for the assembling of all printing and binding items in one place in the bill.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. What is the object of excluding the Patent Office? I notice nowhere in the bill is there an appropriation made for the Patent Office except for the Official Gazette. There are many other publications and pamphlets in the cellar of the Patent Office which are very valuable and are molding and crumbling away.

Mr. CRAMTON. The item we have for printing and binding of the Patent Office is on the next page of the bill.

Mr. WATSON. That is for the Gazette.

Mr. CRAMTON. Also there is an appropriation for the miscellaneous printing and binding, and that has some connection with the situation the gentleman is speaking of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protection of game in Alaska: For carrying into effect the act entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 11, 1908, including salaries, traveling expenses of game wardens, and all other necessary expenses, $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Governor of Alaska.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how many game wardens there are in Alaska? Alaska is a large country. Also, if the gentleman has a record of the number of the arrests that the game wardens have made, I should be very glad to know it. It would be rather interesting to know. A few game wardens would be of very little use in such a vast territory.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the number is very limited, that is true.

Mr. WATSON. Has the gentleman a record of the number of game wardens?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; the number of wardens contemplated under the proposed language is nine, with a salary roll of $13,740. That is a reduction from the current year, and in addition to that there are items of travel expense and telegraph service provided also.

Mr. WATSON. There have been very few arrests; they have had to do very little service?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not immediately at hand the number of arrests. I might call attention to certain facts at this time, since the item has been mentioned. The people of Alaska through their Territorial legislature have put the license fees for citizens of the United States, nonresidents of Alaska, for hunting at figures that are unreasonably high, and there was an impulse on the part of some of the members of the committee to eliminate this item, feeling that having put the license fees so high as to invite poaching and unauthorized hunting they have put an added burden upon the Federal Treasury, which must be borne by those who are discriminated against. Of course, it immediately appealed to us that perhaps such a policy would be destructive of game in Alaska, so the committee has recommended $20,000 suggested by the Budget, in the hope that the Territorial Legislature of Alaska will renew the spirit of fairness toward those in the United States who are not residents of Alaska who have not large means who might want to hunt in Alaska.

Mr. WATSON. There is no attempt to place wardens in the northern part of Alaska?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not that information at hand. The fee amounts to $150 a year before anyone can do any hunting in Alaska who is a nonresident thereof.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman, I think we should all bear in mind that the people of Alaska have absolutely no voice in the matter of regulating this matter. Congress placed an inhibition in our organic act which prevents us from having any voice in the regulation of game. We maintain that inasmuch as Congress passes the laws that govern us, Congress ought to appropriate enough to protect the game to appoint enough game wardens. This year there is a reduction of $5,000 in the appropriation for game wardens, and there never has been a time in the history of the Territory when game wardens are required as much as they are to-day. We have a great many orientals who come to the Territory every year, going to the canneries, and during the summer season they kill duck and other game out of season, salt it and pack it away and carry it down to San Francisco in the fall. I do not think it is fair that this $5,000 reduction should be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

For appliances in connection with filing system, $3,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I call attention to the fact that we are now just going to take up these offices of 12 surveyors general, provided for in the bill. I presume that if an inquiry were made of all of us from our constituents, all of us would admit that we are in favor of sane economy, sane retrenchment in governmental expenses. Yet what are we permitting here? I know the pressure that has been brought to bear upon this committee, as it has on other committees that have brought provisions of this kind in the bill. I call attention again to the fact, and remind the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who, every time one mentions retrenchment, comes on the floor, of the facts in connection with these offices. He is the one who, after all, holds the purse strings of the Treasury. Three years ago, after the armistice was signed and we were hoping to get back to normalcy, the Commissioner of the General Land Office appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and testified that, in his judgment, all of these offices of surveyors general ought to be abolished. At that time we had 13, and he testified that they were not needed; that the work could be better done here in Washington; that it was an unnecessary expense; that thousands of dollars could be saved annually, and he recommended to the committee that they abolish the 13 offices. The committee, acting upon his advice, left every one of them out of the bill and brought the bill in as clean as a hound's tooth, so far as these surveyors' offices is concerned. What happened?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman asks me, the House overruled the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLANTON. That is just exactly what I want to call attention to. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] felt outraged when I intimated that by reason of being human beings the Committee on Appropriations could be influenced. I did not mean that they could be influenced in a bad way, but, being human beings, they are naturally subject to the same influence as other individuals.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course they are never influenced by votes.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell him how he is influenced. He imagines right now that nothing on God's earth could influence him against his wish. When we spoke about continuing the civilian bonuses he said that he would not do it; he stood here on the floor and fought every time the matter was proposed, and he said that we had to stop it, that the war was over, that it was a war matter, and that they were going to stop it. Yet how many of these bonuses has he permitted to pass since that time? Six, one for $120 and five of $240 each. He has laid down on that proposition because they overreached him upon it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman knows that we tried to stop it.

Mr. BLANTON. I know; but after all the stream kept wearing on the gentleman until not long ago he said he was not going to fight it any more, that he was going to give another one. Already we have given the civil employees who are entitled to it $1,320 bonus. I just mention that to show that even our great chairman can be influenced against his will. What happened?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. What happened when our distinguished committee voted to do away with these offices? I want to say that some of the best men in the House were on the committee when it had that matter in charge and when it was left out of the bill. They gave the matter close study; they went into the question. Look at the hearings three years ago, and you will see that they went into the matter to see what ought to be done. It was the consensus of opinion, based on the honest, sincere judgment in behalf of the people, that these 13 surveyors general offices should be left out. They did leave them out of the bill, and what happened? We found our friends from those States that had these offices coming in one by one. You could look around and call the roll of the 13 of them, and all of them were on the floor, led by the leader of the House, in whose State there was one. They said that we must put them back, right in the face of a claim of retrenchment, and they stood on the floor of this House in committee and put everyone of them back in the bill. Of course, the committee has refrained from leaving it out of the bill since then. I am glad to say in their behalf that they have done away with one of them. We formerly had 13 and they have brought in only 12. Thank God for that. Now I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. As the gentleman knows, it is pretty hard to do away with these things when they are once established.

Mr. BLANTON. I know it.

Mr. CRAMTON. But this committee tries to be practical, not to bring in things that the House is sure to overrule, but to bring in such economies as we can make stick; and so for the current year, in the last Interior Department bill, instead of attacking windmills, we took up the matter practically, and notwithstanding the fact that the House overruled us to a certain extent we saved $70,000 for the current year on the land offices.

Mr. BLANTON. I commend the gentleman for that.

Mr. CRAMTON. We try to do what can be done.

Mr. BLANTON. I was going to commend the gentleman, but the gentleman's idea is for the Government to be practical in a way that will be approved by 13 men in the House, the men whose particular States enjoy the proceeds of the offices of 13 surveyors general. His idea is that it is going to be opposed and these 13 men are going to be strong enough to put it back; it is hopeless not to put it back. I say if it is right to stop it, stop it. If the commissioner testifies, as he did a few years ago, to the effect that it is useless and ought to stop, the committee ought to stand up here like the Rock of Gibraltar and say to these 13 men in these 13 States where the offices have been, "We are not going to put it back; we like you; we are your friends; we like you personally; but we are not going to do it at the expense of the taxpayers of this country."

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Would the gentleman think it practical to put the surveyors' records 3,000 miles away from the land and from the people who are interested in the surveys? As a private individual, if the gentleman had millions and millions of acres of land thousands of miles away, would he do that thing?

Mr. BLANTON. I answer the gentleman with the testimony of the last commissioner.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Yes; and by that you would build up a great big bureau here, a thing which the gentleman is always fighting.

Mr. BLANTON. In my State there are lands that belong to the State of Texas which are 600 or 700 miles from the land office at Austin.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am not talking about a thousand miles. I am talking about several thousand miles.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet the business is just as well attended to as if they were located right near Austin. The business of the public, as is said by the Commissioner of the General Land Office—and I did not say it—can be attended to just as well in Washington as out there on the ground. The commissioner says those officers out there are useless.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLTON. We are talking about this matter to-day. Does the present Commissioner of the General Land Office take that attitude?

Mr. FRENCH. He does not.

Mr. BLANTON. I understand he does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. If the commissioner was given a fair opportunity to express himself I overlooked it.

Mr. FRENCH. On page 93 he expressed himself, and contrary to the advice of the commissioner three years ago.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the commissioner three years ago was a Democratic commissioner, and the one who is there now is a Republican, and that is just the difference between Democratic judgment and Republican judgment.

Mr. FRENCH. It is all in favor of the public.

Mr. BLANTON. It is all in favor of saving the people's money in the Treasury of the United States so that they will not have to pay it out in taxes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, just a few words in regard to this matter. I am sure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] would not favor the abolition of the offices of surveyors general and the handling of the work in Washington if it would mean adding to the expense rather than subtracting from the expense.

Mr. BLANTON. I would not.

Mr. FRENCH. It is therefore a question of judgment, and, so far as I am aware, the only responsible officer in the Interior Department during many years who has recommended the abolition of the offices of the surveyors general and the handling of the work in Washington was Commissioner Tallman a few years ago. The present commissioner takes another position, and Members of Congress who are closely familiar with this work believe that it would not only be a greater inconvenience to the people and work a more severe hardship, but that it would be less economical to handle the work of the surveys through Washington than through the different agencies throughout the country. The question was directed to the commissioner at the last hearing that we had, and the answer was made directly on this point by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The question arose following the discussion of the abolition of one office in South Dakota. I read from the hearings:

Mr. BYRNES. Why did you abolish the South Dakota office?
Mr. SPRY. There was no further need of an office there.
Mr. BYRNES. Have you made a survey of the offices to determine whether or not it would be possible to abolish other offices?
Mr. SPRY. Yes, sir; and it is not possible.
Mr. BYRNES. Because of the amount of work being done and the acreage still left in the public-land States?
Mr. FRENCH. Would it be more economical to abolish any of the other offices and handle the work from Washington, or in any other manner than that in which you have handled it under the present system?
Mr. SPRY. I do not think we could duplicate the present system here. I do not think you could bring the work to Washington and handle it as successfully as we are handling it in the various States.

Altogether, then, the testimony, in my judgment, is one-sided on the matter of the convenience of the people and the expedition of the work. There is a debatable question touching the expenditure, and I believe it would probably be equally expensive, if not more expensive, to have all that work done from Washington than to handle it from the different agencies. But I say I do believe in pinching off these different surveyors general's offices just as rapidly as the work can be brought to the point where it can be done.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman any idea whether the action of the House in overriding the judgment and recommendation made by Commissioner Tallman has anything to do with the state of mind of the present commissioner?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, I do not know. I suppose he is meeting the question as a man charged with responsibility would naturally do.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman does know that these little influences do creep in; when the commissioner finds out that the House is in what the late distinguished Speaker Champ Clark used to say "a certain mood," it is absolutely impossible to go up against that mood, and it does influence the state of mind to a certain extent.

Mr. FRENCH. I do not think the present commissioner would be controlled by that fact. I think he was giving us an answer that was direct and sincere and earnest in advising upon a question that might come before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses, $550; in all, $14,650.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In order to strike out these various 12 offices of surveyors general would require under our rules a motion after each office was read, or, in fact, after each line was read, as each line contains an item, and each office embraces from three to four lines. I realize, of course, that it would be a waste of time to hope for success in having them stricken out. Therefore, I do not make the motion, but if I thought there was any possibility whatever of the committee sustaining such a motion I would make it.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is very much the position of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. BLANTON. I was sure of it. The only reason I have taken the time to call it to the attention of the committee is in the hope that sooner or later, first in the Committee on Appropriations, or then in this Committee of the Whole, or then in the House, we will some day stand up here and strike them out, no mattter where the chips fall.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to detail temporarily clerks from the office of one surveyor general to another as the necessities of the service may require and to pay their actual necessary traveling expenses in going to and returning from such office out of the appropriation for surveying the public lands. A detailed statement of traveling expenses incurred hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of each regular session thereof.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to inquire of the committee in charge of this bill if they have any figures showing the amount that has been expended for traveling expenses, per diem, and so on, in going back and forth from these different surveyors general's offices and doing the work in the States where there are no surveyors general?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is a very small amount for such States as the gentleman speaks about. Of course, I suppose the gentleman has in mind his own State, where the office was abolished this past year. We have not any apportionment of the expense to cover that particular office.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, $370,000: Provided, That the offices of registers and receivers at the following land offices are hereby consolidated, and the applicable provisions of the act approved October 28, 1921, shall be followed in effecting such consolidations: Leadville, Colo.; Gainesville, Fla.; Guthrie, Okla.; Lakeview, Oreg.; and Waterville, Wash.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee or the gentleman in charge of this item the reasons for the consolidation of the Lakeview office. What is the justification for that?

Mr. FRENCH. In reply I will say that the gentleman will recall that last year the committee found a very undesirable situation confronting the organization of land offices throughout the country. In spite of the law which provides that land offices shall be abolished when the area of public domain within the district that the land office serves shall be not to exceed 100,000 acres, there were numerous land offices where the area was less than a township, others where it was less than half a township.

Again, there is another law which provides that whenever the expenses of a land office exceed 33⅓ per cent of the income of the office the land office may be abolished. We found a condition existing that had accrued through quite a number of years and several administrations, where land offices were being continued where there was no justification for them. We brought in a rather severe provision last year, as a result of which we wiped out nine land offices entirely and consolidated the offices of register and receiver in something like 26 other land offices; and in spite of the fact that some land offices were restored, we succeeded in effecting a saving of approximately $71,000 in the handling of this work. The only disastrous result that has occurred of which I am aware was reported to me by one Member from a district that lost one or two land offices. He said that while he was elected to this Congress, he thought he lost 150 or 200 votes on account of our action.

Now, as to the particular land office of Lakeview, let me say that the expenses have increased until they are 40 per cent of the revenues of the office and in excess of the amount suggested in the law as justifying the continuance of the office at all. On the other hand, there is an immense amount of work yet to be done in that district. Your committee thought it was an appropriate time, not to abolish the office but to continue it on a basis that would come within the law and bring its expense down to 33⅓ per cent or less of its receipts. Therefore we have provided for the consolidation of the offices of register and receiver into one office, and of course have made such allowance as will permit such clerical assistance to be employed as may be necessary. At present there is one clerk employed at that office.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses of land offices: For clerk hire, rent, and other incidental expenses of the district land offices, including the expenses of depositing public money; per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of clerks detailed to examine the books and management of district land offices and to assist in the operation of said offices, and in the opening of new land offices and reservations, when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and for actual necessary traveling expenses of said clerks: Provided, That no expenses chargeable to the Government shall be incurred by registers and receivers in the conduct of local land officecs except upon previous specific authorization by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $370,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 14, line 2, strike out "$370,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$360,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. In connection with that, Mr. Chairman, I wish to explain that when the officers of the General Land Office were before the committee we noted an estimate of $36,000 included in this sum for rental of these various land offices, which seemed to be a little increase over the current year. We asked for information to be furnished and a detailed statement of rentals, and when that statement was furnished it developed that the rentals for the current year are $30,000 instead of $36,000 as the estimates propose. We thought, therefore, this item could very well be reduced $6,000 below what had been recommended. But, in addition, the statement of rentals which appears in the hearings shows that in a number of offices the annual rental exceeds $1,000 per year for each office, and that, too, in small towns or cities and often in offices where there is not much work to do. For instance, at Baton Rouge, La., with a total of 8,816 acres in the State, there is a rental of $1,440. In Lamar, Colo., the annual rental is $1,050, with an acreage of 4,824 acres. Of course, we are aware that at such offices as Lamar there are other elements entering into the question, but it impressed the committee that, generally speaking, this rent roll should be pruned somewhat, and so we are suggesting a further cut of $4,000 in that connection, making a total cut of $10,000, which we anticipate will come from the rental portion of the estimates.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call attention to the language in lines 22 and 23 on page 13—and for actual necessary traveling expenses of such clerks.

I want to call attention to the fact that the committee have failed to insert the usual restriction of a maximum of $4 a day for subsistence. In other words, it leaves the actual traveling expenses open to whatever they expend.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; and let me say that this statement will also in part answer the question of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON]. The total expenditure estimated for traveling expenses is $1,000, and the item before us carries this language:

When allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914.

And that contains the $4 limit.

Mr. BLANTON. That act limits it to $4?

Mr. CRAMTON. It does.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: For protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, including not exceeding $15,000 for clerical services in bringing up and making current the work of the General Land Office, $485,000, including not exceeding $35,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of agents and others employed in the field service and for operation, maintenance, and exchange of same and for operation and maintenance of a motor boat: Provided, That the compensation of the chief of field service employed hereunder, including his services in the District of Columbia, shall not exceed $3,500 per annum and the compensation of all others employed hereunder shall not exceed $2,700 per annum each, except in Alaska, where a compensation not to exceed $3,000 per annum may be allowed: Provided further, That agents and others employed under this appropriation may be allowed per diem in lieu of subsistence, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and actual necessary expenses for transportation, except when agents are employed in Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $5 per day each in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 12, strike out the amount "$35,000" and insert "$40,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not increase the appropriation beyond the $485,000 as carried in the bill, but it makes a larger apportionment available for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for field service. There is interesting matter in connection with this, which gentlemen will find on page 118 of the hearings, showing the real economy in the operation of Government-owned cars as against rented cars.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alaska whether or not the expense of subsistence—I am not speaking of traveling expenses, but the expense of subsistence—is 20 per cent greater in Alaska than anywhere else in the West?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; I think so. I think that we are absolutely safe in saying it is 20 per cent higher.

Mr. BLANTON. In the Dakotas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Nevada, and various other places in the West we allow $4 per day for subsistence, but in Alaska we increase it to $5 a day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the gentleman's State you have competition in the sale of merchandise. You have competition in transportation; but in Alaska we have not any competition; we are in the grip of a monopoly, and the charges are two or three times as much to carry merchandise from Seattle to Alaska as they are from New York to Seattle. All these things we have to contend with. The gentleman must recollect also that we are shut off from transportation through Canada, while all the States have that privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the completion of the Government-owned railway, upon which we are expending a great deal of money, give any relief of that situation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. To the interior of Alaska; it will not on the coast. That takes care of the coast to the interior, but on the coast we are in the hands of the monopoly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveying public lands: For surveys and resurveys of public lands, examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, making fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $650,000: Provided, That the sum of not exceeding 10 per cent of the amount hereby appropriated may be expended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of metal or other equally durable monuments to be used for public land survey corners wherever practicable: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of this appropriation may be expended for salaries of employees of the field surveying service temporarily detailed to the General Land Office: Provided further, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation may be used for the survey, classification, and sale of the lands and timber of the so-called Oregon & California Railroad lands and the Coos Bay Wagon Road lands.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 8, strike out the amount of "$53,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, that is simply a reduction in the authorization for survey of the Oregon & California Railroad land.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

SALARIES.

Commissioner, $5,000; assistant commissioner, $3,500; chief clerk, $2,750; financial clerk, $2,250; chiefs of divisions—1 $2,250, 1 $2,000; law clerk, $2,000; assistant chief of division, $2,000; private secretary, $1,800; examiner of irrigation accounts, $1,800; draftsmen—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200; clerks—20 of class 4, 31 of class 3, 2 at $1,500 each, 36 of class 2, 64 of class 1 (including 1 stenographer), 30 at $1,000 each (including 1 stenographer), 30 at $900 each, 1 $720; messenger, $840; 8 assistant messengers, at $720 each; 4 messenger boys, at $420 each; in all, $306,150.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 17, line 20, after the figures "$306,150," add the following: "Provided, That none of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the preparation of estimates for future appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs which shall not give itemized statement as to the total sum of money requested for expenditure in each reservation, school, or other activity, whether gratuities from the Treasury, withdrawals from Indian funds, treaty items, or otherwise, together with a detailed statement of the total expenditures from all sources and funds for such reservation, school, or other activity during the previous fiscal year."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it includes not only a limitation but it directs an executive officer of the Government. In fact, there are a number of directions in it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the point of order, the amendment I have offered is a limitation on the appropriation of $306,150.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered I believe should be accepted by the subcommittee and also by the Committee of the Whole House without objection because it simply aims to get a businesslike statement of the appropriations carried for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Why are these appropriations carried in a lump sum? Here is an appropriation for irrigation on the reservations of $197,450. It should be possible to itemize the amount and show on which reservation it is to be spent so that the committee may have the information. There is an appropriation for the support of the Indian schools, $1,799,500. That is a lump-sum appropriation, almost $2,000,000, and may be used for many purposes. I believe it is common sense to require information as to which schools and for what ends it is proposed to spend it.

For industrial work, $375,000 in a lump sum. It is impossible to tell where it is going to be spent, and yet it should be itemized and the reservations should be shown. There has been one difficulty, I will say, in regard to this bill for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and that is that the accounting method does not show in a businesslike way where the money goes. In 1912 a New York accounting firm was put to work and they came back and said that there was no real system in keeping the records in the bureau, and it gave an opportunity for fraud in the handling of these great sums.

In 1919 Mr. Graves, of the Efficiency Bureau of the Government, appeared before the committee and testified that he had tried to install an accounting system in the bureau, but he found a great deal of opposition. He said that there was no one in the Indian Bureau who was interested in whether or not any money was made in any particular activity, or whether there was a loss. Therefore, that part of his proposal had to be eliminated. Here is a chance to put a proviso upon this bill, not cutting down a dollar of appropriation, although it should be cut in two if this proviso is not put in here, because there are too many clerks there, unless they are doing some of the accounting work that this proviso will compel. I believe there should be no objection to this amendment. It is in the interest of efficiency and economy and will mean a great deal eventually for the taxpayers and the Indians.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's amendment would protect the next appropriation for the fiscal year 1925.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. But for the $13,000,000 that we are providing in this bill for this bureau we have no accounting whatever.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No business accounting, and I will offer some amendments later to the bill to deal with certain particular items. This amendment will mean that the commissioner when he goes before the committee will have to detail the reservation, the school, and show all of the money appropriated for each particular activity at each location.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I ask the gentleman what he means by saying that there is no accounting in respect to the $13,000,000?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I was quoting from Mr. Graves, who said that there was practically no accounting system.

Mr. CRAMTON. That was in 1912?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In 1919 his testimony was given before our committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Has the gentleman made any inquiry as to the present situation to find out whether those conditions continued?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, we did before Mr. Graves——

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, has the gentleman this year made any inquiry as to what the condition is under Commissioner Burke?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; it is not necessary, for these immense general items show that the same system continues.

Mr. CRAMTON. Neither is it necessary to make a charge of this kind.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Here is one appropriation of $1,799,500 without itemizing, and that is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that it is not necessary before he gets up on the floor and makes some very serious charges against an official of the Government to find out first whether his charges are true or not. He is giving the House as the only support for his charges a statement by some official at some time in the dim past when the bureau was under a different management, but as to what the situation is under this administration at this time he has no information to give. I hold in my hand a volume containing an itemized statement of the estimates of the Indian Bureau placed in the hands of our committee, and I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] that there is no bureau of the Government that voluntarily comes to the Appropriation Committee and submits its estimates in the detail and in the good order and gives the information that the Bureau of Indian Affairs does. Still the gentleman from Pennsylvania would have this House understand that the Bureau of Indian Affairs has a great lump sum of $11,000,000 to disburse for which it makes no accounting whatever——

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, I did not say that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not yield to the gentleman—as to which it gives no information. But the gentleman brings in some amendment here of his own concoction, without any previous notice to the committee in charge of the bill, with no opportunity to examine the provisions of the amendment that he has offered to determine whether or not it is wise, with nothing except that we know that they come from the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and I submit that this committee can not afford to impose unknown burdens, possibly making necessary hordes of clerks to seek out information which the House does not know whether it wants or not.

The gentleman speaks about the item for irrigation on page 59, a preliminary paragraph. Then they go down district by district, and every single dollar is itemized, we are told how it will be spent, and when we come to the schools the gentleman will find in the printed hearings, what was in all of these estimates, that the individual salary of every individual employee connected with every school, in so far as the whole five or six million dollars is concerned, is set forth in black and white. I guarantee the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not yet read a quarter of the information that is now available for him, and he would not read what is called for in his amendment if it was compiled for him at great expense to the Government.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has committed a hanging offense. It is true that he is not now a member of this subcommittee of five members, and they may have had information probably before them that he has not had; and if they have had the information before them that he seeks to bring before the next committee, still his amendment is not such a terrible crime. After all, his purposes are good, and I am with him. He has been on this Indian Committee. He has served faithfully. No one will contend that the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not work as hard as any other member of the committee when he was a member of it. He knows something about the Indian business.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. He does not know as much as our friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. No one could do that, because Mr. CARTER knows all about the business, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania probably knows as much as any other Member of the House, I take it, about the subject of Indian affairs. If his amendment will absolutely insure for the committee in the next fiscal year the getting of information which the chairman says that he has already gotten, then his amendment has not gone far wrong. It is a good amendment, after all. It could only be called surplusage. I do not see any occasion for this cyclone that has been raised, which is about to sweep the whole House of Representatives off its feet and annihilate all action except that which comes from the committee itself. It is true that out of 435 Members only a few of us have come here to-day to attend to the Nation's business, and we ought to be permitted to attend to it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is only seeking to attend to the people's business, and I commend him for it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Would it not be a good plan to have under the reservation head all the expenses from all these lump sums?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. And in view of the fact that the committee is furnished with a detailed report, the only additional expenditure would be the printing of the report, would it not?

Mr. BLANTON. That is true; but this is not going to require any additional expense. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, and no one has denied it, that the expert accountants from New York that came down here in 1912 said the business of that department was in a terrible shape; that there was no system whatever of proper accounting there. He said to us frankly that that condition existed in 1917, when the Bureau of Efficiency here saw fit to investigate the facts and make its recommendation. He brought it in, not in a partisan way. He referred to it under a Republican administration first and then under a Democratic administration and now again under a Republican administration. It was the same under both administrations. It was not partisan. He was merely seeking to rectify the situation; and we are not sure, without the gentleman's amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is aware, I assume, that the Budget Bureau is outlining methods of bookkeeping and accounting to govern all the agencies of the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am with the Bureau of the Budget. I am backing them up here every day when I vote, and I vote to hold their maximum as our outside limit, and I also vote to hold the committee's maximum as our outside limit. But because we have a Budget, and because we have our distinguished friends on this committee, there is no reason why the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as a Member of this House, should not get up here and make a proper suggestion. I am going to vote for his amendment, because it is a good one.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I remember when the criticism was made by the accountant who was working here establishing new systems in all the Government departments. He did criticize the accounting system in the Department of the Interior, just as he criticized the accounting systems in other departments of the Government. He did not charge that large sums were spent without being accounted for; he simply criticized the manner in which the accounting was done. Since then the system that he suggested has been adopted and is being carried out.

I find here, in the first item that I opened up, an analysis of an expenditure by the Bureau of Indian Affairs which is typical of every item appropriated for in this bill and every item that has been appropriated for in years that have passed and that will be carried in the future, I have no doubt. I happened to open up at the item, "Suppressing the liquor traffic among Indians." For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the amount appropriated was $30,000; fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, amounted appropriated, $35,000; amount expended, $27,384.03; unexpended balance, $7,615.97. Under "Analysis of expenditure": Salaries, wages, and so forth, $11,905.80; traveling expenses, $14,041.32; transportation of supplies, $8,068; stationery and printing, $155.17; equipment and miscellaneous material, $1,008.11; miscellaneous, $180.

Then follow several pages of detailed itemizations of these expenditures, showing how it was done.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Itemized on reservations and the other expenditures, so that we can get at each expenditure at each reservation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is a total for each reservation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. He will find a minute analysis of all these expenditures if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will go into the record to ascertain what the facts are.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have read that; but there is nothing there to show where the money is expended. There should be no objection to my amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman's proposition would merely add vastly to the expense of conducting the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. How could it do that when it asks that an itemized statement be presented to the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Such statements are presented.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Then why should the gentleman object to my amendment?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They are here.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is no objection, then, on the part of the gentleman to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to see the interest taken in these matters by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] and by my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I do not quite agree with them, but I am glad to find such men giving attention to these important matters, and out of such discussions as these perhaps will come some good, wholesome legislation eventually.

I had the good fortune to serve on the committee with the gentleman from Pennsylvania for several years, and I found him to be a very active, energetic, and efficient member of the committee, taking an interest at all times for the Government and for the Indians. The gentleman now proposes an amendment, however, that in my judgment ought not to be adopted. It ought not to be adopted because it will preclude the use of any of these funds for the beneficial purposes set out until estimates are made at the next session of Congress for the appropriations. The estimates can not be made before next autumn. It means a suspension of Indian schools.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CARTER. In a moment. It means a suspension of all irrigation development. It means a suspension of all agency activities and the protection of the Indians generally. I do not think the gentleman realizes the far-reaching effect of the amendment he has proposed.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This amendment refers only to the Secretary's office.

Mr. CARTER. Well, none of the agencies can function without the head of the bureau functioning. It will be necessary to have a Commissioner of Indian Affairs, an Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and a superintendent of education, and all the other bureaus functioning. Otherwise there would be no head to direct the subordinates.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a minute?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Let me put in the RECORD a letter I wrote last year, 1921, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, asking for a very brief and simple statement of the amounts of money appropriated for the last 20 years from tribal funds and for gratuities. I remember I got back a statement that they did not have that information.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman certainly would not call a statement regarding all those activities for 20 years a simple statement. It would certainly be a very complicated statement, involving a large amount of work, digging through old documents and papers not now in use, and requiring, perhaps, a search of half a day sometimes to dig out one amount that the gentleman requested.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, as to the item just read, for four messenger boys, the gentleman wants a statement of what part of the compensation of those four messenger boys down there in the office is to be charged for the Seminole Indians in Florida, and what part for the Quillehute Indians in Washington, and the Ontonagon Indians in Michigan. Eventually, after the figures are made out, they would not be worth anything, anyhow.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is facetious in his statement as to the effect of my amendment. My amendment refers specifically to the money spent on the reservation.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was unfortunate in his request calling for definite estimates when he referred to the irrigation item.

Every one of them is set out separately in this bill just preceding the amount the gentleman referred to, the amount of $197,450. For instance, after the first part of the clause we have—

Irrigation district 1: Round Valley Reservation, Calif., $1,000; Hoopa Valley, Calif., $1,500; Colville Reservation, Wash., $6,000; total, $8,500.

Irrigation district 2: Walker River Reservation, Nev., $5,000; Western Shoshone Reservation, Idaho and Nevada, $2,000; Shivwits, Utah, $500; total, $7,500.

Irrigation district 3: Tongue River, Mont., $1,500.

Irrigation district 4: Ak Chin Reservation, Ariz., $3,400; Chiu Chiu pumping plants, Arizona, $12,600; Coachella Valley pumping plants, California, $8,000; Morongo Reservation, Calif., $7,000; Pala Reservation and Rincon Reservation, Calif., $4,500; Owens Valley, Calif., $2,000; Tuolumne Reservation, Calif., $2,700; miscellaneous projects, $10,000; total, $46,200.

Irrigation district 5: New Mexico Pueblos, $15,000; Zuni Reservation, N. Mex., $7,500; Navajo and Hopi, miscellaneous projects, Arizona, including Tes-nos-pos, Moencopi Wash, Kin-le-chee, Wide Ruins, Red Lake, Corn Creek, Wepo Wash, Oraibi Wash, and Polacca Wash, $20,000; Southern Ute Reservation, Colo., $20,000; total, $62,500.

And so on, until each item is set out in detail, and the bill states specifically just where the money is to be used and how much is to be used on each reservation. So there is not an irrigation appropriation in any bill that is set out more definitely than this general irrigation proposition in this Indian bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I ask one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for one minute more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. As the gentleman will remember, some five or six years ago, at the earnest solicitation of the committee, the House rearranged this item so that every amount is specifically itemized. They are carried so plainly that he who runs may read. It would not be possible for any irrigation item to be stated more in detail than this particular one; and if the same plan were followed as to schools and all other items, instead of this bill being slightly more than 100 pages in length it would be 600 or 700 pages, and might take half the session of Congress to pass it.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it seems that the committee is just one jump ahead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]. In their endeavor to get a comprehensive report of the Indian Commissioner's affairs, at the request of some one on this committee the Bureau of Indian Affairs has prepared a most elaborate explanation of the expenditure of every dollar expended for the Indian, by the Indian, or by his friends, and that statement has been presented to this committee for their guidance in the framing of this measure. With the little experience I have had, I could not help commending the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for furnishing this complete statement which he has furnished. I would ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] if he has seen this book setting out all these expenditures?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. In reply I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not in that Book of Estimates there is a complete statement of every dollar appropriated for the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana?

Mr. MURPHY. I think so.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. For schools, irrigation, and other expenses? If so, I would like to see it.

Mr. MURPHY. Every dollar asked for by the Bureau of Indian Affairs is itemized, dollar for dollar, and there is a statement of the project where it is to be expended, why it is to be expended, and all about it.

I dare say that if the gentleman from Pennsylvania had had access to this information he would not have presented this matter at this time, because there is no question that the Committee on Appropriations is doing the very best that can be done for the protection of every dollar raised by taxation and every dollar to be expended from the Indian fund; and of all those who came before this subcommittee presenting their various projects the bureau having charge of Indian affairs presented the most comprehensive explanation of everything they asked for of everyone who appeared before the committee. I think the gentleman's amendment is unnecessary, because it will involve additional expense; for, as I have said, we are just one jump ahead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because we already have what he is asking for.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is a vital difference between the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] says it would involve great additional expense. The gentleman from Ohio says it is already being done. Therefore there is a difference of opinion even among the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman's question in regard to the Blackfeet Reservation will illustrate the difference. The gentleman wants forthwith and immediately to know just how much is expended this year for the Blackfeet. Now, through the bill there are several items that make appropriations definitely, clearly, and particularly for the Blackfeet Reservation. There may be something for irrigation, something for support and civilization, there is something more in the hospital item, and the committee can not assemble all these items in a moment and turn over the total to the gentleman, but the hearings will disclose all these different items.

In addition, there is something that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] has in mind and that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] has in mind when they talk about additional expense. The hearings disclose that information, which is essential, necessary, and practical, so the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] states. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] urges that the amendment proposed would go further and include the unnecessary and impracticable. For instance, here is a little item that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] spoke about—$15,000 for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians. Some of that $15,000 may be spent, perhaps, among the Blackfeet and some of it elsewhere. There are a number of tribes scattered all over the United States, and we appropriate a little item of $15,000 to carry out one purpose, and we trust the discretion of the bureau to spend that $15,000 to the best advantage. Now, if you require them in advance to say that they are going to spend $40 among the Seminoles of Florida, and $100 among the Blackfeet, and $200 among the Chickasaws, and then an emergency develops in the course of the year, and later when the money is to be spent it develops that there is need for $100 in Florida and $50 among the Blackfeet, the gentleman has required them to sew themselves up in advance, and in order to do that useless thing we will have to spend a lot of money unnecessarily.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I trust the gentleman will understand that I simply want the total on the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for irrigation on Indian reservations, $197,450, reimbursable as provided in the act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. at L. p. 582): Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on any irrigation system or reclamation project for which public funds are or may be otherwise available: Provided further, That the foregoing amounts appropriated for such purposes shall be available interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior for the necessary expenditures for damages by floods and other unforeseen exigencies: Provided, however, That the amount so interchanged shall not exceed in the aggregate 10 per cent of all the amounts so appropriated.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 20, line 24, after the word "reservation," strike out the figures "$197,450" and all of line 25 and line 1 on page 21 to the semicolon, and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$135,000."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the general items carrying $197,450 for which there is a justification in the regular form that has been used for many years on behalf of the Indian Bureau. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, there was appropriated $174,500, but of that appropriation only $132,220 was spent. I provide for an appropriation of $135,000, which is a sum in excess of the amount expended for 1922. The analysis of the expenditure shows the salaries and wage account was $85,297 and the traveling expenses $10,000, making $95,000 for expenses of that kind. The equipment and miscellaneous and material items ought to give some indication of the material cost, which is $15,550, and shows a great disproportion compared to salaries. Now, as to this reimbursable proposition, it is one which should be discontinued entirely or put on a sound basis. Some years ago we started in on the reimbursable plan for the first time. We advanced the money for irrigation purposes, putting liens on the land of the Indians. We have appropriated $28,283,495 of the American taxpayers' money and very few millions have come back, either for industrial purposes or irrigation. The additional amount needed to complete all items would be $32,350,700, so that we are involved in the tremendous proposition with $32,000,000 yet to go.

The act of 1914 provided that first liens should be laid on the lands to pay for the cost, but it stated that it should not be enforced as long as the land was occupied by the original possessor of the lands or his heirs. What is the effect of that? That means the perpetuation of tribalism. You are going to bind the Indian to the reservation so that he can not get away. His land is mortgaged, and if he disposes of it this lien by the Government is enforced. I believe that the time has come when we should have a constructive plan for reimbursement if we are to continue it at all. The time will come when we will have to cancel fifteen or twenty million dollars. We will have to wipe that off altogether. Why should we not start now and lay down an efficient business system? My amendment provides $135,000—more than was used during 1922. Then we should put the reimbursable proposition on a sound basis through the action of the Indian Affairs Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPPORT OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for, and other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,799,500: Provided, That not to exceed $40,000 of this amount may be used for the support and education of deaf and dumb or blind or mentally deficient Indian children: Provided, That all reservation and nonreservation boarding schools, with an average attendance of less than 45 and 80 pupils, respectively, shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1924: Provided, That this limitation as to attendance shall not apply to the Hope Indian School for Girls at Springfield, S. Dak., which school is hereby continued. The pupils in schools so discontinued shall be transferred first, if possible, to Indian day schools or State public schools; second, to adjacent reservation or nonreservation boarding schools, to the limit of the capacity of said schools: Provided further, That all day schools with an average attendance of less than eight shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1924: And provided further, That all moneys appropriated for any school discontinued pursuant to this act or for other cause shall be returned immediately to the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That not more than $250,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for the tuition of Indian children enrolled in the public schools: And provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the support of Indian day and industrial schools where specific appropriation is made: Provided, however, That the deficiency appropriation of $290,000 made by the act approved March 1, 1921, for the support of Indian day, boarding, and industrial schools is hereby declared to be available for expenditure for the benefit of all such Indian schools whether supported by specific appropriations or otherwise.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that part of the paragraph beginning on line 25, page 22, to the end of the paragraph. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. RAKER. I think there is too much new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. To what part of the paragraph does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. RAKER. Commencing in line 25, the word "provided," on page 22, and running down to and including line 5, on page 24. I want to include all the provisos.

The CHAIRMAN. Down to the Indian schools and the agency, on the next page.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Michigan say to the point of order made by the gentleman from California?

Mr. CRAMTON. If I understand, the gentleman's point of order begins at the bottom of page 23, the last line, and ends at the end of the paragraph on page 24. I think I understand what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. RAKER. No; I make the point of order against all the provisos, beginning on page 22, line 25, down to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. But they are all sustained and within the authority of the committee to report. The first one is that $40,000 of this amount may be used for the support and education of the deaf, dumb, and blind or mentally deficient children of the Indians. This authority is given by the Snyder Act for the general support and civilization, including education. The Snyder Act reads as follows:

That the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate, for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes:

General support and civilization, including education.
For relief of distress and conservation of health.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. What I am trying to get at is this: The whole amount, $1,799,500, may be used by the department as it thinks best and should not be controlled by legislation of the committee. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. CRAMTON. As I understand now, Mr. Chairman, the point of order made by the gentleman from California—and if I do not state it accurately I will be glad to have him correct me—is that the whole amount, $1,799,500, is in order for the general purpose stated, but that it is legislation for the committee to put in a limitation as to the amount to be expended for any one purpose within the general purpose which, of course, I think requires no argument. It is not legislation.

I think I have stated the gentleman's position correctly. As to the first item, for instance, we could have appropriated $5,000,000 for the support and education of deaf and dumb or blind Indian children, but we have simply put in a limitation that not over $40,000 of that shall be used for that purpose. That is not legislation. I understand that is typical of the point which the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] makes.

Mr. HICKS. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from Michigan could defend his position against the point of order on the second proviso, that that is a saving to the Treasury of the United States and in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is a saving.

Mr. CARTER. It is not a change of existing law. The Secretary has the right to discontinue schools whenever in his discretion it should be done.

Mr. HICKS. It is a saving, and is in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. CARTER. It would be; certainly, but the Secretary has that right. This is simply a requirement made on the Secretary under existing law.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman suggested that it would be a saving. You can make that general statement without any real facts on which to base it. The gentleman says that they will discontinue the schools unless they have a certain number of pupils. At the bottom of the same proviso provision is made to transfer these pupils to other schools, and the gentleman will know, if he has investigated that, that it is costing the Government more money to make these transfers where they discontinue the schools when you take care of the same number of pupils.

Mr. CARTER. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the proviso referred to by the gentleman from California pertains to boarding schools, and here the proviso pertains to the public schools. Certainly it will be cheaper to educate the children in the public schools than in a boarding school.

Mr. RAKER. The suggestion I made is that where they discontinued the nonreservation or reservation schools they must and do transfer them to some other nonreservation or boarding school. Sometimes they send them as high as a thousand or two thousand miles away from where the children have their homes, at a large expense, and in the ultimate, the Government is paying out more money to educate these Indian pupils by scattering them broadcast, and that is within my own personal knowledge and observation, through visiting the schools and observing what is being done with these Indians in California.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman's statement regarding the matter in so far as nearly all of these different provisos is concerned, is, the Chair thinks, correct, but the Chair would call attention to the second proviso, and the third and the fourth, which seem to be connected together and to be of similar nature. For instance, taking the first proviso—

That all reservation and nonreservation boarding schools, with an average attendance of less than 45 and 80 pupils, respectively, shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1924.

What does the gentleman say as to whether that is legislation?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Snyder Act of November 2, 1921, carried the blanket authority in the form of legislation to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to direct, supervise and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States "for the following purposes":

For general support and civilization of the Indian, and for education.

So that that money that Congress does appropriate for education of Indians may be administered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations is to report to this House sums of money to be appropriated for the specific purposes within the general purpose of education. Having done so, that committee has the authority to say that we appropriate for 1 school or 10 schools or 100 schools, and in the course of such an appropriation may define the use of the appropriation. That is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. The legislative authority has already been given in the Snyder Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the fundamental law, the law under which this appropriation is made, would it not be interpreted that the Secretary is given discretion as to whether or not he will discontinue the schools?

Mr. CRAMTON. Discretion no doubt except for such a paragraph as is before us.

The CHAIRMAN. If that be true, if this proviso takes away from the Secretary any discretion, would it be a change of existing law?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; the Snyder Act does not explicitly give any authority to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to do anything except to use such money as Congress may from time to time appropriate. It does not give the bureau authority to continue those schools in existence at the time the Snyder Act became law. It gives the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Indian Affairs, authority to administer the money that Congress gives in its appropriations, but when Congress makes an appropriation for a specific purpose the Bureau of Indian Affairs can only use it for the purpose for which it is appropriated, and hence this committee may at any time report to Congress an appropriation of $100,000 for a school that has not been heretofore in existence, or we may cut out, with no appropriation, the school, say, at Albuquerque, and hence the bureau can not spend the money for that school since none has been appropriated; and, having that authority, your committee in this general paragraph may restrict the use for the money thereby given, directing to him where to use the money that is given.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, if I may add a word in support of the proposition offered by the committee and against the point of order made by the gentleman from California, I would respectfully call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the reduction in schools must be a saving of public funds.

Mr. CARTER. And it is a limitation.

Mr. HICKS. Yes; and the gentleman speaks of the matter of transportation. It seems to me it would be cheaper to educate the children in one general school than in a thousand schools scattered all over the country. For that reason it seems to me that this is a saving of public money, and it comes under the provisions of the Holman rule.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. That would be true if the language here would carry out what the gentleman has suggested, but this language directs what the Secretary shall do. It is legislation.

Mr. HICKS. But for the purpose of saving money.

Mr. DOWELL. It is not only limitation but it is a direction that he shall do certain things.

Mr. HICKS. It would save the public funds.

Mr. DOWELL. It has no relation whatever to this appropriation. It may not save money and it may. That is purely a speculation, but the question arises that this is permanent. If you direct him to do certain things, that is permanent law and it has nothing to do with a limitation on this appropriation.

Mr. HICKS. I can not concede that at all.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman speaks of its being legislation. The gentleman does not question that this committee could have brought in an appropriation bill specifying how much money, item by item, should be expended as to all of these schools, does he?

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman can do this: He can limit this appropriation to any amount that he sees fit.

Mr. CRAMTON. And can itemize——

Mr. DOWELL. And can take all of it away, which will close the schools——

Mr. CRAMTON. And itemize by schools where it can be used, and the next year provide an entirely different itemization?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; but you can not direct the Secretary as to a matter of legislation which does not affect this appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. If that is true, then no limitation would be in order upon an appropriation bill, because every limitation would prevent somebody from using certain funds. What does it say? It says that none of these reservation schools having less than 45 and 80 pupils, respectively, shall be operated during that fiscal year, to wit, none of these funds shall be used for that purpose during that fiscal year, the fiscal year of 1924, the very year that this bill deals with.

Now, what does that language mean? It means that no money shall be spent for these schools during the year 1924. You could not make it any plainer even by adding "Provided, That no funds shall be used for these schools for the year 1924." It is certainly a limitation which the House has the right to put upon the Secretary if it thinks necessary. Otherwise we shall never be able to effect any economy by our legislation here.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman does not need to appropriate from this committee. This is not an appropriation. This is a direction.

Mr. CARTER. The appropriation here in the first part of the item is $1,799,500, to be used how? To be used according to specifications to be laid out in the bill later, and one of which is that none of these reservation schools having less than 45 and 80 pupils, respectively, shall be operated during that fiscal year, to wit, that none of these funds shall be used for that purpose during that fiscal year. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, about the Secretary having the right to suspend any school he wants to at any time.

Mr. DOWELL. Then why does the gentleman direct him to do a thing that you say he has authority to do without the direction?

Mr. CARTER. Just for the reason that if we were to find that he was spending money wrongfully, say, in pensions or in irrigation or in anything; if we thought an irrigation project, for instance, should be stopped, we could say, "Provided, That no money shall be expended on that particular project for the year 1924." That is what we do in this item respecting schools.

Mr. DOWELL. You say he has already authority to do this, and if that is so, it is not necessary.

Mr. CARTER. We are limiting it to the extent that we keep the appropriation out entirely and do not allow him to use any funds for it.

Mr. DOWELL. No; you are not cutting out the appropriation; you are directing him to do certain things that have no relation with this appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. We say just as plainly as we can that these schools shall be suspended. There can not be an appropriation for them if they are suspended. That is as clearly a limitation as the English language could make it.

Mr. HICKS. In other words, if that proviso were not in there, there would have to be some money in there?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; to take care of those schools. I remember the distinguished former Speaker of this House, Champ Clark, in deciding a point of order, said if you wanted to you could provide that a certain amount of money shall not be paid to a red-headed school-teacher.

Mr. DOWELL. There is no question about that proposition, but that is not the proposition we have here.

Mr. CARTER. That is the fact. The gentleman has not analyzed the entire item. If he would analyze the entire item he would see that this does only one thing, to wit, it does not permit any expenditure for these schools during the year 1924.

Mr. DOWELL. No; the gentleman is not limiting this appropriation. If he were doing that only, that would be in order without a direction. But you are directing the Secretary to do certain things which have nothing to do with this appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. What are we trying to do? To suspend certain schools. If you suspend certain schools, it means there will be no money used on those schools, and there is no appropriation for them.

Mr. HICKS. And we are saving money?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question raised by this point of order is not altogether clear. The language of the act of Congress approved November 2, 1921, was very broad and general in its character. The act provides:

> That the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the benefit, care, and subsistence of the Indians throughout the United States, for the following purposes: General support and civilization, including education.

Now, then, an appropriation is here provided of a certain amount of money, the language being "for support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for," and the language which follows is very general, as the committee will see: "Other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith." In other words, the language of the provision of this appropriation bill is intended to be, and is, in accordance with the general law.

Now, various provisions are inserted following that general appropriation and following that general statement of the purpose, among others the following:

> That all reservation and nonreservation boarding schools with an average attendance of less than 45 and 80 pupils, respectively, shall be discontinued on or before the beginning of the fiscal year 1925.

It might appear very well, if we do not go rather deeply into the proposition, that that would constitute a change in the existing law, because of the fact that whereas the general law gave to the Secretary the discretion with regard to disbursements of funds in this way, this provision might seem to limit that general discretion. However, I am inclined to think that it would be not within the stated purpose of the general law to give that sort of an interpretation to this provision and the others which follow; and I do that upon this broad and general ground: The statement here is that "the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes: General support, including education." Now, here we have a proviso which says that this appropriation shall not be used for a particular class of schools during the year for which this appropriation is to be used. The Chair thinks that would clearly, generally speaking, be within the power of the Congress, and certainly within the scope of the provision of the general act which is made for this particular purpose. That being the case, the Chair feels that he is justified in overruling the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: On page 22, line 25, after the figures "$1,799,500," add the following:

"Provided further, That no part of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended for any purpose not directly connected with the education of Indian children."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent first to modify the amendment by striking out the word "further," which is unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, this brings up the question which my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and I had up a few minutes ago regarding the possibility of expending money out of this "Support of Indian schools" item for other purposes than those directly connected with Indian schools.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman said "farmers," did he not?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I said "farmers."

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman consider that the farmers and stockmen who teach the Indians to farm and raise stock are not directly connected with their education?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman made a different statement——

Mr. CARTER. I am not making any statement. I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Oklahoma is right, then, of course, there should be no hesitation about the adoption of this amendment, which provides that no part of this appropriation shall be spent for any purpose other than that directly connected with the schools. I say it is possible under this appropriation to pay out the money for farmers, stockmen, matrons, relieving distress, and other purposes which are already provided for in special items.

Now, let me prove exactly what I am saying by quoting from pages 350 and 351 of the special investigation of the Indian Bureau held by the Indian Affairs Committee of the Sixty-sixth Congress. I was a member of the committee then and had a somewhat active part in that inquiry.

Here is the statement of Mr. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

Mr. MERITT. From an administrative standpoint we think that there are too many items in the Indian bill. Practically every administrative official that I have met in Washington believes that appropriations for his bureau or department should be in as near lump-sum form as possible, so that he can administer those funds to meet the needs as they may arise. We realize that Congress has an objection to that form of making appropriations. The Indian bill is a matter of growth covering a long period of years, and we are required under the law to follow the form of the bill of the previous year. I think it could be very materially improved upon, and at the same time Congress could keep track of the moneys appropriated. The bill is somewhat misleading to a Member who has not had long experience on the Indian Committee. For example, we will have an appropriation for the support and civilization of the Klamath Reservation in Oregon, including pay of employees, $6,000. That would imply to an uninformed Member of Congress that that was all the money that we used for administrative purposes on that reservation, when in fact we use a very much larger amount than is stated in the bill. We not only use that fund but we take money out of the general funds in the bill for various activities.

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. Meritt, let me ask you, can you use funds from a general fund for a purpose for which a specific appropriation is made under the law?

Mr. MERITT. Where there is a specific appropriation for a specific purpose we are not permitted to supplement that appropriation by any other fund. For example, where we have an appropriation for a nonreservation school we would not be permitted to use any of the general appropriation for school support to supplement the specific appropriation for a nonreservation school. * * *

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. Meritt, what do you use that $6,000 for; for the Klamaths?

Mr. MERITT. We use it for administrative purposes on the Klamath Reservation.

Mr. CARTER. Can you take here from the general administrative appropriation any funds to use for administrative purposes there?

Mr. MERITT. We could take from the Indian school support.

Mr. CARTER. But that is not answering the question. My question was: Could you take it from the general administration item in the bill?

Mr. SNYDER. That support of the Indian schools is a general administrative item.

Mr. MERITT. We have no fund that is known as the general administrative item. These items are particularized for school support. For example, we could use a part of the lump-sum appropriation for school support in maintaining schools on that reservation; we could use part of the appropriation for relieving distress, for maintaining physicians on that reservation. We could use part of the appropriation for the farmers in paying the salary of a farmer on that reservation.

Mr. CARTER. But you could not do it if you had a specific appropriation for any of those purposes, could you?

Mr. MERITT. No, sir.

Mr. ELSTON. That is exactly what I wanted to find out. By reason of the elasticity of some of these general appropriations would you say that the bureau has authority to institute new activities and create new functions and corresponding new positions without authorization of Congress?

Mr. MERITT. We can create new positions on Indian reservations without authority from Congress, but we must keep within the appropriations authorized by Congress in the total expenditure of funds.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SNYDER). Isn't that one of the invisible reasons for this 6,000 employees here who have gradually grown on the roll without Congress being advised that they were being worked into the service?

Mr. MERITT. The growth of the service has been gradual and the appropriations for the service have gradually increased, and as the activities of the service in the field increase the bureau would come to Congress and ask for increased appropriations. For example, in the Sioux country, before the allotments were made, there was not very much activity on those reservations, but since the allotments have been made and the property prorated among the Indians there has been necessarily a very greatly increased amount of work, and we have accordingly been required to ask for a larger appropriation.

I made the statement, Mr. Chairman, that it was possible to take out of this lump sum for the support of schools money for other purposes, and Mr. Meritt, who is in charge of the bill before the committee on behalf of the bureau, corroborates my statement.

Mr. CARTER. From what report is the gentleman reading?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Indian investigation of the Sixty-sixth Congress, when the committee reviewed the appropriation bill for 1920, page 351.

Mr. CARTER. The report or the hearings?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The hearings before the committee.

Mr. CARTER. I still maintain, Mr. Chairman, that if Mr. Meritt made any such statement as that he was mistaken, just as the gentleman from Pennsylvania is.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will yield, yes; although the gentleman would not yield to me a moment ago.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman started the precedent, and I will not take the gentleman's time now if he objects.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAMTON. I want to ask the gentleman if he has before him the language of the appropriation bill to which that statement of Mr. Meritt purports to refer.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; it was section 20 of the bill for 1920, for the support and civilization of the Klamath Agency, Oreg., including pay for employees, $6,000. On that item the whole question came up, and Mr. Meritt said that, instead of being used for schools, the money could be used for these other purposes. Now, we desire to have this money spent for schools—and I do desire it, for I believe the right kind of school is the civilizing agency for the Indian. I should like to see this money, which is $124,000 more than we appropriated last year, spent for the Indian children, to give them an education, so that they may become a part of the American community and not have the bureau take out of this lump-sum appropriation money to be used for the relief of distress when they have a large appropriation for the relief of distress. I do not want to see the money used for the payment of stockmen and farmers when there is already a large appropriation for the payment of stockmen and farmers.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman let me see that hearing?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have it copied here. I will get the printed copy of the hearing.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I should like two minutes more.

Mr. MURPHY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania is quite well aware that every item appropriated for in this bill has been calculated, and the number of students attending each school is itemized, and every dollar has been accounted for as the representatives of the Indian Bureau came before this committee and asked for it. Every item in this particular part of this bill is protected by that sort of information which is in this book that we referred to. Every item has been specified and every expenditure has been itemized as it came before the committee, and it has been pared down. Where there was a possibility of fluctuation in the numbers of those attending the schools from day to day we took the benefit of the doubt, and we cut them down. So I do not believe the gentleman could find the possibility of diverting these funds into some other channel.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman has the Book of Estimates, which is the all-powerful word in this matter, let me ask him to tell me what has been done with the money appropriated last year under Indian school support?

Mr. MURPHY. I was not on the committee last year. I am a new man on the committee, but my observation so far is that this Indian Bureau have brought the figures in and put their cards on the table face up. I want to say to gentlemen on the floor that if every department of the Government was as honestly administered as is the Indian Bureau we would see the Government's tax money well expended.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am making no objection to the honesty of the bureau for years. I am calling attention to the inaccuracies and inefficiency of the bureau. Commissioner Burke is a splendid commissioner, but he is not as big as the system which is 91 years old. It is bigger than Commissioner Sells or Commissioner Burke or any man put in that position. I say the money should be spent for schools, and my proviso is that it shall be expended for no purpose except that connected with the Indian children.

Mr. MURPHY. Again I want to say to my dear friend from Pennsylvania that we are just one jump ahead of him. The Indian Bureau appropriation for schools is based on the per capita attendance at each and every one of these schools, and the salaries of each and every teacher is enumerated, and every dollar of the Indian money has been protected as far as honest and intelligent effort could protect it. I think the gentleman's motion at this time is unnecessary.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If I may have a moment more, I would like to say that in this bill there are appropriated over $5,000,000, and I am in favor of the money being expended for the education of the children, and I am interested in the way the money was spent last year. If the Book of Estimates shows how the money was spent and the schools upon which it was spent, then it will be shown if any money was expended for the relief of other purposes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Was Mr. Meritt's contention before the committee that the money could be spent for other than school purposes under the language used in this particular paragraph?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Absolutely; and I presume because of industrial purposes.

Mr. CARTER. It does not say industrial purposes; it says industrial schools.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It is broad language.

Mr. BURTNESS. It is not as broad as the language in the bill of 1920.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It is a case where the language is made very broad.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has read from some hearing in 1920, prior to the adoption of the Snyder Act in 1921. He quotes Mr. Meritt as stating under the language of the appropriation bill of that year that the money could be taken out of the support of schools and used for some other purpose not connected with the schools. Now, I asked the gentleman as to whether he had before him the language in the appropriation act of that year showing the language in the item under which Mr. Meritt said that could be done.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not understand my question and quoted another provision of the bill. I challenge the gentleman to produce the language of the bill corresponding to the item before us. I am safe in saying that under the language now in the bill, and put into this bill to conform to the Snyder Act, no money can be used for industrial purposes except in connection with the Indian aid to industrial schools. Now, I do not care what language he proposes to put in, he can only lumber up the paragraph; he can not make it any more clear than it now reads. What the paragraph was three or four years ago I do not know; the gentleman has not read it to the House. The money will not be used for industrial purposes except in connection with the schools, and we want them to teach the Indians how to care for stock and other industrial pursuits.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows there is a provision covering the industrial work in the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Apart from the schools, yes; but the money appropriated in this paragraph could not be used except in connection with the schools.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is what I am trying to do by this amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to read the language that was used as a basis for appropriation before the committee two or three years ago and upon which the interpretation was made by Mr. Meritt. The language now which the gentleman from Pennsylvania hands me as having been the language referred to reads as follows:

For support and civilization of Indians of the Klamath Agency, Oreg., including pay of employees—

And so forth.

If the gentlemen of the House will turn to page 58 of the present bill they will find precisely the same language:

For support and civilization of Indians of the Klamath Agency, including pay of employees—

And so forth.

The statement of Commissioner Meritt as to that language was absolutely right. That would be right under the language in this bill on page 58, but it would be absolutely wrong as applying to the language we are now considering on page 22. This language on page 22 provides that the appropriation may be made for support of Indians and industrial schools not otherwise provided for.

In this paragraph we have provided for schools not specifically referred to in the bill. There are many of them, many of 1 teacher and 20 to 30 pupils. In the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs will be found eight pages reciting the names and location of these schools and the number of children in attendance. Under the general law and through the provisions added to the paragraph we think we have thrown safeguards around the administration of the amount carried in the bill. Here we could not go into great detail with any particular profit. But when it came to other of the larger schools we called for comprehensive statements.

If the gentlemen of the House will be interested in turning to the hearings, not necessarily this big volume of estimates furnished to us by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs but the hearings themselves, they will find that following every particular item there will be a very closely itemized detailed statement of where these moneys were expended during the present fiscal year. For instance, on page 395, there is an Indian school in North Dakota—Wahpeton. There we have an appropriation of $46,800 for the present fiscal year. We have here in the hearings 2 pages indicating in detail the various items included in the general total of figures that I have given, indicating salaries, wages, traveling expenses, transportation of supplies, and so forth, salary of the superintendent, financial clerk, teachers, principal, children enrolled, average attendance, and so on in as full detail as it would seem anyone could possibly desire.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In a case of this kind where a department of the Government has submitted estimates to the committee showing how it proposes to expend this money, the department would not necessarily be bound by those figures, would it?

Mr. FRENCH. Those are estimates used as the basis for requests for appropriations. This is the policy that is followed by our committee: If a department shows that it has abused the trust of the Congress in failing to expend the moneys appropriated for the purposes indicated, the appropriations may not be made at all, and are not apt to be made for a succeeding year without a thorough understanding, and maybe not without a recital in the law itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the department found it necessary and useful to shift those appropriations from one institution to another, and it is of the same general object, I presume the committee would not complain?

Mr. FRENCH. We would complain, and, in fact, that would be impossible under the form in which this bill is written, because we make appropriations direct for the several Indian schools other than the small amounts that are carried generally in the bill for such purposes, as the chairman of the committee indicated awhile ago.

Mr. MADDEN. And it would be considered a breach of confidence on the part of the department to deviate from the understanding it had with the committee, and there would be retribution as the result of that breach.

Mr. FRENCH. There is no question about that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. FRENCH. And let me say this, that the language proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], if it were to be construed in connection with the language used in the discussion, might hamper the department where it ought not to be hampered. For instance, in several of these schools there are gardens where a great amount of produce is raised annually for the support of the children within those schools. This goes to the cutting down of the expense of maintaining the schools. Unquestionably, in my judgment, the moneys could be used and properly used for the purpose of handling that work, which is ancillary to the conduct of the school itself, the schooling of the children in agriculture on the one hand and helping to cut down expense of maintenance on the other. I think the language goes too far, and while I do not think in general that the language perhaps vitiates the spirit in which this bill is written, and which will be followed in administration by the department, I do think it might lead to trouble in the expenditures of money provided for.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section, and offer that as a pro forma amendment.

This bill carries for this item of support of Indian schools, $1,799,500, which is $124,500 more than the item was in the bill for the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and $227,757 more than it was in the bill for the preceding fiscal year ending in 1922. The amendment which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] sought a few moments ago to have adopted would require next year in the estimates a detailed statement by the Commissioner of the Indian Bureau of how he was going to expend this vast sum of money. In defeating the gentleman's amendment, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] produced this volume of estimates which I have in my hand, and because of its great size they thought that it would overwhelm the gentleman from Pennsylvania as evidence of the fact that there has been a detailed statement. Let us look at the book and see what the book contains as to a detailed statement of this expense of $1,799,500. Here is what it says:

Indian school, support: Analysis of expenditure.

Here is one of the detailed statements that the commissioner gives to Congress for us to pass on:

Miscellaneous, $11,071.

Can the gentleman from Ohio tell us what the $11,000 is spent for under the head of miscellaneous? What does "Miscellaneous" embrace? Then there is "Outstanding liabilities, $107,219." What are these outstanding liabilities? Is the gentleman from Ohio prepared to answer? Is there a detailed statement for it? The gentleman from Pennsylvania was right when he sought to have a detailed statement put into this record. Then they have this:

Fuel and lubricants, etc., $100,000.

That is a pretty high amount to be specified under those few words.

Mr. CRAMTON. Is there not light and power as well?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; fuel, lubricants, power, and light service. Then there is the item of dry goods, $118,000, and there is transportation of supplies, $60,000, which are rather indefinite.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. That is pretty general, is it not?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that they do not specify how much they are going to spend for calico and how much for gingham and how much for linen?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, that is facetious. It does not state in this great big volume how many teachers they have. That is what we want to know. It does not state how much salary they draw. That is what we want to know. We want to know how many teachers they have or how much they are paid, what is the maximum and what is the minimum, and we want to know what this "miscellaneous" is and the other very indefinite large items unitemized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us turn to the last item we passed on a few minutes ago, relieving distress, prevention of disease, and so forth. Let us see how they itemize that. "Miscellaneous, $3,172.51." What is this miscellaneous? Then they have "Outstanding liabilities, $32,600." What are the outstanding liabilities? In what way and for what did they incur these debts that they want money now to pay?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is there anything in that book to show where the money was spent?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I challenge the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] now to show us in this book how many teachers they have for which they are expending in part $1,799,500, or what salaries are shown in this book as paid to teachers? You can not show it at all. The committee has failed after all to have detailed estimates. The committee is not one jump in front of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]. The committee is just about 20 jumps behind him, if the truth were known; and because he is not a member of the committee, these five stalwart Members of the House who constitute the subcommittee ought to be willing to take a suggestion when it is sane from the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has studied this question, and not defeat his amendment by mere force, because they have the strength to do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do so only long enough to say, because this record must be correct, that the $1,750,000 to which the speaker referred several times is not $1,750,000, but is in fact $1,799,500 in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, when the time comes I want to say a few words on the provisos found on page 23, lines 3 to 13. This amendment but indicates the situation. It is unfortunate that some of the schools are not visited by the officials of the department or even by the committee. They do not see them all by any means.

Here is a provision that I want to call your attention to: A school with 79 pupils. Under this law it will have to be abandoned, with an expenditure of $50,000 on behalf of the Government. Another one, a reservation school of 40 pupils, will have to be abandoned under this bill, with an expenditure already of possibly $60,000 or $70,000.

These are things that we know to exist. I have seen them. And yet they talk about that being economy.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield, of course.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman, of course, is aware of the fact that the proviso he speaks of has been carried in the bill for several years, and the schools have already been closed, except there might be an occasional one that would come within the limit which has not yet been closed.

Mr. RAKER. There is one that I speak of, and as to that, of course, I speak advisedly; I am personally familiar with it. We talk about being humane. We talk about legislating in such a humane way for these Indians. Here a school is closed where there are 79 pupils, with an expenditure already on behalf of the Government of, say, $50,000. These Indian pupils must be sent away, not in the discretion of the department, but the Secretary must transfer them to certain other schools, as the provision provides. The pupils in schools so discontinued shall be transferred.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman has in mind the closing of the school at Greenville, in the gentleman's district?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman understands that that school has never been appropriated for under this item?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I know. That is the reason why I am taking a little opportune time on the question of education. I saw a school in Nevada where they sent some of these pupils from California. They sent some of these pupils up into a reservation in Oregon. They sent some of them into northern California. They sent some of them down to southern California, at the Riverside Institute. The Government pays for this expense.

Mr. CARTER. These children are taken from near their homes. Does the gentleman from California say these pupils were sent a thousand miles?

Mr. RAKER. That was a hypothetical question. But I think you can figure that the distance from Greenville Institute down to the Sherman Institute is, as I guess, about 700 miles by travel. I have traveled from northern California to San Diego—and that is by the only way we could travel—and it was eleven hundred and odd miles.

Mr. CARTER. It is not the language of the law that the gentleman ought to complain about, but it is the noncompliance with the language. The language is as plain as it can be.

Mr. RAKER. They shall be sent, first, to an Indian day school. You shut up one of those schools and then send them to a State public school. The gentleman and myself knows that the people are not in a position to bear this burden, although they are struggling to give to the Indians all the assistance that they can, but they do not believe the Indians should be sent to the same school with the white children. It is not right and proper. You compel the Secretary of the Interior to do this.

Next to the adjacent reservation or nonreservation boarding schools, to the limit of the capacity of said school; and when you get to the limit, then poor little Mr. Indian does not get any consideration. You can figure on all the good things and you can say all the nice things you want, but I have been there and I have seen them, and I know what I am talking about. I have seen the Indian schools in Oregon and in Nevada and in California. I do not care to have you tell me what is done in these Indian schools and these day schools. I have seen them in the last 30 years, and I know their conditions of my personal knowledge.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. What becomes of the pupils where the schools are discontinued?

Mr. RAKER. There is a nonreservation school at Greenville, Calif. There are 28 public buildings there, property that has probably cost $100,000 to the Government. You have an attendant there looking after it. They had a public building there for general school purposes. That was burned down by accident. Would the Congress or the Government pay out the money necessary to rebuild that school which was burned down by fire caused by an act of God? No; but they sent those pupils to Oregon and Nevada and scattered them over California. That is the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object—and I do not wish to object—the gentleman knows we are proceeding by courtesy of the House.

Mr. RAKER. I do. That is true, but I have taken only a little time, and if I can have five minutes now, I will not take so much time when we get to the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON. Am I correct in understanding that where there are less than 8 children to attend a day school on a reservation, then the children are sent to a distance to be educated?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; they are scattered broadcast like a bunch of quail, depending a good deal on the feeling of the local superintendent. Some of them will be picked up and sent to Oregon.

Mr. WATSON. If there are more than 8 children they are taught on the home reservation, and if there are less than 8 then they are sent away.

Mr. RAKER. Yes. For instance let us go back to the Greenville Indian School, located in a delightful part of the State of California, in the home of the Indians, who have been there since before the first white men came there, some of the older people and their descendants. They held lands there which, of course, have been taken from them. They are trying to become civilized, and are doing the best they can.

These Indian pupils come from within a short distance of this school. The school was built there by the Government at the request of the Indians and of the other people. Unfortunately the main building burned down in December, 1921. There are 28 public buildings remaining there to-day going to waste and destruction. Those Indian children were sent, some of them to Oregon, some to northern California, some to southern California, some to Nevada; and I think, although I will not make the statement positively, that some of them were sent to Arizona—two or three of them. Now, that is not a question of economy.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman contend that the reservation and nonreservation boarding schools are better than the Indian day schools?

Mr. RAKER. They are all pretty good if they are properly taken care of.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The boarding schools take them away from actual home surroundings and really Americanize them?

Mr. RAKER. They are both good, but I am very much in favor of the day schools. I am in favor of the boarding schools also, because they are both doing good work, but the nearer you can keep these children among their home people, where they do not have to go too far to get an education and to know how to do things in a civilized way when they go back and live with their parents, and then come to school every day; that is what you want, because I want to tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] that you can not take one of these Indian pupils away from his relatives and his tribe for five years and then send him back home expecting to get anything out of him. Any man who knows anything about human nature knows that, and when they write that they are going to civilize the Indians by taking them away for four or five years, that is all nonsense, unless you give him some care and attention after they leave school. You can not turn them loose like so many birds. The thing to do is to give them a chance to do the matters they will come in contact with in after life, and they should know something about this while they are getting a book education.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Let me read from page 137 of the hearings on this bill a statement of Commissioner Burke, in which he says that children in the reservation schools do not acquire the English language as they do if they go away from the reservation.

He says:

> If you go to a reservation school and you hear them recite or you listen to a little program, you can tell right away that they have not been to school anywhere except in that one place. They do not broaden. They do not acquire the English as they acquire it if they get away from the reservation. Another thing which you can readily see: If a child goes to a school, we will say a day school or a public school, he goes at 9 o'clock in the morning and leaves for home at 4. He goes into an Indian home, and only Indian is spoken in the home, and necessarily he does not acquire English as rapidly as he would if he did not hear Indian or could not speak Indian when he was out of school.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. About what age are these children?

Mr. RAKER. They run from 7 to 15 years of age. Now, anyone knows that an Indian, unless he is living with some of his people——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for one minute.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has called my attention to a statement where I used as an illustration the Wahpeton School as being suggestive of the items in this paragraph which we are discussing. If it had that implication at all, it should not have had, because we will come to that item in a later paragraph. I would say that in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs there are eight pages that give, name by name, the schools all of which are included in this particular item that we have under consideration, not only showing the names but showing the number of pupils in each particular school.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I ask that the gentleman have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Idaho may proceed for another minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to get the record absolutely straight, because I believe the gentleman made a statement which was inaccurate. He made the statement that in this Book of Estimates there is a complete itemization of all the moneys in this general fund. He now states that it is given in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not give $1 of the expenditure on these reservations. It shows the number of pupils attending, the number eligible, and the capacity of the school, but it does not show the amount of money spent, and that is what I was trying to get.

Mr. FRENCH. It gives the statement in a general way, touching the schools in this list, so far as this amount is concerned.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. But not on the reservations?

Mr. FRENCH. No. Not as to this.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. I offer an amendment on page 23, in line 3, to strike out all after the word "children," commencing with the word "provided," down to and including the word "schools" in line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 33, line 3, after the word "children," strike out all down to and including the word "schools" in line 13, page 23.

Mr. CARTER. I call attention to the fact that the word "schools" appears twice in line 13, on page 23.

Mr. RAKER. I refer to the last word "schools" in that line.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 23, line 11, after the word "to," strike out the words "Indian day schools or."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the proviso here provides that where these schools are discontinued, the pupils shall be transferred, first, if possible, to Indian day schools, or to public schools, and then to adjacent reservation or nonreservation boarding schools. As far as the other proviso is concerned, about the discontinuance of these day schools, it is rather farcical, when we remember that exactly the same provision was carried in the bill last year. That was for the fiscal year 1923. Now, exactly the same provision is carried for the fiscal year 1924. There is only one reason to-day for that in my estimation, and that is that once these Indian bills are framed they keep going year after year without subtraction, but always with additions. There are no schools having such a small attendance, so that that proviso is entirely unnecessary. But the question as to whether or not these children should be put in the day school is important. Commissioner Burke made a fine statement before the committee, in which he went further than I have. He said that this thought had been impressed on him within the last few years, that he had come in contact with many graduates of the old Carlisle schools; and wherever they might be, or whatever happened, there was one thing they did possess, and that was a complete mastery of the English language. They spoke that as well as we speak it.

Now, that is essential in connection with the civilization of the Indians. The Indian day school is exactly the opposite. I have seen a letter from a teacher of a day school in Arizona in which it is reported that the conditions were shocking; that the children came to school covered with lice, and it was necessary for the teacher to disinfect them; and then they would go back to the sheep blanket and come back in the same condition.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman makes a distinction between the Indian day school on the reservation and the Indian day school off the reservation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Well, the day school on the reservation is the one to which I refer. Mr. Burke has protested against it, and I think anyone familiar with it would rather see the children taken to the nonreservation boarding school than the day school on the reservation. My amendment changes the preference and makes the public schools the first preference if there are pupils transferred on account of the discontinuance of schools.

I submit that if the Indians could be put in the public schools—all of them—they would get the genius of our institutions and know the meaning of American ideals better than through tribal segregated schools. There are no graduates from the reservation day schools that can interpret for an American to an Indian or from Indian to American. Why? Because they do not have the American language, and without the American language they can not become real Americans.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes a great deal for granted when he says that the committtee left language in the bill for no purpose. It shows that the gentleman has not studied the question that he discusses.

This item was in the bill last year. For what purpose? For the purpose of discontinuing all schools where the attendance fell below the point of 45 or 80 during the current fiscal year. It is in the bill this year for the same reason; that is, to force the discontinuance of schools falling below 45 or 80 during the next fiscal year. If the attendance falls below 45 or 80 they ought to be discontinued. My friend from California [Mr. RAKER], who is trying to interrupt me, seems to have a grouch about the Greenville school. I want to call attention to the fact that the Greenville school was the most expensive experiment the United States ever undertook with education of Indian children, and the gentleman from California knows it, because the sum per capita for the time it ran cost more than any other school we ever had. Now, there is a purpose for having all these things in the bill. No nonreservation boarding school ought to be conducted with less than 80 pupils and no reservation boarding school should continue with attendance less than 45. It has been found that schools with such a small attendance are more expensive. They entail a much greater per capita cost. We have to keep the overhead expense going just the same as for a larger school. Therefore these things have not been left in the bill by any haphazard methods. They are there for a purpose, and that purpose is economy and efficiency.

I am surprised that my friend from California says that children have been carried—I think he said 2,000 miles at first, but amended that statement later by cutting it down to 800 miles—I think the gentleman must be mistaken about that, because the bill is perfectly plain in its direction. It says that pupils shall be transferred first to the Indian day school and then the day public schools, and second to the adjacent reservation or non-reservation schools. If they have been carrying children across one reservation to another, if they have been carrying them from one school to another farther on, then the law has been violated and the gentleman's complaint is not against the committee, not against the law, but against the administration of the law.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will yield, I never made any complaint against the committee. I am trying to get results, and I hope when I try to present a matter here the committee will not think that I am against the committee. I am not against the committee or any individual. I love you all.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I thought that the gentleman wanted to ask a question. I have no time for the gentleman's felicitations. I took no offense at anything he said. My hide, like his, is thicker than an alligator's skin. I am trying to present this matter with what little emphasis there may be at my command to show to the members of the committee that these things were put in here with a purpose and what that purpose is.

Now, my friend from Pennsylvania has had some derogatory remarks to make about the day schools. While much can be said for the boarding school, the day schools also serve their purpose, and the value of that purpose can not be denied. The child leaves his house and comes to the day school about 8.30 to 9 o'clock in the morning. It returns to the little Indian home about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. When he returns to the cabin or tepee he carries with him some of the education, some of the civilization he has absorbed during the day. His mother, father, and other members of the family have an opportunity to observe and absorb a part of that; so the day school carries its civilizing influence beyond that which the pupil itself attains on to all other members of the family and to the tribe.

Just as strong a defense of the day school can be made on the grounds of economy. It costs a little above $2 per month to keep the average Indian child in the day school, while it costs about $25 at the boarding school. At this rate 10 may be educated in day schools for the cost of 1 in a boarding school. Then, again, the child in the day school is not wholly dependent on the Government for everything. He returns home for his meals, his parents furnish his clothes, he is in a more independent environment, and his parents are not completely relieved of all responsibility for his conduct, demeanor, and subsistence.

The public school is, of course, the ultimate goal where the Indian youth may be educated alongside his white brother. But until the Indian child is properly equipped, until public schools are available, the Indian schools must be continued; and the day school and the boarding school both have their place in the general scheme. Neither interferes with the other. It would be more proper to say one is the natural complement of the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDIAN SCHOOL AND AGENCY BUILDINGS.

For construction, lease, purchase, repair, and improvement of school and agency buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $350,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of salaries and expenses of persons employed in the supervision of construction or repair work of roads and bridges and on school and agency buildings in the Indian Service: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allow employees in the Indian Service, who are furnished quarters, necessary heat and light for such quarters without charge, such heat and light to be paid for out of the fund chargeable with the cost of heating and lighting other buildings at the same place: And provided further, That the amount so expended for agency purposes shall not be included in the maximum amounts for compensation of employees prescribed by section 1, act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the proviso.

Mr. CRAMTON. Against all three of the provisos?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. On what grounds?

Mr. RAKER. Legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. We will consider the point of order as pending. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13559 and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 4172. An act to authorize the building of a bridge across the Great Pee Dee River, in South Carolina; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3295. An act to consolidate the work of collecting, compiling, and publishing statistics of the foreign commerce of the United States in the Department of Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on December 23 they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills and joint resolutions:

H. R. 12174. An act to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary;

H. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to permit to remain within the United States certain aliens admitted temporarily under bond in excess of quotas fixed under authority of the immigration act of May 19, 1921; and

H. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act of February 25, 1919, allowing credit for military service during the war with Germany in homestead entries, and of Public Resolution No. 29, approved February 14, 1920, allowing preferred right of entry for at least 60 days after the date of opening in connection with lands opened or restored to entry to citizens of the United States who served with the allied armies during the World War.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 28, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

853. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend section 3 of the act approved September 14, 1922 (Public Law No. 299, 67th Cong.); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

854. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report showing what officers of the Government were delinquent for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1921, in rendering or transmitting their accounts, together with a list of such officers as were found upon final settlement of their accounts to be indebted to the Goverament and who at the date of making this report have not paid such indebtedness into the Treasury of the United States (H. Doc. No. 519); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

855. A letter from the national commander of the American Legion, transmitting report of proceedings of the American Legion for the year 1922; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 13580) to authorize the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children to sell and convey certain real property in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is necessarily detained on account of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter which I have received from the President of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 27, 1922.

MY DEAR SENATOR LODGE: Replying to your inquiry relative to the proposed amendment to the pending naval bill authorizing and requesting the President to call an economic conference to deal with conditions in the war-torn nations of Europe I write to say that I know of no prohibition against such an expression on the part of the Congress, but I do frankly question the desirability of such an expression. I think it is undesirable because of the false impressions which may be conveyed thereby to Europe, and even more undesirable because of the wrong impression it conveys to our own people.

On the face of things it is equivalent to saying that the executive branch of the Government, which is charged with the conduct of foreign relations, is not fully alive to a world situation which is of deep concern to the United States. As a matter of fact, the European economic situation has been given most thorough and thoughtful consideration for many months. Without questioning the good faith of the proposal I am very sure it would have been more seemly, and the action of the Congress could be taken much more intelligently, if proper inquiry had been made of the State Department relative to the situation in which we are trying to be helpful.

Of necessity the communications of the State Department relative to delicate matters among nations can not be bulletined from day to day, but the situation is never withheld from Members of Congress who choose to inquire for confidential information in a spirit of cooperation. Such inquiry would have revealed the futility of any conference call until it is understood that such a conference would be welcomed by the nations concerned within the limits of discussion which the expressed will of Congress compels this Government to impose.

In ratifying the treaty of peace with Germany the Senate made a reservation that the United States should not be represented on the Reparations Commission without consent of Congress, and no such consent has been given. Moreover, in creating the World-War Debt Funding Commission that body was restricted to explicit terms for rates of interest and ultimate time of payment. If Congress really means to facilitate the task of the Government in dealing with the European situation, the first practical step would be to free the hands of the commission so that helpful negotiations may be undertaken.

It is quite generally accepted that the adjustment of the question of reparations must underlie any economic rehabilitation of Europe, and reparations can not be settled without the consent of governments concerned. The United States can not assume to say to one nation what it shall pay in reparations nor to another nation what it shall accept.

In discussions with foreign governments the previous administration and the present administration have insisted that the question of European debts to the United States is distinct and apart from the question of reparations, but European nations hold a contrary view, and it is wholly inconsistent to invite a conference for the consideration of questions in dealing with which the Government is denied all authority by act of Congress.

So far as the limitation of land armaments is concerned, there seems to be at this time no more promising prospect of accomplishment than when the conference was held in Washington a year ago. Here, again I venture to warn the Senate against the suggestion to our own people or a gesture of promise to the world which can not be fulfilled until the nations directly concerned express their readiness to cooperate to such an end.

With respect to a limitation of auxiliary types of naval craft, which are not limited by the present naval treaty, it is to be said that such an agreement is much to be desired, whenever practicable, but we may reasonably postpone our further endeavors along that line until the agreements made at the Washington conference secure the final sanction of all governments concerned.

Very truly yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

PETITIONS.

Mr. PHIPPS presented a resolution unanimously adopted at the member's council meeting of the Denver Civic and Commercial Association, favoring the enactment of legislation extending liberal and adequate credit facilities to farmers and stock raisers, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HALE presented a resolution adopted by the New York State Conference, National Society Daughters of the American Revolution, favoring the maintenance of a strong Navy adequate to the national defense, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Pontiac, Mich., praying that the United States protect the Armenians from persecution and massacre, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4235) granting consent of Congress to the Charlie Bridge Co. for constructon of a bridge across Red River between Clay County, Tex., and Cotton County, Okla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4236) granting a pension to Abner C. Hill (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 4237) to control the operation of motor vehicles in the District of Columbia, to provide for indemnity bonds or insurance policies, to fix penalties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4238) granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Wright; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 4239) authorizing officers who were retired for incapacity resulting from an incident of the service before July 1, 1922, to be given the same pay, according to longevity, as if retired after June 30, 1922; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 4240) granting a pension to John R. Scott; and

A bill (S. 4241) granting a pension to Fred D. Carlos; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKINLEY:

A bill (S. 4242) for the relief of Major V. Hampton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRANCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the so-called Borah amendment proposed to be submitted to House bill 13974, the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

In lines 2 and 3 strike out the words "such Governments as he may deem necessary or expedient," and substitute therefor the following:

"The States signatory of or adherent to the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes of July 24, 1899, and their successors and other States since recognized."

WOODROW WILSON'S BIRTHDAY.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, from all over the world, from the high and the low, from the rich and the poor, to-day are coming letters and cables congratulating our former President, Woodrow Wilson, on his birthday and rapid recovery of health. When every Member of this body has been forgotten, Woodrow Wilson's name will go down in history as the greatest man of this century. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I send to the desk may be given immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 386) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the Senate has heard with great pleasure the announcement of the rapid recovery to good health of former President Hon. Woodrow Wilson: Be it

Resolved, That the Vice President be requested to express to Hon. Woodrow Wilson the pleasure and joy of the Senate of the United States because of his rapid recovery to good health.

REPORT ON TUBERCULOSIS AMONG NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

Mr. SPENCER. On Friday last I presented a report on the condition of tuberculosis among the North American Indians, which was referred to the Committee on Printing. After consultation with the chairman of that committee I ask that the report be returned from that committee and be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMERICAN RELIEF IN RUSSIA (S. DOC. NO. 277).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a report by the Surgeon General of the Army showing the medicines, medical, surgical, and hospital supplies transferred to American relief organizations under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the President to transfer certain medical supplies for the relief of the distressed and famine-stricken people of Russia," approved January 20, 1922.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 28, 1922.

ADDRESS BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Mr. CAMERON. I present an address delivered by the Attorney General at Canton, Ohio, October 21, 1922, which I think deserves to be incorporated in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as follows:

[Address by the Attorney General of the United States, Hon. Harry M. Daugherty, at Canton, Ohio, October 21, 1922.]

"When law and order no longer remain as the guiding principles of all peoples and all institutions, then civilization is doomed to atavistic revolt."

"The freedom of speech guaranteed under the Constitution is not that freedom of speech which incites mob violence, destruction of life and property, and attacks on Government."

"LET US ALL SUPPORT THE GOVERNMENT THAT IS ALIKE TO ALL OF US"—JUSTICE AND EQUITY MUST BE DENIED NO CITIZEN OF THIS GREAT REPUBLIC.

(Hon. Harry M. Daugherty.)

Those charged with responsibility in the conduct of government, even though temporarily in office, should periodically be called upon and be willing to give an account of their stewardship. No politics can be practiced in the discharge of the duties of the Attorney General of the United States without interfering with the proper business of the Government and without discriminating between citizens and classes. This should never be, and it is not done in the present administration.

The people of the whole country are entitled to know accurately and honestly just what is being done in the interest of orderly government and better society. It is impossible, of course, for public officials to disclose all the intricate moves required in the proper management of a department. As in the case of the Department of Justice, for instance, it would be disastrous to make public indiscriminately what is being done in specific instances and cases, or what is in contemplation.

IMPORTANT MATTERS INVOLVED.

I do desire to present in a limited way—limited only because of limited time—several of the most important matters which are now engaging the attention of the Department of Justice and of your Government. All of us understand that a great Government, such as ours, can have no malice; it must be just, and it must be honest to all alike.

STEPS TO INVESTIGATE.

I want you to keep in mind that the war ended on November 11, 1918, and from that day until the 4th of March, 1921, responsibility of conducting the vitally important legal business of the Government rested upon the previous administration. The war being over, those in positions of responsibility should immediately have begun the work of settling the affairs of the Government in order that we might forget the horrors of the conflict, ascertain who had been helpful and who had been hurtful, square the accounts, and close the books. Nothing of this character was undertaken. No suits were brought to correct mistakes and enforce adjustments.

Until this administration was installed no attempt was made to dig out the acts of dishonesty that on every hand were charged not by those in politics but by well-meaning persons, regardless of politics, who were compelled to foot the bills. Stagnation prevailed, and multitudinous claims and unadjusted accounts of every caliber and description were piled high in one conglomerate mass when the present administration came in. Barbed-wire entanglements of modern warfare were simple as compared with the artfully contrived barricades thrown up in concrete form about the countless cases of national and international importance. But no word of criticism is heard of inactivity in this respect, because such conduct suited those who have been the most critical of the Department of Justice since much has been started and much has been done.

DUTY OF THE DEPARTMENT.

A great majority of the individuals and a great majority of the industrial concerns transacting business with the Government during the war period were honest in their representations and activities. Others, unfortunately, were not, and it was the duty of the Department of Justice as quickly as it could be done, as quietly and in as dignified a manner as it could be accomplished without sensationalism, to ascertain what transactions were honest and what dishonest; what persons grafted, if any, and who were to be placed on the golden roll of honor and beyond suspicion.

The Department of Justice, therefore, immediately began and is continuing to exercise in the interest of the Government and its people all of its great powers to see that justice may be kept alive. The war-fraud cases, under investigation by a corps of experts, representing the best legal minds obtainable within the limitations, and even far beyond the limitations because of their personal sacrifice, fixed in the appropriation for the payment of compensation, will be cleared up as rapidly as human energy can accomplish the stupendous task made so difficult through the complicated and inexcusable confusion attending all such war-time transactions.

VOICE OF CALUMNY RAISED.

Some disloyal and incompetent employees had to be ferreted out and kicked out. The records of the war transactions had to be built up from scraps of paper and the faulty memory of witnesses in many cases scattered over the world. Those who were under suspicion and with guilty conscience had been at work for months and years to prevent the day of reckoning.

Every known method of interference and intrigue had been adopted. There was no limit to their resources. Money improperly and criminaly secured in war transactions was more in amount for defense than the Government had for investigation and prosecution by civil and criminal proceedings. The scoundrels struck from behind. They hid behind willing or innocent tools, who were induced to make attacks on faithful agents and officers of the Government for the promised consideration of notoriety and spectacular and sensational temporary prominence. They had no regard for the Government; they had no regard for conscience; they had no regard for the character of any man in position, high or low, who in a painstaking way was trying to get at the truth, to protect the good name of the innocent on the one hand, and on the other trying to get dependable testimony to prove the fraud, if any, and to find who were actually the criminals. No name was sacred, and in fact no life was safe if it stood in the way of their escape.

CONGRESS AID INVOKED.

As soon as we could become acquainted with the persons with whom we were to be associated, the work was begun by the regular force. Others were added as the funds at the command of the department permitted. Without sensational announcement, published notice, or vainglorious promise, the work was thus started. Up to this moment, as the directing head of the Department of Justice, I have never, in public speech or in public print, mentioned the name of a man or a concern under investigation until court proceeding was properly instituted and the records of the proceeding had served as an announcement to the entire world. It is the duty of the Department of Justice to protect as well as prosecute. The department continued to do this important work quietly as long as it was permitted to do so.

As soon as it became known how effectively the work was going on, the storm broke. When all available funds of the department had been exhausted, Congress was asked for financial assistance. It was necessary to pass laws to make it possible to bring certain suits; extra grand juries had to be provided for so that the investigations might proceed; extra judges had to be authorized in order that the courts might get at the cases expeditiously.

Legislation for this purpose was compelled to take its course, but was hurried as rapidly as possible, and the last bill necessary for the prosecution of the department's fraud work has only recently become a law. The request for the appropriation of half a million dollars for use in this particular work was made of Congress at the very time when accusation and calumny, like poison gas, were being used to prejudice, to interfere with, and to defeat the purpose of the work. Yet at the time the storm broke and reached its greatest fury sufficient facts had been quietly presented to the committees of Congress to justify the appropriation asked for, and Congress made the appropriation without a single dissenting vote in either branch, thus giving the full initial amount requested for the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting the work.

ENEMIES BEHIND SMOKE SCREEN.

The opposition of the crooks was conducted behind a smoke screen of calumny created for their own escape, and the real reason for the attack was in every instance withheld. The very men against whom both civil and criminal proceedings have been brought were using the ignorant and the notoriety seeker to make charges in the open that nothing was being done by the Department of Justice. The real reason for their activity was the fact that things were being done. What did any man's reputation, his character, his life even, amount to if it stood in the way of their corrupt defense? But we have gone through it all, and still we are not afraid, and we will go on.

A congressional investigation was demanded. Why? Because they could then, as they thought, disorganize us and compel us to produce the evidence prematurely, and thus dissipate the Government's efforts to bring and try the cases in a dignified, orderly way before the courts of justice of the country. They have tried for months to force an investigation and trial of these cases before congressional committees that have no judicial authority and in the daily press. This we have not done. This we will never do, no matter what the temptation and no matter what the provocation, unless under the direction of Congress as expressed by duly authorized legislation we are compelled to scatter to the four winds the facts and evidence of the Government which would enable the guilty to escape civil and criminal liability.

NO TURNING BACKWARD.

We are going back to the day, thank God, when there is some hope and expectation that the world and the country will be in order, and precedent well and long established will be followed for the adjudication of differences between citizen and Government. It will take time, and it will take patience. The work will be done, and it will be done as thoroughly as human agency can do it.

The Government will never answer any attack made upon the responsible heads of its departments except in the orderly process of our dependable courts. The Government will not play into the hands of those who hope to be the undeserved beneficiaries of a premature showing of the hand of the Government in transactions which it is the Government's business to investigate and rectify.

More than 400 separate and distinct cases of tremendous magnitude, representing billions of dollars, now are undergoing a process of what might be termed liquidation. Recoveries will be made; many settlements will be made and have been made; and many transactions will be terminated successfully. I will not make promises that I do not think can be kept, and I want to say to the American people that the great unjustifiable financial loss, even considering the ravages of war, which the Government was compelled to sustain, can never be recovered, because, when the story of these contracts and transactions are truthfully written in the records of the Government, as they will be, it will be found that the greatest loss resulted from improperly made contracts wherein the interests of the Government were not properly protected, and improvident settlements too speedily made, and made without judgment, and made carelessly, recklessly, and possibly preferentially, but where actionable fraud, dishonesty, and conspiracy can not be specifically proven—all of which is necessary for conviction, and in most civil cases necessary for recovery.

MILLIONS SQUANDERED.

We are not picking at small things. We will only complain where complaint is justified. Many facts and disclosures attending this investigation indicate that hundreds of important contracts were entered into by the Government with great corporations and manufacturers without proper examination of conditions or requirements; without exercise of sound judgment; with carelessness and laxity that reflect no credit upon those agents of Government intrusted with authority to negotiate such contracts. Billions of dollars were squandered through this class of contracts—billions which never can be recovered.

United States attorneys throughout the country now have before them approximately 150 cases dealing with fraud in wartime transactions, and they are progressing with court action as rapidly as conditions permit. In Washington indictments already have been returned against 13 men who have been charged with complicity in attempts to defraud the Government at a time when all of our resources were so urgently needed for the prosecution of a war in which our sons by the millions were braving death in all its horror on the battle fields of Europe. Other indictments will follow in due course. It takes work and time, and several cases require more than a year and a half for preparation and investigation.

CAUTION IN ALL DETAILS.

I should like for the American people to know how painstakingly careful this investigation is being conducted. Attorneys who neither know, nor have now, or ever have had, any connection with those involved in the cases under investigation are endeavoring with all their skill to reach just, impartial, and scrupulously honest decisions in each individual case. When these separate cases are completed they are referred to what might be termed an advisory council, or court, which is composed of three of the most eminent legal scholars in America, who, after they have passed judgment, present their findings to the Attorney General.

Despite the infinitely careful research and analysis, the balancing of every element entering into the transactions, the sifting and sorting of facts and allegations and superficialities by trained and competent agents of Government who have spent months on their task—despite all this the Attorney General and his advisory board again go over in detail the merits of the cases before final decision is reached as to how they shall be disposed of and to see that justice is done the Government and no injustice done anybody.

In the shortest space of time in which it can be accomplished every case will be closed. Reports will be written covering every detail, omitting nothing which in the name of justice should be contained therein, and then when the Government has done its duty, whether by court proceeding or by civil settlement processes, these books and records will be sealed, this horror and scar upon our national life will be erased for all time, and it is my ambition to see terminated this tremendous task in such manner that there may be inscribed upon the back of each volume of the record and upon the title-page of each volume the words "truth and justice."

ORIGIN OF CRITICISM.

There has been criticism, naturally, of the Department of Justice and those who faithfully have sought to serve the Government with all the honesty of their being. I refer not only to the Attorney General himself but to those loyal and devoted officers of Government who have in silence suffered bitter and infamous charges, but whose armor, when all has been said and done, will have stood the test of faith and confidence of the people of this country.

How futile it would be for public officers to respond to every demand of the curious, to reply to subtle innuendos and criticism, to attempt to appease the curiosity of those who would seek to learn if they or those with whom they are allied are under investigation or likely to be investigated. It is this class which indulges in criticism and attempts to throw up about every department of Government and every official in responsible position a cloud of distrust and suspicion.

We would have heard little criticism of the Department of Justice had it not been discovered that a case like the Chemical Foundation, for instance (in which valuable patents were assigned by public officials to companies which they themselves had organized), was under investigation, and the part played by those involved also was being scrutinized carefully by Government agents.

INSIDIOUS PROPAGANDA.

And let me here, without giving any intimation as to who the men were—let me suggest that I have had the unique experience of sitting in the Department of Justice and listening to the story of a man formerly connected with the Government and hearing patiently his pleas for certain fairly legitimate concessions, when at the same time in the city of New York another former official, one of his associates, was busily engaged in getting contributions and making connections in order that the attacks upon the Department of Justice and the Government might be increased, reinforced, and successfully continued.

I can give the names of these parties if ever they lift their voices to dispute this statement, but unless I am authorized by them so to do I should like to go through this entire investigation without prematurely mentioning names except in the orderly process of court proceedings. Their names, however, will be found in connection with certain litigation wherein some of the most important questions and some of the most questionable transactions and some of the most valuable properties in the world are in dispute, and the right and wrong of the transactions connected with the transfer of certain property must be determined in a court of justice.

ACCOMPLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT.

Now that you know the obstacles ever in the path of those officers of the Government who would do their duty honestly and faithfully, is it surprising to you that public servants so often are vilified with the most bitter and contumelious language? But as long as government lives, as long as chosen leaders of peoples perform the tasks set out for them fearlessly and with all the honesty of their being there still will be some few who would attempt to breathe scandal where no scandal lurks, to find fault where no fault exists. To attempt to combat this sort of thing would be as futile as the heroic exploits of Cyrus, who employed a whole army to revenge himself on the river Gyndas for the fright it had put him to in passing over it.

I could not in volumes give a full account of the accomplishments of the Department of Justice during this administration, but if I may, I want to give a glimpse of a few of the problems disposed of or under consideration at the present time.

During the past year civil suits to which the United States was a party were instituted to the number of 9,646; more than 8,000 were terminated. There are now pending in the courts something like 12,000 cases.

More than 60,000 criminal prosecutions were begun. During the year 53,000 were terminated. There are now pending more than 64,000 cases.

From these prosecutions and adjudication of cases brought under the present administration, nearly four and a half million dollars were realized by the Government from the civil suits alone, while fines and penalties to the amount of three and a half million dollars were realized, making a total of nearly eight million dollars.

COSTS OF ADMINISTRATION.

The total appropriation allotted for the conduct of the Department of Justice for 1922 was $19,000,000. How trivial this sum would seem when it is remembered that in 1913, for instance, the enormous sum of $11,000,000 was appropriated for the department when the problems were infinitesimal as compared with the issues of towering magnitude to-day. It must be understood that the Department of Justice is now cleaning up the war débris and the department has at least ten times as much work and business as it ever had before.

Another administration accomplishment, one which is most gratifying, was the enactment of legislation which made possible additional judgeships. Our courts are clogged, but now, with 24 additional trial judges, the Nation may look forward to the expediting of cases which long since should have been disposed of. On June 30 of this year there were in excess of 172,000 civil and criminal cases pending in the Federal courts of the United States.

The American people must be protected by its courts. One particular issue which it shall be my privilege to force will be the disposal of approximately 480 cases developed through postal frauds and which are now pending. These cases, now in the hands of United States attorneys for institution of criminal proceedings, represent the filching from the public—widows, old men, and even children—of the enormous sum of $140,000,000. These scheming and vulturous users of the United States mails shall be brought to trial, and the humble citizens victimized shall have the satisfaction of knowing that the Government is determined to see that their cases get as much attention as the cases in which the great and mighty are involved. Equity and justice must be denied no citizen of this country, now or hereafter, if our courts and our public officers are to enjoy the continued confidence of the people.

NO APOLOGIES TO OFFER.

From the birth of this Republic to the present day the American Government has never shirked its duty to nor felt constrained to apologize for any action or step taken in the interest of its nationals and its industries. Nor shall the Attorney General of the United States now or hereafter apologize for any act of his which provides protection and establishes more firmly those bulwarks of human liberty and justice to which the American people are so bountifully entitled.

No more sacred trust is placed upon Government or man than that which looks to the preservation of the traditions and ideals of enlightened civilization. And when basic fundamentals of our national welfare are threatened, when conniving and vicious elements seek through menacing doctrines and destructive acts to undermine the faith of the people in their Government and those officials who have been chosen by mandate to guide and guard with all the honesty and fearlessness of human courage the laws of God and man, then I say that the time has come when eternal vigilance not only becomes a precaution but a duty on the part of mankind.

If American institutions are to endure they must be surrounded and buttressed by all the protective forces known to the ingenuity of man.

LABOR AND THE GOVERNMENT.

I am not now, nor have I ever been, an opponent of honestly conceived labor organizations and trade-unionism. If I were a skilled worker in mill, factory, or mine I would join a union, but I would never affiliate with a union that sets its laws and its constitution above the laws and Constitution of my country. In a great industrial nation, such as ours, labor organizations are necessary, but they must be the right kind of unions under the right kind of leadership.

Labor must be constructive and not destructive. There must be loyalty to employer, to the Nation. The radical and unscrupulous leader and those elements which make up the agitator type must be eliminated from our national life. They menace the whole system of trade-unionism, and for its own protection organized labor must banish them from its ranks. The advocate of violence in our national and industrial life must go, and the word of labor everywhere must be as good as its bond.

If those who come to this country and become naturalized citizens, that they may enjoy the benefits the country affords to all alike, are not satisfied with our laws and our form of government, then they should as rapidly as possible denaturalize themselves and return to the country under whose laws they did not care to live but whose theories they would attempt to exploit upon us.

THE CHICAGO INJUNCTION.

I am not altogether sure but that we have reached the point where for the safety of the country every foreigner coming to our shores should be met at the dock and impressed with the fact that he must, before naturalization, in some effective manner prove his worthiness to citizenship in this great Republic. As it is too many of those entering our gates are met at the port by the professional parasite and advised that the only prerequisite to American citizenship is membership in this or that organization—organizations which are dedicated to the destruction of the very freedom which the immigrant hopes to enjoy.

One of the most important steps taken by the Department of Justice in the interest of the American people was that in connection with the injunction proceedings at Chicago that reestablished justice and individual rights in America. The railroads of the country are compelled by law to furnish interstate commerce for the country. It is the duty of Government to see that this obligation is performed according to the letter of the law. The roads were attempting to keep interstate commerce alive, but conditions had reached a point where this was made impossible, through lack of skilled workers, deterioration of equipment, and other conditions brought about by the strike of 400,000 members of the Federated Shop Crafts Unions.

The Government acted. It was a duty, not to labor, not to the railroads, but to the American people and to the Government itself. More than 17,000 affidavits from every section of the United States concerning anarchy bordering on civil war furnished convincing proof that the people needed the protection of their Government as never before.

Bear in mind that I did not undertake this proceeding as a partisan or as the advocate of the railroads. As between the railroads and those with whom they were in conflict, considering the matters in dispute, I was neutral, and I took no action on behalf of the Government until it became apparent to the entire country that interstate commerce and the carrying of the mails were being interfered with to the extent that our people and our industries were being materially affected. In fact, more than 1,000 mail trains had been withdrawn from service.

ECONOMY IN EXPENDITURES.

Was the Government interested? The Department of Justice alone spent probably a million and a half dollars in seven weeks, as economically as it could be used, to keep down strife and preserve order in its neutral capacity between the contesting parties.

In the last half of August it was evident to all that the situation was growing worse, and it was solely in the interest of the entire people, the maintenance of commerce, and the carrying of the mails, furnishing food and fuel, that the Government performed its duty when it brought action to restrain those who were interfering with transportation and threatening the life of the Government. It may truly be said that the transportation crisis through which we passed came dangerously near imposing a veto upon the economic readjustment of our national life.

When the heads of the Federated Shop Crafts unions called their strike the men who walked out were in revolt against a 12 per cent reduction in wages authorized by the Railroad Labor Board, the quasi judicial body charged by Federal law with the duty of fixing railway wages. This move was a complete renunciation of the Esch-Cummins law, which afforded them special protection as to wage status by providing that all disputes concerning basic wage conditions and working rules should be referred to a Federal tribunal representing the roads, workers, and the public.

FAIR WAGE FOR LABOR.

Thus, with one bold challenge to constitutional government, the strike leaders to all apparent purposes renounced the protection of governmental authority when they mutinied against a decision which they construed to be unfavorable to their cause.

In practically every other industry in this country and throughout the world war wage scales had been abandoned, but union leaders demanded continuation of wage inflation at the war peak.

The Government and those chosen to safeguard its integrity and constitutional rights believe that labor deserves and should enjoy an equitable wage scale. On this issue there is no quarrel between labor and government.

More than 40,000,000 wage earners in this country depend upon organized government for livelihood, and protection of their interest ever constitutes a source of deep concern to government. In the industries alone some 30,000,000 toil in mill, factory, on public carriers, and in the mines. Of this number organized labor claims a representation of five or six million.

When certain rail workers were instructed by their leaders to lay down their tools, 400,000 of the 1,600,000 men employed by the carriers walked out in defiance of the law. A certain conspicuous union leader immediately suggested that a sympathetic or progressive strike was being considered, which would involve other crafts which had remained loyal to the carriers themselves and to their country. Attempts were made by strike leaders at this juncture to justify their stand by subtle intimation to workers that further wage reductions were contemplated by the Railroad Labor Board. But fundamentally the revolt was against the 12 per cent wage reduction.

Neither Punic cunning nor the vociferous canting of those who had determined to crush any conciliatory spirit that might exist among the army of wage earners thus arbitrarily ordered into idleness could disguise the facts behind this revolt against government.

RULINGS OF THE LABOR BOARD.

Not a year back this same governmental board whose ruling now was branded as an "infamous injustice to American workmen" had, in its decision No. 2, directed a substantial increase in the wages of rail employees. The carriers submitted, though they complained that labor costs had increased 115 per cent in comparison with 54 per cent increase in revenues made possible through higher rates granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

From a period of distressing inflation and soaring prices the country had passed into a period of severe liquidation; and the Labor Board, in effect, through its ruling No. 1036, of June 5 this year, had decreed that, in view of reduced wages in other industries, railway wages must of necessity be made to approximate them if readjustment of our economic and industrial life was to be accomplished.

But the die was cast, and labor's legions marched in solid phalanx from beneath the protecting bulwarks of constitutional law at the command of their leaders.

Industrial paralysis, human suffering, and irretrievable losses confronted the Nation as train after train was laid off. Cessation of traffic was destroying the arteries of trade and commerce. Government, industry, society, and labor itself realized that the helpless millions jammed into the great centers of population were dependent upon transportation for food—for life itself. But the upheaval went on. Sporadically tales came out of the West, the Southwest, and the South and from our northern border States of derailments, maiming, sabotage, and even murder.

FACED BY AN ECONOMIC CRISIS.

Just a year back more than five million men and women were walking the streets of our cities, jobless, hungry, and despondent; but now they were at work, through the sound operation of constructive government. The coal strike, which had spread over five months, was nearing final settlement, and 600,000 miners and their families were about to return to work contented. But anew there blazed upon the horizon of a prosperous Government and a happy people a crisis which stunned the Nation—a crisis which threatened not only economic and industrial depression, not only a recurrence of idleness among our wage earners, but the country's transportation systems, upon which all elements alike must depend for orderly government and those things which must hold together the human fabric.

Out of Philadelphia came the mandate of one of the heads of the shop crafts in that district, and which appeared to reflect the attitude of other leaders, that—

> We will tie up every train, both freight and passenger; every ferryboat and every railway shop, and not a wheel will turn anywhere.

Government was being mocked and pilloried in scorn. Appeals were being made to Washington by countless thousands of American citizens. Scarcely a community in any part of this broad, free land was being spared the iron heel of terrorism. Depredation of property was in full swing and human life was anything but sacred. All the great transcontinental systems were jeopardized, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, after infinitely painstaking surveys, had found that the rolling stock and equipment of the afflicted roads were so seriously impaired that 50 per cent of the locomotives in use were unfit for service and many were out of commission entirely.

The Nation was in the grip of civil war. We had reached a point where loyal, intelligent Americans wondered if organized government actually existed in this free land of ours—or a land presumed to be free and consecrated to observance of law. Criminals of the vilest types, apostles of the ultra-red variety, and crafty, power-lusting missionaries of discord mingled in the attack upon life, property, law, and government.

FIRM STEP NECESSARY.

Then, when all conciliatory efforts on the part of trusted Government emissaries had failed, when court proceedings in practically every district in the United States had been instituted by the railroads to safeguard their property and prevent willful and malicious interference with the orderly operation of their lines, when men were willing and anxious to work if permitted to do so, when the heads of the strikers had called upon the men who had deserted their tools and shops at their dictation to do "their damnedest and then some," when human suffering and hardships were beginning to leave their impress upon the innocent and helpless public, when transportation was impaired 50 per cent or more, and the country was stung to a fury, the time had arrived when national security no longer made it possible for government to stay its hand. A decisive and firm step was essential to the preservation of American institutions, its people, and the basic principles of government itself.

MORAL SUASION INEFFECTIVE.

Moral suasion up to this point had fallen upon deaf ears. Finally both railroad executives and shopcraft heads appealed to President Harding to use his good offices in an effort to adjudicate the differences between the two elements. In the most patient and painstaking way the President's great genius as a human harmonizer was put forth, but by the latter part of August his efforts had failed to receive the consideration to which they so rightfully were entitled. The President appealed to the striking workers, without denying their right to strike, though I may say on my own behalf, considering the fact they had submitted their dispute to the Railroad Labor Board, they had no moral right, at least, to repudiate that arm of the Government by refusing to abide by its decision. Appeal to the railroad executives received no remedial response. Reconciliation appeared to be impossible between the conflicting hosts, though the Government and its highest officers had expended every ounce of energy and brain force to persuade opposing leaders to compose their differences.

Railroad tracks and terminal shops of the country were in control of men who were undertaking to prevent other workers performing duties necessary to the free flow of interstate commerce. Demagogic and violently bitter disciples of force and anarchy worked in open sympathy with those who would paralyze transportation and stultify government, for no industrial dispute of mammoth scale in this country can survive without the contribution of this criminal class which revels in vandalism and thrives off the bounty of strike managers, who, perhaps oftentimes innocently, are inveigled into accepting their support.

IMMEDIATE ACTION DEMANDED.

Could government therefore be expected to remain supinely indifferent when its authority was challenged and threatened by chaos as deadly as armed strife itself? I say no, and every thinking man with love for his country and his fellow man will say no as vehemently as I do.

When government falters, when its chosen leaders neither know nor respect their duty, when law and order no longer remain as the guiding principles of all peoples and all institutions, then civilization is doomed to atavistic revolt. Thus fell Rome and Athens, and thus passed the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, but America was neither to succumb nor surrender to those elements which sought to destroy the traditions and ideals upon which her forefathers had builded a Nation of justice to all mankind.

What was the Government to do? The only logical answer and the only effective measure possible was an appeal to the courts for a restraining order—restraining those responsible for this condition of affairs from further interference with interstate commerce.

Before discussing the features of and the intent of an injunction let me say that the injunction proceedings at Chicago were instituted under the provisions of the Sherman law, the same law which 28 years ago was invoked by President Cleveland in the so-called Debs strike, when Federal troops were marched into Chicago by the thousands, and the same law employed by my predecessor during President Wilson's administration in a controversy wherein coal miners and operators were involved at Indianapolis. Cleveland, it will be remembered, was denounced as a despot and tyrant by sniping demagogues who scorned our Constitution and laws. But this was Cleveland's greatest public service.

THE SHERMAN ACT.

Section 1 of the Sherman Act declares that—

"Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal. Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court."

Section 4 declares:

"The several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petition setting forth the case and praying that such violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises."

COMPARED WITH CLAYTON ACT.

The Clayton Act contains a similar provision, but the Clayton Act does not modify the Sherman Act in a situation of this character where the Government itself is a complainant and where interstate commerce is involved.

A temporary restraining order or injunction, such as was properly and legally granted in the recent case, probably would not be authorized in a similar contest between employer and employee or in strikes in industrial enterprises upon which the Government does not depend to aid it in maintaining interstate commerce and the transportation of the mails.

What is an injunction? Radicals and other obsequious sycophants, supported by that infinitely small portion of the press which depends for its circulation upon sensation and socialism, would have us believe that it is a modern device, a recent discovery. The injunction is the most humane, the most charitable, and the most prompt and effective civil proceeding known to law. Violation of an injunction may be punished by the court issuing the injunction, but the violator has a right to stand before the court, assert his right, defend his act, and be judged guilty or guiltless, as the court may determine. When a set of men are unwilling to abide by the decision of the court, they should be forced to do so, and when they no longer can be forced to stand before the bar of justice, then government ceases to exist.

INJUNCTION AS A REMEDY.

Further, an injunction is the laying of the hand of the Government in an admonishing and restraining way upon the shoulder of a man who is about to commit a crime, warning him and ordering him to stay his hand and hold his wrath and desist from committing a crime and becoming a criminal. If he stops, no crime is committed. If there is a dispute as to his right, he is given a speedy hearing before the court, which answers finally the question of right and wrong, justice and injustice.

The injunction is a remedy that has in one form or another existed throughout the entire period of civilization. It is as old as the common law itself, and held an important place in the protection of legal rights under the Roman law. Self-help, or the impulse to take the law into one's own hands, which the history of civilization shows to degenerate into mob violence if left unrestrained, is the alternate course of conduct which all through history has run parallel to the efforts of organized society to protect rights and redress wrongs by a government of law and order.

Even under governments firmly established the primal impulse asserts itself at times to take the law into one's own hands. Hence the functions of courts have been not only to redress wrongs already committed but to protect rights, and by writs of injunction forbid a threatened course of conduct in advance of the actual invasion of the right. The injunction is fundamental in every system of jurisprudence worthy of the name that has been devised for the protection of human rights. A fundamental principle of English law is that "Where there is a right, there is a remedy." Running along with the legal maxim is another old adage, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," and the comon-law system found the writ of injunction effective for accomplishing its purpose.

PROTECTION FROM CRIME.

The injunction further saves a man from becoming a criminal. It protects the rights, not only of government itself but of all the people pending final judicial adjudication. It was the mildest form of procedure that could have been adopted in this case.

If the injunction were not resorted to, what was the next thing the Government could do after all efforts at voluntary and peaceful persuasion had failed? Step aside and let violence continue; let the mob grow in fury and in numbers; let the leaders with torch and bomb and dagger continue destruction of life and property? Could the Government permit itself to be weakened to a point where, after commission of hideous crimes by unrestrained hordes of violators of all we hold sacred, it would find itself impotent to adopt the policy it did?

Is it not better to prevent a man from committing a crime than to encourage him to become a criminal? Is it not better to restrain him by the gentle hand of the law in a kindly but impressive way than to let him go along to his own destruction? Is it not better to have men again at work, as they now are, than confined in jails, as many of them would be had this injunction not been issued?

Another step the Government could have taken was to have called out Federal troops. That would have been a sorry day, but it would have been done had necessity compelled. Appeal after appeal had come to Washington for troops, but armed troops were withheld. Who will say that it is not better to lay the hand of Government, with its restraint, its admonition, and protection, on the shoulder of the citizen than to call out troops to shoot him down, and, as is always the case, mingle his blood with the blood of innocent bystanders and bruise the hearts of his loved ones?

RIGHTS OF THE MINORITY.

In such a situation, if none of the steps referred to were taken, then Government would cease to exist in name as well as in fact; the people would become the prey of human vultures, anarchy would permeate the land, and mob rule would become the law.

We hear quite a little about the rights of the minority. A minority in this country has greater rights and is protected to a greater extent than in any other country in the world. But a minority has no right to deny to the majority the right it claims for itself. The minority has no right to promote civil war, impoverish a nation, deprive a people of those things to which they are entitled under the law, or to ignore and seek to withhold from the majority rights as equal as those enjoyed by the minority.

I hear no great cry on the part of the Nation's "mentors" as to the rights of the majority. It would seem from observation that there is a broad impression on the part of the doctrinaire and their ill-advised and sycophantic followers that the majority is subservient to the will of the minority, and the minority is subservient to the will of the radical, and that the radical may be led by any person who comes to our shores and undertakes to lead the American people into a pathway of fire and flame and chaos, intimidation, coercion, and disloyalty.

NO VOICE AGAINST CRIMES.

When the Chicago injunction was granted there was a hue and cry on the part of this radical element that the freedom of speech was being interfered with. It has been my privilege to read and hear, since the granting of the restraining order, great volumes of criticism, unfounded, of course, which in itself would seem to indicate sufficient proof that the freedom of speech neither has been interfered with nor abridged in any respect.

It must be remembered that the freedom of speech guaranteed under the Constitution is not that freedom of speech which incites mob violence, destruction of life and property, and attacks on Government. That is not what our forefathers intended by vouchsafing freedom of speech and liberty of press.

May I call the attention of the law-respecting citizens of this country to the fact that no frenzied voice was lifted by these same pedagogic pawns of profligacy when law-abiding American citizens by the hundreds, all over the land, were dragged into the mire of the woods, stripped of their clothing, and there left; when almost as many, according to prearranged schedule, well carried out, it seems, by somebody, were tarred and feathered, when others were thrown into streams and their clothing destroyed.

Where, it might be asked, were those frenzied voices now crying out for freedom of speech and liberty of press, when the loyal engineer and his crew, in the dead of night, faithful to their service and their country, pulled 12 Pullman cars across the continent only to be suddenly switched into eternity without a moment's notice by the vandal and murderer who pulled the spikes and threw the switches that murder might contribute to the cause of anarchy, and anarchy might destroy government?

FACED CRITICAL PERIOD.

Where were these frenzied voices when train after train, loaded with men, women, and children, were ruthlessly and criminally abandoned by those in charge as a part of a conspiracy, and left in the hot sands of the Santa Fe, with food and water scarce, comforts few, fright surrounding, even birth taking place—left to the tender mercies of Providence and the Government of the United States, if those responsible for the conspiracy were not successful in destroying it?

Where were these frenzied voices when $100,000,000 worth of produce raised in the State of California alone was left to rot because the railroads were not permitted to transport it to the consumer because of a quarrel between a small percentage of the citizenship of the United States?

Where were these frenzied voices when that horrible thing occurred at Herron, Ill., that will forever be a blot upon the community and the Nation?

We had reached the time when, if necessary, people of this country, in order to protect their homes, perpetuate their liberty, and be guaranteed the right to work and earn and save, were about to be called upon to write in human blood a new Declaration of Independence and a new declaration of human rights and liberty.

THE RIGHT TO STRIKE.

Men have the right to strike; surely this proceeding does not destroy that. Men have the right to work; surely this proceeding insures that. There is no involuntary servitude in this country, but slavery consists as much in depriving a man of the right to work as in compelling him to work against his will.

The fact of the matter is that, under the circumstances and evidence existing and proved in the case at Chicago, had the Attorney General not complied with the provisions of the law by taking the action he did, he could have been impeached, and any Attorney General failing or refusing under similar circumstances to do precisely what was done should be impeached.

There will be no backward step in the policy of the Government as at present organized. I know that unless legislation prevents, if established policies prevail, if the courts are not destroyed, if duty is performed by those in positions of authority, all will be treated fairly in this country—labor and capital alike. I think we have reached the day when it may truthfully be said that we have seen in the United States the last extensive strike involving the tying up of transportation.

In conclusion I want to say another word here to labor. As truthful a statement as any I have made in this address I now make: I am your sincere friend and will not deceive you, but you make a mistake when you set up rules in conflict with the rules, laws, and Constitution of our common country, which rules and laws and Constitution are applicable to every other man in every other employment, and must, for your own security and safety, be applicable to you.

SECURITY IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Your principal trouble lies, and your greatest danger is, in the radicalism and character of some of your most prominent leaders. Your security lies in the Constitution of the United States and in the laws of the United States and in the good opinion, by you deserved, of all the American people. There should be no quarrel between labor and the Government.

A few irreconcilable railroad executives, who insist upon calling themselves "hard boiled," might also, with considerable benefit to the country, be dispensed with. The fault is not all on one side, but at a time when strife that was almost civil war raged in this country the Government, having the right to do so, insisted upon the railroads performing their necessary functions to serve the people. Those in conflict with the railroads interfered with the performance of this service, and it was to protect the rights of all the people, strikers and employers, and every man, woman, and child in the country, that the Government in its rightful capacity took a hand.

FULL RESPONSIBILITY ACCEPTED.

I accept my full responsibility for the step taken, and though it temporarily shocked because of the sudden halt of civil war, I would under the same circumstances do the same thing again or feel incapable to speak for an important branch of the Government and unworthy of the confidence and trust imposed in me by the President of the United States.

Let us all love and support the Government that is alike to all of us. The picture is not all dark. The country is secure, the Government is dependable, the rights of the people are safe. The best proof of that fact was when a dignified court, exercising jurisdiction with courage and fairness, issued a restraining order to prevent the destruction of government, the taking of life, and the sacrifice of property. All turned to the warning, and peace and quiet and thought and judgment again reigned, and when I saw that and when you saw that, well might we say, in the words of another great Ohio President, "God reigns and the Government at Washington still lives."

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire briefly to discuss the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the bill which is now before the Senate. In view of the brevity of the remarks which I shall make, I hope that no Member of the Senate will ask me to yield for the purpose of a question.

Mr. President, the man in the street would say, if two or more were in disagreement, the chances are that a mutual understanding would be reached if the discordant persons placed their feet under the same table and discussed the various factors that brought about such disagreement.

By applying the same formula, discord subsisting among the nations would likely disappear by assembling an economic conference where world-wide welfare could be discussed and the nations participating made to understand their mutual dependency and that national prosperity is founded upon mutual sympathy and helpfulness.

In my humble opinion, the amendment offered by the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is limited to operate only in the field of international economics and can not be construed to imply any obligation calculated to involve any aggressive or defensive military action, or to entangle this Nation in any political maelstrom. The only charge laid upon the conference is the duty of considering the economic problems now confronting the world, followed by the expression of a hope that some understanding or arrangement may be reached providing for the restoration of trade and the establishment of the finances of the world on a solid foundation.

I know of no provision of the Constitution that would permit the delegates at a conference of this character to obligate our country in respect to a reduction or cancellation of the allied debt, or to consider any other subject concerning our relations with foreign powers that are properly the subject of negotiations by the President and ratification or rejection by the Senate. Mr. President, I am not disturbed nor made to tremble by the rumblings of the isolationists that at an economic conference the traditional policies of our country would be overthrown or disregarded; nor am I persuaded by the argument that the best policy for this country to pursue is to leave the nations of Europe alone until they solve their own problems which so greatly concern us. That effort has been going on in Europe for more than two years, while this country has sat supinely by and conditions have grown steadily worse, until at this time it appears as though the whole economic edifice of Europe is tottering to its fall. The nations engaged in the last war have drifted widely and strangely apart until they are now on the brink of chaos, and unless heroic measures are undertaken by them, with the powerful assistance of this country, financial collapse to many will follow, and to others instability and internal turmoil will be gathered as the harvest of dissension.

Mr. President, I can see no analogy between the commitments contained in the covenant of the League of Nations and the mere effort to discover the proper economic action the various nations should take in the present world crisis under the suggestion of the Borah amendment. The plan proposed does not anticipate the employment of a soulless economic boycott or retaliation as a means of its enforcement, nor does it suggest in the mildest way the use of armed force in any form. It is fashioned to fit the present unstable conditions running riot throughout the world and to clear the economic current of the world from the débris of hate and discord which are keeping open the wounds of war. This Nation, powerful and rich, should take as much interest and display as much concern to bring about mutual accord among its debtor nations as does the private banker manifest in the welfare of those patrons who have created pecuniary obligations in the institution of which he is the directing head. Aloofness should be our national policy when powerful foreign forces operate to involve us to our peril or national disadvantage, but such a situation can not grow out of a mere economic conference unless it is the desire of the people of this great Republic, expressed through their Representatives in the Congress. Therefore I cherish no fear that my country will shift from its assured foundation on account of any economic discussion in which it may choose to participate.

Mr. President, in a large way the cruel and unfortunate plight of the farmer is due to the fact that he is smothering in a surplus of agricultural products. A strong, brisk, foreign market, such as he is entitled to enjoy, would lift the farmer from impending ruin to a position where he could meet his obligations and leave him a fair profit for his laborious work and his investment. To this reward he is abundantly entitled. After a study of the problems of rural credits by the Members of the Congress representing agricultural States, legislation designed to provide farm credits so that the farmers may obtain better prices through the orderly marketing of their products will soon be brought before either branch of Congress for consideration. This legislation has been long delayed, but is now upon us and should be speedily enacted into law. But what is most needed by our farming population are markets, and these can be found and will be supplied if Europe is at rest, stabilized, and its economic structure made safe and sound. It will be said that rural products have moved to various nations in considerable abundance. This statement I shall accept as a verity. Owing to improved methods of farming and labor-saving machinery, farm production is greater than formerly, and in consequence thereof a greater quantity is available for exportation and must be exported to permit the residue to demand and receive a fair and profitable price. The surplus would be absorbed by other countries if proper credits—national, corporate, or otherwise—could be arranged. I do not advocate loaning more money to our creditor nations, but I do stoutly believe that if the reparations which Germany owes were reduced to a point where she can pay, thereby restoring the morale of her people, private capital would flow to Europe in such a volume as speedily to bring about a correction of the present unfortunate economic conditions existing in Germany and in other European nations. I am not predicting that any outstanding achievements would follow as a result of the proposed conference, but, in any event, its efforts would discover the true situation, which in itself might be of great value in future treatment of conditions in Europe.

In an ably edited paper, the Oregonian, there appeared an editorial about a week ago from which I quote the following:

> So grave is the plight of Great Britain, France, and Germany that a positive move by one of them that was deemed harmful to it by either or both of the others might light a flame of war that would soon become a conflagration enveloping the Old World. If a French army should advance into Germany, not only might it meet armed resistance but it might easily start a war that would spread eastward. Allied with Germany is Russia, and allied with Russia is Turkey. These three are the making of a new triple alliance, hungry, destitute of all but arms and fighting capacity, but in the mood to defy a world that is utterly weary of war. If Britain and Italy should stand aside, these desperadoes might defy France and might strike to regain all that they have lost and to take much more. Such a war would sweep over Poland, the Danubian States, and the Balkans, and could not fail to involve Britain and Italy.
> It is doubtful whether the United States could keep out. If we should, it would be at the sacrifice of civilisation in Europe. Though that might not move our isolationists, the loss of the market for three-fourths of our exports would. At the best, Germany would sullenly submit to armed occupation, and France would probably collect from a nation that having lost hope had abandoned itself to bankruptcy, no more than would pay the cost of the army, while all Europe would continue to slide down the slope of moral and material decay, more slowly though no less surely than if hastened by war.

Mr. President, I make no claim to knowledge of international affairs. My activities while a member of this body have been confined to domestic issues, particularly with reference to agricultural undertakings; but I have held to the belief that after the termination of the world-wide war our policy of isolation has been too severe for the good of ourselves and the welfare of the world. I know full well that this belief will arouse the opposition of the international statesmen's bloc, found among the intellectuals of the United States Senate. I have no doubt that the great majority of the farmers and laborers and business men of the country will look with favor upon any plan constructed to bring about the economic rehabilitation of world affairs.

Mr. President, I shall never know whether it was the stubbornness of our distinguished President, Woodrow Wilson, the perversity of the able senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], or the eloquence of the irreconcilable Senators that prevented the ratification of the Versailles treaty, yet I shall always think that much of the unrest and hatred existing among the nations at this time would not have occurred if that treaty containing the covenant of the League of Nations, with the Lodge reservations, had been ratified.

Having that view, I can not persuade myself to oppose any conference which I believe would work for a better understanding among the nations of the world, even though such a conference calls upon this Government to play an important rôle. The result of the Conference on the Limitation of Armament, held in this city 13 months ago, aroused the antagonism of many learned and patriotic statesmen in this country, still I venture the prophecy that the labors of this conference will prove beneficial beyond the expectations of its most ardent advocates; and so I express the confident belief that an economic conference held in Washington, attended by representatives of various war-shocked nations, would result in the world stabilisation of currency, exchange, and flow of commerce equal to the calculations of those devoted to the restoration of agricultural and other industries to a profitable basis.

America is not going back to Europe, for Europe will come to America for the healing of her wounds, to compose her differences, and to direct her to a haven of peace and economic achievement. Sincerely believing in the wisdom of the policy and having faith in its possible benefit to mankind, I shall actively support the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the pending naval appropriation bill.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, there are many of us who followed yesterday's debate and the argument of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] this morning with unflagging attention, in the hope, in the expectation, that we might find weighty argument upon the necessity of adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I say "weighty argument upon the necessity of adopting the amendment," for I assume that Senators do not seek to impose upon the President a moral obligation to summon a conference under the broad terms of the amendment unless they believe either that he is uninformed as to the condition of Europe or, if he be informed, that he is incapable of acting or is unwilling to act upon that information.

It is not difficult for Senators to enjoin a President to convoke a conference upon an international question like that of the economic distress of Europe. It is a very different matter to conduct the delicate negotiations both precedent to a conference and necessary to its successful conclusion. Certainly there arise from time to time international difficulties which can be surmounted only by international conference. There befall a suffering world ills so general that only international action will cure them. Such was the case when the continued burden of armament and the threatened competition in the building of battle fleets led to the summoning of the Washington conference.

The conference—as the Senator from Idaho, I think, indicated yesterday—was not called as the result of any action of Congress upon the question. Even before the President had been inaugurated, within 60 days of the election of 1920, informal communications passed between the President elect and European statesmen then charged with the responsibility for government looking to the limitation of armament and the resolution of the then existing differences between the naval powers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCORMICK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I am quite willing to concede the construction put upon history by the Senator from Illinois as to the fact that the President had months before conceived of this movement, but under that condition of affairs what becomes of the construction which was placed upon the statute yesterday that the President can not call a conference without the authority of Congress?

Mr. McCORMICK. If I remember, in the debate yesterday the Senator from Idaho said that the statute would not stand.

Mr. BORAH. I said I doubted that it would stand the test; but does the Senator understand that the President did disregard that statute wholly when he called the conference?

Mr. McCORMICK. Oh, Mr. President, since the Congress had acted prior to the calling of the conference, patently he did not disregard the statute.

Mr. BORAH. That is the answer which the Senator desires to make?

Mr. McCORMICK. It seems to me a perfectly obvious statement of the sequence of events. The negotiations—I said the negotiations—were precedent to any action by Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as a matter of fact, unless the resolution had been passed, the President could not have called the conference without violating the statute?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, if the negotiations had reached a successful conclusion, and if it were necessary to secure legislative action, the President could have sought it.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; but that is not the question which I submit. Unless the resolution had been passed, the President could not have called the conference without violating the statute?

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator will permit me, I think that is beside the mark.

Mr. BORAH. It seems so.

Mr. McCORMICK. It was made to appear at one time in the naval debate two years ago that action by Congress was necessary to initiate the calling of the conference.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator from Idaho whether a statute could not be valid limiting the power of the President to call certain kinds of conferences without its applying to conferences which are clearly within the Presidential power?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the statute unfortunately makes no distinction as to the kind of conference.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand that.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, in this connection let me add that I am not sure, as I look back upon the sequence of events, that the initial action by Congress did not handicap the American negotiators at the Washington conference. The efforts in yonder Chamber and here drastically to curtail the power of the American Navy, and eagerly to press upon the Executive the obligation to negotiate with governments financially weaker than our own, gave evidence to foreign statesmen that there were certain molders of opinion in this country, as eloquent as they were influential, who were not unready to disarm America even though the world remained armed. I have thought that the congressional agitation at that time weakened our position and made necessary the negotiation of the four-power treaty, for which some Senators would not vote, and for which others like myself could not have voted but for the Brandegee reservation.

The history of the ratification of those treaties has been interesting.

The powers which were financially able to support the burden of naval armament were the first to ratify. The other signatories of the five-power treaty, with vast and constantly growing debts, with recurring and disastrous deficits, have not yet ratified the naval treaty. In my humble opinion, France would not have made ready to ratify after the new year but for the foresight, the prudence, and the influence of Charles de Chambrun, who has returned to Paris after his service as minister ad interim in Washington. The French Government first, and the Italian Government later, doubtless will ratify the restricted treaty for the limitation of naval armaments, while all the while France has refused to consider the limitation of aircraft, subsurface craft, or light cruisers and destroyers. She would not thus limit her sea power and would not limit her land forces at all, although to deny that Germany is utterly disarmed is so wide of the facts as to be ludicrous.

The powers of continental Europe have done what their past bade them do, not what the present demanded of them. They have sought to subordinate economic actualities to political considerations. It was in the dim light of the past that Europe wrote the four obscurantist treaties—one of which the Turks have rewritten in the blood of dying Christians and another of which the victorious allies have revised in the tears of the starving Austrians.

The present state of Europe, so depressed as to touch our prosperity, after all is due to no single cause, economic or political. Plainly it is attributable in great part to the waste of war, which can be made good only by years of toil and frugal living on the part of millions; it is attributable in part to the ruin of Russia, where more millions have died since the Imperial and Bolshevik peace of Brest-Litovsk than ever were killed while Russia fought Germany; it is attributable in part to the Balkanization of Europe by the peace treaties, which some would have had ratified by the Senate which added new boundaries, new governments, new armies, new customs, borders, new traffic tariffs to the many which threatened peace and thwarted trade in Europe before the war; it is attributable in part to the ambitious and aborted policies of short-lived cabinets throughout Europe; to the planless purposes of inexperienced parliaments seeking to govern talented and dauntless peoples long denied self-government.

There is no convention of the powers under the covenant of the league proposed to the Senate by Woodrow Wilson, or under the general conference proposed to the Senate by the Senator from Idaho, which can recreate in a year that which was destroyed by the war through the long years which, by recognition of the soviet, by loans, or gifts to the soviet, can rebuild the vastest ruin in history which the soviets have wrought. Neither President Wilson's league, which lives and languishes, nor the Senator's conference, which is not yet born, can break down the new political and economic barriers set up by the treaties of peace and guaranteed by the league; neither of them can endow newly freed peoples with an age-old experience in self-government, in political self-denial, in political prudence and political self-restraint, in political administrative efficiency. How long did the newly freed American Colonies suffer under the Articles of Confederation before they devised and accepted the Constitution of the United States?

The world seeks a remedy for its ills. Remedy by the league? Remedy by conference?

The members of the league have met in conference in Geneva. The governments of Europe met in conference at Genoa. The prime ministers have met in conference, political and economic, at San Remo, Cannes, Paris, Spa, Brussels, London, and Boulogne. Sometimes they have accomplished nothing; sometimes they have accomplished a little. They have not been willing to seek the realizable. They seek the impossible. As I heard a prime minister remark the other day, "One of the great powers for three years has assiduously fished behind the net." Time and again they have been willing to do "to-day" that which "to-day" was no longer realizable, although it could have been done six months before.

The prime ministers meet in Paris Tuesday next in economic conference with some prospect of agreement at last, because stubborn prejudgment must give way to actualities, because the governments of Italy and France face bankruptcy, as well as those of Austria and Germany. I say the governments face bankruptcy; I do not speak of the peoples. If I have alluded to the several causes to which Europe's condition is attributable, let me pause again to emphasize the truth that her plight has been aggravated because her governors, matured in the political philosophy of the nineteenth century, have insisted upon subordinating economic to political considerations. The congregated statesmen have hastened the day when John Maynard Keynes's first volume would be justified by established facts; they have made manifest the monstrosity of the treaties, and have made clear to impartial observers that as they choked the vanquished people of Central Europe so they throttled the victorious peoples of western Europe in their struggle for economic recovery.

Mr. President, if I may be pardoned a personal allusion. I told the representatives of the press before I sailed for Europe, nearly two months ago, that I hoped we might find a basis for economic collaboration with the European States. But I fear that if a general conference be summoned at a time when the immediate need is for prompt consideration and prompt action, for urgent and limited action and relief, I fear that a general conference—no matter what the agenda on paper may be—will precipitate a general discussion, inclusive of the cancellation of the debts due America, no less than American political and military guaranties of European frontiers.

If we had not heard read to-day the letter of the President, and Senators required assurance that negotiations are under way, as the President pointed out in his letter, the Secretary of State and the President were in the city of Washington, accessible to all. But was it necessary to confirm the known evidence? The prime ministers met in London a fortnight ago. Three American ambassadors met in London at the same time. Immediately thereafter the American ambassador to Great Britain was summoned to Washington for conference and is now on the high seas. The British Chancellor of the Exchequer is on the high seas following him. The prime ministers are to meet for conference in Paris on Tuesday, January 2, and the British Chancellor of the Exchequer is to meet the American Debt Commission in Washington on Wednesday, January 3.

I alluded a moment ago to the facility with which Senators might communicate with the Chief Executive or the Secretary of State. It is no less easy to communicate with Senators. Frankly, I am amazed that the State Department has been at no pains to keep the members of the Foreign Relations Committee current as to the outline of negotiations now under way. Or rather, I would be amazed if the department had not made the same mistake during the negotiation of the four-power treaty. In this instance I am less concerned about what is due the committee of the Senate or what consideration is due the State Department than I am in the success of the delicate negotiation now under way, and known to be under way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator know what the purport of these negotiations is, what they include?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator does not, but if the Senator had been here a few days longer he could have learned, no doubt, by going to the State Department to ask.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator would take occasion to visit the State Department any time soon, I would be greatly pleased to have him advise his colleagues what the negotiations include.

Mr. McCORMICK. Manifestly, if the amendment pending be necessary, it is because we believe the President and the Secretary of State to be ignorant of the condition of Europe and of the United States, which is known to us; or because we believe them, knowing these conditions, to be indifferent to them and to the suffering of the people; or because we believe them to be neither ignorant nor indifferent, but incompetent to deal with them. That is to say, if we vote for the amendment we do so because we feel that an administration either ignorant, indifferent, or incompetent, or all three, must be prodded to hasten and conclude a negotiation known to be under way. Not only that, but by the broad terms of the amendment, by the very plain implication in it, we would say that we would have this Government invoke a conference which would include everything from American garrisons and guaranties in Europe to European cancellation of debts owed in America.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McCORMICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Would it interrupt the Senator if I said, in regard to the question asked by the Senator from Idaho about what these negotiations include, that I am not in a position to state precisely what they include, although I think it is very obvious to everyone what their limitations might be; but I can say what they do not include. They do not include the cancellation of the debt. I asked that question of the President, and he said:

> This administration has been steadily against the cancellation of the debt, and is now.

I also asked in that connection about his reference to the greater latitude to be given to the commission, and he said that referred to the question of time for the amortization of the debt or to the question of the rates of interest.

Mr. McCORMICK. Precisely——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator will permit me to conclude my sentence.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. McCORMICK. The negotiations by the State Department, I assume, like those between the European governments, have sought to find a basis for agreement upon which the tentative Brussels conference could be held, because, as published in the press, none of the governments believed it would be profitable to meet in economic conference at Brussels if that conference were foredoomed to failure by reason of the unwillingness of governments to establish a basis upon which they could negotiate.

Mr. BORAH. The President says in his letter that while the State Department has contended that the question of the debts should be considered separate and apart from the question of reparations, the foreign governments contend otherwise, and that the two propositions apparently are interwoven and must be considered together. Then he suggests that if the Congress desires to be helpful, it will give the debt commission greater authority to deal with this question of the international debt. Does the Senator understand that by that reference the President means that he wants the Congress to change the statute so that the debt commission may have full latitude to deal with the method and manner of disposing of the debt and the consideration of the reparations question?

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Massachusetts, I hope, may answer that question, and he has conferred with the Secretary of State.

Mr. LODGE. I asked the President that question. The latitude mentioned in his letter, to which I have already alluded, refers to a greater latitude in regard to the rate of interest and the term of the bond, but it does not in any sense include the question of the cancellation of the debt; and I am authorized to say, as I have said here, that that is not within the consideration of the administration at all and that they are opposed to the cancellation of the debt, as they always have been.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from Massachusetts mean that the administration is opposed to the cancellation of any debt of any European power to the United States, even of Belgium or Serbia?

Mr. LODGE. I did not ask the details. I was speaking of the general cancellation of the debt. If one is canceled, I suppose all will be canceled.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not one debt; it is half a dozen different debts.

Mr. LODGE. I know that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the President says in his letter:

> If Congress really means to facilitate the task of the Government in dealing with the European situation, the first practical step would be to free the hands of the commission so that helpful negotiations may be undertaken.
>
> In discussions with foreign governments the previous administration and the present administration have insisted that the question of European debts to the United States is distinct and apart from the question of reparations, but European nations hold a contrary view, and it is wholly inconsistent to invite a conference for the consideration of questions in dealing with which the Government is denied all authority by act of Congress.

The President does seem to desire some authority from Congress to enable him to do what he is now doing, or seeking to do. Do I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Illinois are in favor of modifying or changing the statute creating the debt commission and giving the President greater latitude?

Mr. LODGE. I understand that the view of the President is that there might be greater latitude in regard to the rates of interest and the time of amortization of the debt, and many people hold that opinion.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Massachusetts hold that opinion?

Mr. LODGE. I am inclined to think there might be greater latitude given on those points with wisdom; yes. I am not in favor of the cancellation of the debt or of any part of it, because I suppose it all goes together; nor is the administration.

Mr. BORAH. The time is now 25 years?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. About how much time does the Senator suppose it would be necessary to extend it?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not on the commission and I have made no estimate as to the time whatever, but it is a subject which I think may fairly be opened to discussion, and I think also the rates may be opened to discussion. We have discussed the rates here; we have lowered the rates from what they were.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, in this connection it is just as well to recall that the British Chancellor of the Exchequer is on his way to Washington. It is conceivable, certainly, that in proportion as we evince an eagerness to join in a general economic conference, he might prudently evince a disposition to prolong his negotiations, to the end that in the general conference the British debt, with the refunding of which he is charged, might be considered in conjunction with the other debts.

It has taken a long time to convince his Government that we were not disposed to cancel. Patently the signing of an instrument for the funding of the debt of the British Government to the Government of the United States is an important step to a consideration and solution of the economic problems of Europe and to the establishment of terms for the funding of the debts of governments less able to pay than the British Government.

There are Senators who have announced their support of the pending amendment who last summer were demanding payment under the terms of the act of Congress. They have not said to us what they thought might be done in the proposed conference, whether in their judgment additional funds should be advanced to governments which can not pay what they now owe, or to peoples or groups of peoples living under governments which are now unable to pay.

Since the signing of the armistice the Government of the United States has advanced to European governments $1,500,000,000. It is generally estimated that private advances to Europe since that time have aggregated $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000. During the year and a half immediately after the signing of the armistice those advances were great and purchases by Europe in America were correspondingly great. If we would seek just comparisons of exports to-day with those of prior years, they must be made not only with the years immediately following the cessation of hostilities but with the years immediately preceding the outbreak of hostilities.

Mr. President, because some of us shrink from a general conference which we believe will delay the immediate and restricted action which we know to be urgent, it does not follow that we would not find a basis for economic collaboration with Europe. It does not follow, because we are unwilling to propose a conference, the scope of which seems to us almost unlimited, that we do not recognize an economic community between Europe and America.

The great Senator who has proposed the amendment in so doing has bewildered many of us, although he has not diminished our affection or admiration for him. He seeks what we seek, the further diminution of our now attenuated political responsibilities in Europe and the discovery of means for economic collaboration between Europe and America. But I submit that in the all-comprehensive conference he proposes he breaks from the course which he has followed and along which, together with millions of others, we have followed him. Thus to-day we behold Woodrow Wilson, Thomas Lamont, Otto Kahn, and the great Senator from Idaho proceeding along once widely separated but now converging paths to the common goal where they must find Asia, Europe, and America bound together in a death struggle like that of Laocoon and his sons.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is in the company of Woodrow Wilson, he could not find himself in better company than in the company of the greatest peace advocate since Christ was upon the earth. The Senator from Idaho has realized that the plans and policies of the Republican Party up to this time have failed utterly to restore peace in Europe and bring about stability in the business world, including his own country. The Senator from Idaho wants to see peace established in the world. He is not content to remain silent while the world is in such a disturbed and chaotic condition as it is to-day. The Senator from Idaho is a brave and fearless statesman. I do not believe that he is willing to sit down and fold his arms and seal his lips and permit things to drift and drift from bad to worse. If the Senator from Idaho believes that a step should be taken to improve our own condition and the conditions of the world, I believe that he has the courage to take that step.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] has said that the Senator from Idaho greatly surprised the leaders on the Republican side of the Chamber by this course. We on this side of the aisle are not surprised at that course. The leaders on the other side in the main are content to let things drift. Things are drifting, as certain international bankers would have them drift, in a way that will permit them to get a strangle hold upon the finances and the business of the world. There are those of us who will not be content to permit that condition to obtain.

Mr. President, it is high time that this Congress was waking up. I wonder what it will take to arouse it? Has not the recent election had sufficient effect to bring it to its senses, to a realization of the responsibility that is upon it, to some measure of compliance with the demand for peace and economic adjustment in the world? Why should the Senate remain silent and sit supinely down with folded arms and wait for a partisan debt commission to work out some secret arrangement behind closed doors, away from the gaze of the American public? What is there back of the screen that certain Republican Senators want to hide from the people whose Government this is?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said this morning that he is opposed to canceling the debt due us by foreign countries, and that the administration is opposed to canceling the debt. I remember when I and others over here discussed in the long session the matter of collecting this debt, that we could not get any very positive expression against canceling that debt from the other side of the Chamber. Where was the Senator from Massachusetts then with his assurance that they intended to collect the debt? They were very quiet about it then, Mr. President. There is no use to hide any of these things. Let us talk about them in the open. My opinion is that the Secretary of the Treasury intended to cancel the debt, and that the administration was favorable to it; and if they have gone from that position it is because they have been driven from it by the Democrats in this body and by American public opinion.

Mr. President, the Republican Party in power can never get away from the blunder it made, from the political crime that it committed, when it solemnly arranged for five Republicans to handle this $12,000,000,000 foreign debt. When the bugle call of war was sounded our boys from East and West and North and South met on the fields of France. They were Republicans and Democrats side by side, American patriots supporting the flag, fighting for the ideals and institutions of the greatest Government in the world. No partisan consideration entered into the conflict over there. When the men and women of America were digging up their treasure, stinting themselves, many of them buying Liberty bonds, and that money was going abroad to help carry on the war, those men and women did not contribute as partisan Democrats or Republicans. They contributed as American patriots and contributed to the best of their ability. They supported the war in every way possible. No partisan spirit was anywhere manifest among them.

But when the war is over and when the Shylocks of the United States like vampires decide to suck the financial lifeblood of the people, then it is that partisan considerations enter in; then it is that the Democratic Party is ignored—a party as old as the Government, a party that never had a scandal connected with its conduct of the fiscal affairs of the Nation, no land frauds ever charged to it, no misconduct in the affairs of the Government that touch the integrity of that party. And yet when the Debt Commission was to be appointed, when we naturally thought there would be Democrats and Republicans alike upon the commission to represent the two great parties which are supposed to speak for the whole people of the country, what did we find? We found the leaders of this branch and the leaders of the other branch of the Congress and the President himself all scheming and conniving together to appoint five commissioners, and every one of them a partisan Republican. Mr. President, that was unfair and unjust. I have never quite understood that very strange conduct. I have my opinion about it. I have expressed it before and I am going to express it again.

There is something that the commission was intended to do that they did not want the public to know. We may just as well talk plainly and call a spade a spade. That was the purpose, I take it, of leaving the Democrats off. It was because they knew when negotiations were inaugurated looking toward a cancellation of the debt that the Democratic members would cry out and would apprise the people of that fact. The failure to appoint any Democrat on that Debt Commission has created suspicion in the minds of the American people. Mr. President, the Democrats are entitled to have representation on that commission. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] has a resolution now pending to appoint three more members of that commssion who are to be Democrats, which will make its membership eight. There are now five members on that commission who are partisan Republicans, and three more Democrats would make the commission consist of five Republicans and three Democrats, all of them, of course, to be appointed by the President. Is not that fair? What is there unfair or unjust about it?

Are Senators surprised that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has the courage to come out and say that he is not satisfied with the way these matters are being handled? One of the Republican leaders in the other House stated that it was presumptuous in the Senator from Idaho to make such a suggestion as he has made. Mr. President, I am sure that the Senator from Idaho will be severely criticized behind closed doors in high administration circles. He has probably committed the unpardonable sin against the administration for daring to offer an amendment to the pending naval appropriation bill without first consulting the high muck-a-mucks of the Republican Party. [Laughter.] Is Senator BORAH to be condemned because he wants to save money to the American people rather than tax them to put money into a great naval outlay? Should Senator BORAH be scolded for seeking universal peace rather than to encourage the upbuilding of a big army and a big navy and keeping the world in a state of ferment and war? Yes; Senator BORAH has offended certain interests by offering an amendment that, if adopted, would disturb the program of certain international financiers who have sucked the lifeblood of our country for the past two and a half years. They have fed upon the substance of the American people.

We now have domestic unrest and distress amongst eighty-odd millions of our people. Some of the highbrows who write reports from Wall Street, where stocks have gone up and bonds have advanced in price, immediately get out on the housetop and shout that prosperity has been restored. There is no real prosperity in America now except in the case of a favored few. While Senators on the other side of the Chamber were bragging here on yesterday about prosperity having returned, and some of the paid experts of the big financiers were telling us how rapidly prosperity is coming back, I received a clipping from one of the New York newspapers. There is an organization in New York City which has arranged to have referred to it all letters written to Santa Claus by the children of the country in the fall time prior to Christmas asking for gifts, and they undertake to send gifts to such children.

The writer of this newspaper article states that heretofore such requests had come for toys, for little trinkets, for playthings for the Christmas time. But what do we find this year, Mr. President? One million of the letters which came this year asked for bread and butter. These little waifs, poor little children, made in God's image, are living in sweatshops and tenement houses, eking out a miserable existence, and yet Senators are standing up and proclaiming and newspapers are stating that there is prosperity in the land.

While this condition exists and those children are suffering and starving the farmers of the South and West have products in abundance to feed the hungry and starving people here and some of those in other lands, and yet those products are selling below the cost of production. The Senator from Idaho said truly yesterday that we have an abundance of products in this country which are wasting and rotting while the people are starving for them in other places. There ought to be some way to get the products from those who produce them here over to those who can consume them and who would be happy to have them. Certain countries are in a distracted condition.

America's part in world affairs recently is not a very creditable one. Mr. President, we may just as well be plain; we ought not to undertake to deceive one another.

The Senator from Idaho suggests that an economic conference of the nations be summoned. What harm can come from that? The Bible says, "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety"; but the Senator from Idaho has grievously offended because he has displayed some wisdom in seeking a "multitude of counsellors," because he is seeking to bring about something that will be for his country's good and the good of the world.

Mr. President, do you know many of those interested in naval matters are opposing the amendment of the Senator from Idaho? The reason is that they make money out of the building of battleships. Could there be a more timely thing than the introduction of the amendment of the Senator from Idaho? The naval appropriation bill now pending carries a larger appropriation than the one enacted just before the disarmament conference met in Washington. What do Senators think of that? We were told that as a result of the disarmament conference we were going to have peace; that we were going to cut down appropriations for war purposes; that we were going to save expenses; that we would appropriate less money; that we would leave money now expended for war purposes in the pockets of the taxpayers of our country. Let us see whether or not we have done that. I asked the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], in charge of the naval appropriation bill, what amount the bill carried. He gave the figures. I then asked him, "Is that larger or smaller than the amount carried by the naval appropriation bill enacted just prior to the Conference on the Limitation of Armament?" He replied, "Larger." Mr. President, is not that sufficient to warrant the Senator from Idaho in trying another experiment? "If at first you do not succeed, try, try again." We have heard that old saying all of our lives, and it is good advice to this day. But Senator BORAH, a Republican, is being condemned because he has dared to throw a brick into the do-nothing show window of the Republican leaders; he is about to break up their secretly arranged diplomatic playhouse, and that is why they are so offended and hurt with him.

Mr. President, the mismanagement, the incompetency displayed by the present administration is simply appalling. It used to boast about what it would do when it obtained power and it went into power, following the administration of that great leader of the American people, Woodrow Wilson, in many respects the greatest intellect that ever sat in the White House. He is 66 years old to-day; God bless him and give him health and spare him to the American people and to the world for many years to come!

Mr. President, he had high ideals; he was willing to fight for them; to suffer for them; yes, and he was willing to die for them, and he almost lost his life fighting for those noble principles and ideals. I sat with him in the White House one day while the death struggle over the League of Nations was going on in this Chamber. He told me of conditions as he had found them abroad; he told me of the hard faces that he had seen, of the dull eyes, the emaciated forms. He told me of the lame, the halt, and the blind; and of the distress and suffering that he had seen in the war-cursed countries of the Old World and of the fields billowed with the graves of millions of dead, and I saw the tears running down his face as he said, "I can not understand why they want to defeat the League of Nations after all that has happened and in the face of conditions that now exist."

Now Senators are saying that he was responsible for the failure to ratify the treaty of Versailles with the League of Nations covenant. It ought to have been ratified with reservations, if you please; but the failure to ratify it by the Republican Senate lost to our country hundreds of millions of dollars in foreign trade and threw away America's opportunity to establish peace in the world. We drew ourselves away and apart under the leadership of the Republican Party and sacrificed our leadership in the establishment of world peace on a permanent basis.

We look over there now, and what do we see? We see Russia in a state of unrest and revolution, the Bolshevists holding sway in that great and rich country. And what are we going to see? We are probably going to see Germany, once put down as the greatest autocratic power and military despotism in the world, acquire control of Russia with her 180,000,000 population, with her great wheat fields and rich treasure of many kinds. America, under the mismanagement and incompetency of the leadership of the Republican Party, has permitted this thing to go on, and Russia, our ally in the World War—and probably we could not have won but for Russia—has been turned loose to drift and drift until Germany binds poor, distracted Russia to her side with hooks of steel. Then, with the military genius of Germany and with the old desire for vengeance and all of that man power and wealth at her command, we do not know what sort of a problem will be presented to us; but these are some of the results which have been achieved under the Republican administration. If Woodrow Wilson had retained his health, I believe the league covenant would have been ratified, even with reservations; and if it had been, there would not be heard a gunshot in the Old World today. The world would have been moving steadily toward disarmament in the light and in the bonds of a mutual respect and desire for universal peace. The forces of civilization would have been working in concert to prevent future wars.

But crafty, avaricious interests in league with Republican leaders conspired to defeat that great international institution created to prevent war. And now certain financial interests do not want BORAH's resolution passed. They do not want any economic arrangements made, except in the way that they are trying to make them, and that is for them to continue to get the cream of the earth and give to the masses the skim milk that is left. That is what they are undertaking to do, and we do not intend that that shall be done.

What else has grown out of this mismanagement and incompetency and aloofness that we have witnessed? The Turk—the beastly, unspeakable Turk—is threatening all Europe, and Russia and Germany are waiting, we are told, and may join with Turkey in the conflict after a while. Oh, Mr. President, how pitiful it all is when we think of what might have been—of what might have been if patriotism and statesmanship had triumphed.

What is going on over there? The blood of the Christian runs red on the sod, and the Turk makes his way toward the temple of God; and what are we doing? We are receiving a message from the President to wait and let things drift. Why should not we have an economic conference between the distressed nations of the earth and America, the incarnated spirit of liberty?

Why, Mr. President, they are murdering Armenians by the thousands. They are slaughtering little children. They are ravishing the women of the white race. Misery and ruin are all around. The trade conditions of the world are disturbed. Economic conditions are bad, chaotic in many places. Let us try, at least, Mr. President, to establish better trade relations with the countries beyond the sea and see if we can be of mutual help and benefit; but the President writes a note in the Christmas time, in the birth time of Him who said:

> Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

A message comes at the Christmas time protesting against an effort to bring about a better understanding and peace in the world. God speed the passage of the Borah resolution! The Bible tells us:

> Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God.

So if the Senator from Idaho offends a few Republican leaders in the House, or if he treads upon the sensitive toes of the leaders on his own side of this Chamber, if he can by so doing become one of the children of God, I would seize with joy that opportunity any day rather than be called a leader of what is left of the old standpat Republican Party. [Laughter.]

Oh, Mr. President, the old standpat crowd over there do not want anything done except in a certain cut-and-dried fashion. They want it to be O. K'd by these big financiers. They want them all to bow and smile and approve it, and then they will come right up and support it; but if somebody suggests a way of doing it that will really bless and benefit the mass of the people, for whom governments are really instituted, they are ready to oppose it. I wonder how many Republican Senators are going to vote against the Borah resolution. I wonder where the progressives will be when the roll call is had. I wonder who will come out on the side of a better economic world arrangement, universal peace, disarmament, and the preventing of our boys from going abroad to battle in useless wars in the future?

Mr. President, what do they tell us now when we say we ought to disarm as rapidly as sound sense and conditions in the world will warrant? What are we told by the big Navy people, by the big Army people? We are told to wait. "Look over yonder. You do not know what is going to happen over there. War may break out at any time. Therefore put these millions more in this appropriation bill for war purposes." And those who build the battleships will put it in their pockets, and they will laugh and be joyous as they take money out of the Treasury under those conditions. "You do not know what minute war is going to break out," they tell us.

And they insist that we keep on building up for the time being, because they say that we do not know what is going to happen.

What is the Senator from Idaho undertaking to do? He is undertaking to keep anything serious from happening. He is undertaking to remove the cause, the necessity, for piling these appropriations on the backs of the already overburdened taxpayers of America. He is trying to do that which is best for the American people.

What did we tell them in the campaign just closed? Why, the Republicans told them, "We had a peace conference. We are going to disarm. We are going to save tens of millions in appropriations. We are cutting down the size of our Navy, and everything is going well," and it is not so. Now, then, when we come in and the bill is put in print and is brought here for passage and we ask, as I did, "Does it carry a larger appropriation than before we agreed to disarm?" and they say, "Yes," then somebody has been deceived. Deception has been practiced on somebody, and we ought to talk it out in the open Senate and let the people know just what is going on here.

The President suggests that the hands of this commission ought to be free. Well, I wish I could see their hands. They may be free for some purposes, but they are behind closed doors, where the public can not see. There is not a Democrat in the Nation who knows what they are doing, and therefore none of the rank and file of the people know what they are doing, and I submit that that is a crime against the American people. I do not care whether the man in the White House be a Democrat or a Republican; a Democrat who would provide for five Democrats on a commission like that to handle an indebtedness to the American people of billions of dollars, putting only Democrats in charge of it, leaving out all Republican representation, ought to be severely criticized by the American people.

I am not saying this because the man in the White House at this time is a Republican President, or because the Republicans are in power temporarily. I simply insist that in a matter of that character and magnitude there ought to be both Democrats and Republicans on the commission, so that the American people would know what was going on with this $12,000,000,000 of indebtedness. Here are twelve thousand million dollars due the American people, and a partisan commission, five Republican politicians, have got hold of it and are manipulating it and handling it and conniving with it behind closed doors, in what way God only knows. They are not going to hear the last of that soon.

There is but one way, Mr. President, to drive from power a party that is misusing the power intrusted to it, and that is through publicity—publicity in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD day by day, week by week, and month by month. The people get the facts into their heads, and they let you hear from them at the polls. That is what we have to do. If Woodrow Wilson had been President and he had appointed five Democrats to handle this foreign indebtedness, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the Republican Party in the Senate, would have been in his place day after day, and how pious and injured he would have looked when he pronounced that act of Wilson's a great crime against the American people! I can hear him now, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], crying out against that partisan action. "Five Democrats," they would have said, "to handle an indebtedness due the whole American people; five Democrats, with no Republican on the commission to know what they are doing!" I can just see them now, Mr. President, with my mind's eye, and I am going to let them see themselves with their mind's eye quite a number of times before they go out entirely on the 4th of March, 1925.

"Free the hands of the commission!" Well, Mr. President, there ought to be some way by which we can compel that commission to report to the Senate what it is doing. "Oh, that would not do," they say; "you are trying to tie its hands." Well, I would rather tie the hands of that commission than for that commission secretly to tie the hands of the American people. I do not know what they are doing. I do not know what sort of arrangements they are trying to negotiate. I know they have not succeeded in collecting any money, except a little from Great Britain, I believe, who paid some of the interest on the debt due us. We want something done for the people. We want the American people to be represented in a conference. We want to discuss all of the things that will look to better understanding and better trade relations. We threw away our chance at world trade. The Republican Party did that. Now we want to try to build it up or get it back. Are we to be condemned for making an effort along that line? Is the Senator from Idaho to be criticized because he suggests that we try to improve world conditions? Why, if leaders on the other side have been asleep and have not looked into these matters as they should, and the Senator from Idaho has seen a light, I suggest to them that they had better hunt the same light before it is everlastingly too late.

Mr. President, if we can have this conference, and discuss the things that are causing unrest in the world, and do something that will help to settle international affairs justly and fairly the world over, it seems to me we ought to be commended for it. If we could do that we might prevent another war. If Germany is trying to get hold of Russia, and then if Germany, with Russia, is contemplating an alliance with Turkey, as has been suggested, if we could aid in some way in preventing that, would we not be doing a great service not only to our own country but to the world?

Mr. President, there are people all over the world who need our products and we must provide a way for getting our products to them. In 1920, when the Federal Reserve Board advised that the War Finance Corporation be put out of business, they used the argument that American funds ought to cease going to aid our export trade, and by that act they helped to strike down our export trade.

If we can find that a country really needs our products, and by a little help could get on its feet, why not make some trade arrangement with that country? That is what the resolution of the Senator from Idaho may accomplish in the economic readjustment of the world, and through improved conditions and better trade relations we hope to benefit the downtrodden farmers of America. Are we to be discouraged in an effort of that kind?

Mr. President, I think that Senators on the other side should be anxious to vote for a measure like that. They have favored a policy that has brought ruin to agriculture in the United States. Why not do something now to restore conditions which are tolerable to the farmers? I charged before that Senators on the other side permitted Wall Street interests to collect from Great Britain and France $1,700,000,000 on a private debt, and never collected one dollar interest on the debt due us by Great Britain and France during that period. I charged, and I repeat the charge, that they permitted private interests in Wall Street to hold up the collection of the foreign debt to our country while they collected a private debt. They can not deny that; that was done. I said that if Great Britain and France could pay a private debt to Wall Street, why can they not pay this public debt to the United States? We are tax burdened. Our people are ground to the earth now with taxes.

Mr. President, many a man in the Nation who was fairly well to do in 1918, 1919, and 1920 is now borrowing money to pay his taxes. There is many a merchant who was fairly well to do in that period who has gone to the wall with the sign of bankruptcy written above his door. There is many a country bank which was in good condition in those years now closed and gone out of business. This army of distressed farmers, merchants, and country bankers is hoping that something will take place; that good conditions may return; and here is an opportunity to bring it about by the adoption of an amendment on the naval appropriation bill asking the President to call this economic conference, to invite these people to come here to the United States and sit down and discuss our affairs, their affairs, world affairs in a friendly way. The world is one great community now, with the present means of communication and travel—one great community—and we ought to bring those people here and talk about things that vitally affect us and the whole human race.

Senators on the other side who have always been very silent heretofore about the foreign debt—many who I think were in favor of canceling it and who I still fear intend to cancel it—may have changed their minds. They heard from the American people very strongly in that connection in the last election. But those Senators who now oppose this amendment of the Senator from Idaho are suggesting that its passage might hold out false hopes to somebody about debt cancellation. We can arrange that at the start. We can simply say that this economic conference is called to discuss matters pertaining to their business and things looking toward bringing about more peaceful relations between the various countries and us, but that the debt due to the United States is a part of the obligation growing out of the last war, and that debt must be paid.

There are so many other things of an international character to be discussed. If we could get those people here and talk to them; go over again the ruin wrought by the war; remind each other of the 10,000,000 boys from 18 to 25 years old who went down to death in that terrible struggle; discuss the suffering caused in the world, and how all the nations should work together to prevent a recurrence of another such war, Mr. President, good would come out of it; good is bound to come out of it.

Why is it, then, that we can not adopt a simple amendment like this? It would cost but very little. It would not cost this Government as much money as the increase in the naval appropriation over the last appropriation as it appears in the bill now pending. That money would be spent in the interest of universal peace, in the interest of better economic arrangements and understanding amongst the nations, and I submit that we are warranted in taking such a step at this time.

I simply rose at this time to express a word of approval of the position taken by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I am a Democrat and the Senator from Idaho is a Republican, but I, as a Democrat, am in favor of his amendment. I think the other Republicans ought to support his amendment, as I believe a majority of the Democrats on this side, and practically all of the progressives in this Chamber, will do so. I hope to see it passed.

Through that amendment I want the Congress to serve notice upon the Shylocks who made their millions and billions out of the last war, who held their Government up in the hour of its peril and fleeced it of millions and billions of dollars—I want to serve notice on them through this resolution that we care more for the boys of America, the girls of America, the fathers and mothers of America, and the peace of the world than we do for them and all the millions and billions they have obtained through questionable methods.

Let us go upon record as favoring this movement for a better international understanding, for better economic conditions in the world, and for better trade relations between our country and the nations of the earth. Let us continue to advocate the settlement of international disputes by arbitration. In God's name, let America wake up and take her place in the great household of the world, and lead in the name of Him whose birth time this is, for peace on earth and good will to men.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	France	Lenroot	Reed, Mo.
Bayard	Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard
Borah	Glass	McCormick	Shortridge
Brookhart	Hale	McLean	Smoot
Broussard	Harris	McNary	Stanfield
Bursum	Harrison	Moses	Sterling
Cameron	Heflin	Myers	Sutherland
Capper	Hitchcock	Nelson	Townsend
Caraway	Johnson	New	Trammell
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nicholson	Underwood
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Kellogg	Oddie	Warren
Dial	Kendrick	Page	Watson
Dillingham	Keyes	Pepper	Weller
Ernst	King	Phipps
Fernald	Ladd	Poindexter
Fletcher	La Follette	Pomerene

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The pending question is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] to strike out lines 1 to 5, inclusive, on page 9.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if there is to be further discussion of the so-called Borah amendment, I should be very glad if that could be proceeded with, for the reason that the Senator from Tennessee, who offered the amendment just referred to, was compelled to go to one of the departments on official business, and he will not be able to return until a quarter past 3. In his interest, if there is any other matter to be taken up, I ask that the amendment be passed over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. The Senator from Tennessee was compelled to go to one of the departments on official business and stated that he would be unable to be back until 3 or 3.15, and I asked that his amendment be passed over until his return.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill and to pass over the amendment temporarily. The bill is open to amendment as in Committee of the Whole, I understand.

Mr. KING. If there is to be any further discussion on the Borah amendment, I should be glad if it might be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be passed over temporarily. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Has everything been disposed of now except the last paragraph, with the proposed amendment to it, I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. All the amendments proposed by the committee have been disposed of. The bill, of course, is subject to amendments which may be offered by any Senator.

Mr. BORAH. If the debate has closed upon my amendment so far as the multitude opposing it are concerned, I desire to say a few words in regard to it. I understand, however, that there are other Senators who wish to speak on it. In order that we may come to an understanding about the matter, I ask that we agree to take a vote upon the proposed amendment, which I shall offer later, at 3 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] desires to speak upon the amendment. I am sure, however, he will not be prepared to speak to-day, but will be prepared to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. I certainly do not desire to cut off any Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON entered the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. I will say to the Senator from California that a vote is about to be taken upon the amendment which I propose to offer, and I understood that the Senator desires to speak upon the matter to-morrow. If the Senator desires to request that the matter go over until to-morrow, I shall be very glad to approve of it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do I understand that the Senate is ready for a vote, with the exception of a possible speech from me?

Mr. BORAH. I have a few remarks to make with respect to one matter and then I shall be ready for a vote myself; but I do not want to bring it to a vote until the Senator is ready to speak.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would not permit for an instant any desire on my part or any speech of mine to interfere with the vote. If the Senate is ready for a vote, I would not ask that the matter go over. I do know, however, that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] desires to be heard upon the subject, and I have been told that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] wants to speak upon it. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], I understood, too, was going to offer a "few feeble remarks," and I have no doubt there are other Senators in a like situation. However, so far as I am personally concerned, I would not ask for a continuance of the subject until to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to cut off debate upon either side of the question. I simply want to get the matter in such a condition that Senators can protect themselves for the discussion; that is all. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, that it shall go over until to-morrow. I would be very glad to have it go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In view of the statement made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I see no reason why we should not proceed with the consideration of the bill. Of course, it is open for discussion and subject to amendment. It has now been under consideration for a number of days, and the question that is raised by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho, which has been printed but has not yet been offered, has already been discussed at great length. I ask that we proceed in the regular order with the consideration of the measure before the Senate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that so far as I am concerned I shall be very glad to vote now or to vote at any time this afternoon, but there are a good many Senators who want to be here when the vote is taken. If we could fix an hour this afternoon or an hour to-morrow to vote on the particular amendment which is to be offered, which is the point of interest in the bill, so far as the vote is concerned, I think it would help the convenience of the Senate and expedite its business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion. In fact, I think the Senator from Idaho did propose a unanimous-consent agreement to vote this afternoon at 3 o'clock. That hour or any other hour that may be agreeable to the Senate is satisfactory to me.

Mr. BORAH. I proposed 3 o'clock because I understood the debate had closed, but I understand now it is not closed, and I do not want to cut off debate by any proposal of mine. I want those who desire to discuss it to have ample opportunity to discuss it on either side of the controversy.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask, has a point of order been raised against the proposed amendment?

Mr. BORAH. The amendment has not yet been offered.

Mr. HARRISON. Where does the Senator propose to offer it? Does he intend to offer it as a substitute for the last paragraph on page 56 of the bill?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. If there is going to be a point of order raised on the amendment, why could we not argue the point of order if there is no one ready to proceed at this time on the merits of the amendment?

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to offer the amendment until the debate is closed, because I know what is going to happen to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the Senator mean so far as the vote is concerned?

Mr. BORAH. So far as the point of order is concerned.

Mr. JOHNSON. I know what I hope will happen to it.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator's hopes are going to be realized.

Mr. JOHNSON. I trust they will be; they are the same hopes the Senator from Idaho has entertained in the past.

Mr. BORAH. They are by no means the same, nor anything like it.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit the Senate never does a revolutionary thing, and if we will follow the precedents the amendment is in order. I do not think the matter should be prejudged until it has been presented. The Presiding Officer is a very fair man, and I am sure——

Mr. BORAH. It was not a criticism, either express or implied, upon the Presiding Officer, but there seems to be no doubt about the proposition that the precedents are supposed to be in support of it. Whether they are or not, I have not examined.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, Senators have gone so far as to say what will happen to it. I give notice now that there will be an appeal from the decision of the Chair if he does hold that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from California desire the matter to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not ask it, because I think I ought not to do so. I do not think I am justified in asking the Senate to delay its action to listen to remarks of mine. I can not conceive that they are of sufficient importance to delay the action of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I do not agree with that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is very kind, but, so far as I am concerned, whatever the Senate sees fit to do will be perfectly satisfactory to me in that regard.

Mr. HARRISON. In view of the fact that the Senator believes the decision will be to sustain the point of order and notice has been served that an appeal to the Senate will be taken if the point of order is sustained, and which would be debatable, does not the Senator think we should not enter into an agreement to vote at a certain time?

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator addressed that remark to me, I made no request to vote at a certain time. I am willing to agree or not to agree, just as seems agreeable to the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. If there is no one else going to request that it go over, I shall not do so, but I would be very glad to have it go over if anybody else wants to have that course taken. However, I shall not ask that it go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for a brief announcement?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

DEATH OF DR. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the International Reform Bureau wishes me to announce that the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau since 1895, died in this city on yesterday, December 27, 1922, and that his funeral will be held at 4 p. m. to-day at the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, at the corner of Fourth and B Streets SE.

Mr. President, Doctor Crafts throughout his life exerted a great and wonderful influence for good and that influence will permanently survive him. Among the things in which he was interested and which he helped to promote were the spread of religion, law enforcement, moral education on a Bible basis in school and out, the creation of a public sentiment for a higher moral environment and a better world here and now, the suppression of intoxicants, gambling and other commercialized vices, substitution of recreation for dissipation, protection of the young against narcotics, one day's rest in seven, encouragement of reading with a view to inspiration to usefulness, arbitration and conciliation instead of industrial and international war.

Doctor Crafts was devoted to the best interests of humanity, as all Senators will testify, and his loss will be deeply mourned.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13374) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I ask to be indulged by the Senate a few moments while I express a hope that the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] may be favorably acted upon by the Senate. I do not think that this is any time for political or partisan play. It makes no difference to me now, so far as this amendment is concerned, whether the Senator who offers it agreed with me or not when the Versailles treaty was submitted to the Senate for ratification. It makes no difference to me now, Mr. President, whether the past performances of the present administration have been such that it should be commended or criticized. There are times and there are occasions and there are measures that should rise above partisan consideration. The question of whether the world shall go on down to destruction or shall find some basis upon which its differences may be accommodated and peace and prosperity again shall be established on the earth is one so vital that, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to forget all other questions and look to that alone.

If one wished to be captious and critical he could express some amazement at the suggestion of the majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who was unwilling that a conference should be called unless the administration should be so hedged about by reservations and amendments that nothing could be done except the thing pointed out in the resolution. It evidences an amazing lack of confidence either in the intelligence or the patriotism of the President of these United States to suggest that if he were authorized to call a conference it would be unsafe to let him do so unless the Senate should so hedge about the questions that should be considered, under his call, that the President could not do a foolish thing. I am willing to trust the President to set out in his call those matters that are vital and which should be considered.

I have more confidence in the President of these United States, even though I have been accused of being overly critical of him, than has the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who expressed the same grave fear that the President might err if he were clothed with power to act, unless his powers were circumscribed by amendments and reservations. I am willing that the President shall be trusted. I say that, although I know that the President does not wish to call the proposed conference. We knew that before his letter was read to-day. We know equally well that he was opposed to the Limitation of Armament Conference which was held here a little more than a year ago. He wrote a letter then asking that it be defeated. He held conferences with Senators and asked that the armament conference resolution be not passed. One of the Senators, who was in charge of the bill when the amendment proposing the Limitation of Armament Conference was offered—I refer to the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]—said:

> I will say that I went to see the President with the Senator from Washington—
>
> Referring to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER]—
> and we talked over the question of disarmament, and I gathered from what was said there that the President thought it was not necessary for Congress to go ahead in this way with a resolution asking for disarmament.

The President afterwards wrote a letter opposing the resolution. That letter did not find its way into the RECORD, but the Senate for some reason saw fit to disregard the opinion of the President then and the Washington Limitation of Armament Conference was convened and a limitation of armament was agreed upon. A treaty with reference to the Pacific islands was also negotiated and ratified by the Senate. I know, Mr. President, that recently the Washington Limitation of Armament Conference was pointed to as one of the great achievements of the present administration.

The conference was held, as I have said—and I refer to it not in a spirit of criticism but merely to show that the President was opposed to that conference—and the very same Senators who now offer objection to the conference proposed by the Senator from Idaho were opposed to the Washington conference. The Senator from Massachusetts was opposed to it; he was honestly and sincerely opposed to it. I am not criticizing him for that. There comes a time, Mr. President, in some men's lives when they are afraid of the future; when they want to take no step forward. They are not to be criticized; it is their viewpoint that they want always to look backward, as if they thought there was nothing but an open grave ahead.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. HALE. From the Senator's statement in regard to what I said on the floor of the Senate last year, I gather that he implies that I meant that the President was opposed to the holding of a limitation of armament conference?

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course. I thought the Senator meant what he said.

Mr. HALE. Such a construction is entirely foreign to my meaning, and I have never before heard of such a contention being made.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the Senator's intention now to say that the President was in favor of the adoption of the Borah resolution?

Mr. HALE. I do not think he was.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course not; and that is what I said.

Mr. HALE. I think that the President felt that it was unnecessary.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, yes; of course.

Mr. HALE. And that is the impression I tried to convey in the Senate at that time.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly the impression the Senator from Maine did convey—that the President wanted the Borah resolution killed.

Mr. HALE. I think the President thought it was unnecessary for the Senate to take any action.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what the President says about the conference now proposed.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. But the Senator from Arkansas is conveying the idea, if not stating it in express words, that the President was opposed to a conference——

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. And not that he was merely opposed to the resolution?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not care how the Senator from South Dakota wishes to split hairs now——

Mr. STERLING. I am not splitting hairs, Mr. President. It is the Senator from Arkansas who is evading the real question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not evading anything. I say that there would have been no Limitation of Armament Conference if it had not been for the adoption of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Idaho; and there would not have been a Limitation of Armament Conference if either the Senator from Maine or the Senator from South Dakota could have prevented it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota would not have lifted his hand toward preventing such a conference.

Mr. CARAWAY. And he would not have lifted his hand to have brought it about, either.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from South Dakota has understood all the time that the President was in favor of the conference but not in favor of the resolution which was passed by the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. Where did the Senator from South Dakota get that information?

Mr. STERLING. I can not give the source of my information now exactly in regard to that, but it has been my understanding all along that the President was in no sense opposed to a conference.

Mr. HALE. I object strongly to having the Senator say that I was opposed to the holding of a conference, but I was opposed to the resolution of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course.

Mr. HALE. I was in no way opposed to the conference.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator was opposed to it, and then voted for the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I do not recall how I voted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, yes; the Senator did vote for it. The Senator got his orders and voted for it. I am not criticizing Senators who wish to follow the administration.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the habit of sheep.

Mr. CARAWAY. As the Senator from Missouri suggests, it is a matter of habit.

Mr. President, I did not intend to impugn anyone's motives. I do know, or else I have been very much misinformed, that a year ago a Senator now sitting on the floor received a letter from the President asking him to kill the Borah resolution. The President also wants to kill the amendment of the Senator from Idaho now pending.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator specify to what Senator he is referring?

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator from Washington knows to whom I refer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not know.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did not the Senator from Washington receive a letter from the President asking him to kill the Borah resolution?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, some one else is very, very much misinformed, because my information is that the Senator from Washington received such a letter. I will ask the Senator if the President did not express the hope that the Borah resolution would be killed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not to my knowledge. He never expressed any such hope to me.

Mr. CARAWAY. He did not ask the Senator to have it killed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. He did not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Was the Senator present when the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] talked with the President?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I may have been present on one occasion when the Senator from Maine talked to the President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is what the Senator from Maine said in the Senate on the 13th day of May, 1921:

I will say that I went to see the President with the Senator from Washington—

That is the Senator with whom I have just been having a colloquy, is it not?—

and we talked over the question of disarmament, and I gathered from what was said there that the President thought it was not necessary for Congress to go ahead in this way with a resolution asking for disarmament.

Did the Senator from Washington get that same impression?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, perhaps I ought not to get into this controversy; but, in view of the labored effort of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] to change the actual facts, if the Senator will look at the Associated Press dispatches upon the day on which the able Senator from Maine and the able Senator from Washington left the White House, he will find an Associated Press dispatch to the effect that the President did not desire the resolution to be adopted and that, in their opinion, Congress would stand by the wishes of the President.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not happen to have the dispatch to which the Senator refers, but I know that was the general impression. I will inquire of the Senator what was the date?

Mr. BORAH. I do not remember the date, but it was the day the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Washington conferred with the President in regard to this matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, there might be an easy way to settle the controversy. Senators did confer with the President in regard to this matter; that is admitted. Suppose they tell us what the President said. We should like to know.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course they are not going to do that. I would have asked them to do so, but I knew they would not do it, because they have declined once before. I heard the Senator from Washington decline to do so. I know, however, that the Senators referred to came back from the conference and both of them announced that they were against the resolution. No one ever knew either one of them to fail to hear the voice of the administration, and therefore I know what the administration said to both of them.

Mr. President, that was entirely foreign to what I intended to say. I am not falling out with anyone for following the administration. I am not intending and had not intended to criticize anyone. I had hoped that the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho might be adopted. I was merely showing that the President's attitude toward the Borah resolution a year or so ago was the same as his attitude toward the pending amendment; but even he afterwards and all of his adherents talked of the great benefit that grew out of the Washington conference, to which the President was, I am sure, thought to be opposed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I will read from the New York Times Index for April–June, 1921, an article which is reprinted in the New York Evening Post of December 26, 1922, under the heading "The Story of Five Weeks." The article is as follows:

THE STORY OF FIVE WEEKS.

[From the New York Times Index for April–June, 1921.]

"House debate; row over disarmament, April 27, 19:1; Editorial, Disarmament Logic in House, April 27, 16:3; bill adopted by House without important changes; Representatives fail to force amendment which would force Harding to call disarmament conference, April 29, 17:8; President Harding, conferring with Senators POINDEXTER and HALE, warns them that he does not want 'hand forced' on disarmament question, May 4, 1:5; Harding opposes insertion of BORAH'S proposal into bill, May 4, 2:5; Senate committee agrees on bill adding $100,500,000 to that passed by House; Senate committee rejects BORAH'S proposal for conference between United States, Britain, and Japan, and House committee decides informally to drop disarmament agitation following Harding's talk with Senators; BORAH offers new amendment; POMERENE offers proposal calling for delay of six months in beginning building program provided for in bill to enable Harding to call conferences, May 5, 1:1; Representative STEVENSON asks House to reject Senate increases, May 6, 4:3; BORAH in statement says he will push disarmament plan, May 10, 1:2; Senate considers bill, May 13, 19:5; Senate debate; BORAH, in tilt with CURTIS, says Congress is raising, not cutting, costs; Kenyon and NORRIS assail measure and call for halt in building program, May 14, 1:6; deadlock in Senate; Senator POMERENE supports disarmament proposal; Senator KING wants naval holiday called and completion of ships less than 10 per cent completed stopped during holiday, May 17, 19:3; Harding is believed to have withdrawn opposition to BORAH'S disarmament amendment; Republican Senators allowed to vote as they wish; POINDEXTER tells of having sent letter to Harding, May 18, 1:6; economy advocates make $1,000,000 cut in bill; other changes, May 19, 17:8; Central Trades and Labor Council adopts resolution asking Senate to pass Borah resolution, May 20, 17:2; line-up on vote for amendment; pay increases also fought, May 24, 10:2; Senate rejects House proposal to cut down personnel; line-up of votes; LENROOT says Harding was misquoted to make him appear advocate of big navy; other amendments add largely to appropriations, May 25, 1:3; Senate adopts BORAH'S disarmament amendment; text of amendment, May 26, 1:5; Editorial, 'Mr. BORAH'S Triumph,' May 27, 16:1." BORAH'S amendment to the naval appropriation bill calling for a conference on world economic conditions and reparations is being frowned upon by administration leaders.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, Mr. President, everybody understood the situation. It is strange how quickly some people forget. I am not criticizing, nor did I intend to criticize, the President for being against the Borah resolution then or now. I was expressing the hope that, in view of the great ends to be accomplished, Senators might find it within their power to think of what might be the benefits and cast aside any political bias that they may have because the President happens to oppose it.

I do not know whether I am as good an American—and I want to speak with all kindness—as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] yesterday afternoon asserted he is. He served notice that nobody could be a constituent of his who was not an American. He did not want any Irish-Americans, or German-Americans, or Italian-Americans to be considered as constituents of his. I do not know that I can go that far. I never found it in my heart to hate people. I do not hate any race of people. I never found it in my heart during the war to rejoice when the newspapers told about the hunger that stalked in Germany and how children starved, tugging at their mothers' withered breasts. I did not hate the German women and children then. I do not hate them now. I do not hate any class of people that were engaged with us in the war. The war is over. I do not seek any political advantage that might come from the adoption of this resolution. I do not want to say, as some have said, that it would be a vindication of the position of the past administration and a condemnation of this. I want to say that the man who represents his people, and does it wisely, must be controlled by conditions as they now exist, not by what was true last year. It is the present condition that we must meet; and the Senator who can not forget the past, and, because he hated some people last year, must hate them this year, will never, I fear, support any progressive measure. I do not know whether the present condition of Europe impress people as it does me. I shall, however, say this, and you will pardon the personal note.

I had an opportunity this year to observe the condition in seven or eight of the European countries, among them France, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and other countries of middle and eastern Europe. The impression I got then, which stays with me, is that unless some relief or solution for its economic ills is found all of central and eastern Europe must sink in ruin. Whether we can see two hundred and fifty millions of people go down to destruction and not be destroyed with them, I do not know. I do not believe we can. I do not believe anyone who has not obtained first-hand information can understand the economic distress, the actual want, the lack of power to help themselves that confront these people of Europe. I know that I got no pleasure out of viewing it. I get none out of its remembrance. It may be that others can, that they feel they should hate all who are not American. I can not.

I know that in all the great cities of Europe, in those countries in which I was, when you saw a crowd of women standing in front of a shop window, packed in so that it was almost impossible to obtain a view of the window, when you got through that crowd of women and children to learn what attracted them you would not find it a display of dress or jewelry, but one containing a piece of meat or a loaf of bread. I saw men—men of character and standing—come into hotels or the restaurants with a piece of bread wrapped up in paper under their arms, buy a cup of coffee, and sit down to a meal of nothing else, and then get up and go out. I know that the professors of the best known medical school in the world were starving until an American made it possible for them to eat one meal a day that cost between 4 and 5 cents each.

I know that the consul of this country in one of the greatest industrial cities in Germany told me last summer that the charwoman who cleaned their floors on the Fourth of July was given a present of a hen; that when she received it the tears trickled down her old withered face, and she said: "This will be the first bite of meat I have tasted in eight years." I know that you can go through countries like Austria or Germany and Hungary and see the conditions that confront those people and know that unless some kind of an arrangement can be made whereby they can reestablish themselves, anarchy must follow. Take Austria, with 6,000,000 of people, 2,000,000 of whom live in Vienna, with the entire agricultural products of that country not sufficient to feed the population two months, without any raw materials, surrounded by hostile people who have been taught to hate by hundreds of years of conflict, and you must know that Austria can not survive under the present conditions.

I do not know what this country can do. I do not know what an economic conference can accomplish. I do know, however, to refuse to do anything will bring no relief. I do know that action might be helpful, and inaction can not accomplish anything. I know that thousands and thousands of men, women, and children—but especially women and children—will go down to their graves this winter, victims of starvation, if these Senators shall have their way who say: "Let Europe solve its own problems and save itself."

You can not escape the responsibility. You may say: "I shall not assume it," but you can not escape it. You can not refuse responsibility for what happens in the other parts of the world however you may say that you will not assume responsibility for it, because the power lies within your grasp to take some action. You are not responsible if you act upon your best judgment and your action proves futile. You can not guarantee that the step you shall take will bring the relief for which you pray; but you will at least have maintained your self-respect and rendered unto the world all the aid you could, because you took whatever action seemed to you wise; but you can not escape responsibility if you simply say: "I will not act at all."

I do not know how much of hatred lives in the hearts of the people of America. I do not know. I do not know how many people would rejoice to think that starvation will stalk the streets of Berlin and Vienna this winter. I for one shall find no pleasure in it. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] in his speech before the Senate a few days ago said that the mistake which we made—I want to quote him accurately if I can find the RECORD; it was last Friday—that the thing we ought to have done was to have marched into Berlin and collected reparations then, when England and France and Italy and America had an army of millions of men in Europe. In other words, the Senator from Washington believed that you could have settled all the problems with the bayonet; that murder and destruction of property would have brought prosperity. Well, it never did in the history of the world; it never will, the Senator from Washington to the contrary notwithstanding; and the Senator expressed regret also that we did not send our armies into Russia to overthrow the government there established and set up another government, whether it pleased the people in Russia or not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. CARAWAY. I shall read the Senators' remarks if he has any doubt about that being his position last Friday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did say what the Senator has just quoted. I am very deeply convinced that if we had carried on the war until it had come to a conclusion and to such a point that there could not have been any controversy about whether or not the German army had been defeated—and it is now claimed by Germans that it was not defeated—and such reparations as were collectible had been collected at the time, and Germany then freed from any further military control and allowed to proceed to reestablish herself we would then have avoided this world menace which is now proclaimed and which undoubtedly exists, arising from the effort, after four years of controversy and of world disturbance, to collect reparations from Germany, because after all that is the question which is at the bottom of the economic problem of Europe.

So far as Russia is concerned, what I said was that while we were in the war, and while the Allies had armies of trained men and veterans, if they had supported the party which existed in Russia and which was led by men of great ability, in my opinion, called the Constitutional Democratic Party, I think, that was in favor of a constitutional democracy, the world would have been relieved also of the still greater menace which now exists and which is undoubtedly carrying on propaganda in the United States, of revolutionary Bolshevism. I may be mistaken, of course, about that view, but I am very firmly convinced of it, and the Senator has accurately quoted me.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat. He thinks it was a mistake not to have gone with our armies into Germany, to Berlin, in 1918? Is that the Senator's view?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. The Senator is just repeating what I have already said.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, wait; I want to ask the Senator another question. Is he now in favor of organizing an army to go to Berlin?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I certainly am not, Mr. President. The very fact that I am not in favor of it now, and that it can not be done now and that it ought not to be done now, is the reason why I believe it ought to have been done while the war was on.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator another question. I hope he will not quit this discussion quite so abruptly. Why could we not get the same effects by invading Germany now that we could by invading it in 1918? It is the same German people.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, the Senator is too able a Senator, and too intelligent, to fail to see the difference between starting another war four years after the war closed and carrying it on to a successful conclusion while we were engaged in it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I can conceive that the Senator thinks the war was a failure as it ended, but that if it had gone on it would have been a success. I should like to ask him what reparation we could have collected from Germany with an army of invasion in 1918?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would not like to undertake to make an inventory of what we might have collected. If we could not have collected anything at all, we would have discovered that fact. I think there were stores of government property and of government wealth, which we are now seeking futilely to get, which could have been taken then if it had been the will of the Allies to take them; and the threat of the world now, of which the Senator speaks, and advisedly and truthfully speaks, is the threat of taking reparations from Germany. Of course, if we could not have gotten them then, what hope is there of getting them now?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator is the one who was advocating taking them by force of arms, and I thought he had some particular property in view which he thought the armies might have seized. No one would advocate the prolongation of war and the killing of men unless there were some object which could be reached. I had thought myself that when an army laid down its arms was not the time to invade the homes and murder the women and children. It may be that the Senator from Washington has so much better ideas of how to carry on a war than I have that he can see some advantage.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think either one of us could set himself up as an expert on how to carry on a war. I imagine that my views about that are just about as good as those of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to ask the Senator another question, if he disclaims he is a great soldier. He wanted us to invade Russia, which was our ally, in 1918. Does he still hold to the idea that we ought to reassemble our armies and invade Russia and overturn the government? It is the same government that it was then.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator asks a great many questions, and bases many of them upon false premises.

Mr. CARAWAY. Where is the falsity in that premise? Let the Senator answer that, and then give me an answer to my question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will be glad to do that, because I am prepared to answer the question. The false premise the Senator laid down—and I only state my impression——

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure the Senator is right about it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is that the Bolshevist Government of Russia was our ally. I deny that, and my opinion is that it was our enemy and the enemy of the world. It is carrying on hostile propaganda in the United States to-day. It was bought and paid for by Germany and is sending money into the United States to-day with the avowed purpose of overthrowing the Government of the United States. I deny it is our ally, or ever was our ally or our friend.

Mr. CARAWAY. Nearly 9,000,000 Russians laid down their lives fighting for the same cause for which we fought. The Senator says they were our enemies. They were dying with us and dying for us, but praying against us. Of course, I realize the falsity of a premise of that sort, but which one of us assumed it I shall leave unanswered. I want to ask the Senator another question; he is interesting. The Senator makes the statement that Russia is sending money into the United States now to carry on a propaganda. From what source does the Senator get the information that that is true?

Mr. POINDEXTER. From various sources. I have reports from investigations which have been made, and also from open statements which have been made by the agents of the Bolshevist Government of Russia, among others Mr. W. Z. Foster, recently arrested by officers of the Government of the United States for revolutionary activities in the United States, who boasted of the large amount of money he had brought back from Russia for the purpose of carrying on revolutionary propaganda in this country.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not know he had ever been in Russia. That is the first information I have had that he had been in Russia. I knew Mr. Haywood went over there; but he is still there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And he is begging to get back.

Mr. CARAWAY. Haywood?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. There are some people here who would be delighted to see him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He went over there with the idea that it was a sort of an economic paradise.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; he went over there because he was under sentence to the penitentiary, and some people were foolish enough to go on his bond, and he jumped his bond and went away.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The people who went with him have been starving and freezing, and I took occasion not long ago to read a report giving the names of certain American travelers who had passed through Russia and seen some of those people, and who repeated their conversations with them, a very good side light on economic conditions in Russia which have been established by these "friends" of the United States, as the Senator calls them.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have never said that Bolshevism was a friend of the United States. It was not to fight Trotski and Lenin that the Senator wanted to send armies into Russia in 1917, if he wanted to support the Kerensky government, because neither Trotski nor Lenin was there at that time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arkansas is mistaken about that.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; I am not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. Lenin had then been in Russia for some time. Mr. Trotski went there a short time before. He was arrested en route by the Canadian authorities at Halifax and held in custody. The British Government filed a protest against allowing him to proceed to Russia.

The activities of Mr. Lenin in Russia at that time were well known; but they were not interfered with by the weak government which existed in Russia at that time or by the Government—I will not characterize it in its relation to Mr. Trotski—which existed in the United States at that time; but I will say that through its influence Mr. Trotski was released and allowed to proceed to Russia. Then they carried on their activities and established a hostile and alien government in that country. However, the period about which I was talking a moment ago and to which the Senator referred when he spoke about marching an army into Berlin was not in 1917 but it was in the autumn of 1918.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I may be permitted to say it, then the Senator is somewhat mixed in his history, because there were no leaders in Russia in 1918 for us to support.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Had they all been killed? What had become of them?

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not such a great authority on what became of them as is the Senator from Washington. I know that the Lenin government was in full control of Russia in 1918, except for an army that was backed by France and then deserted. However, I am not falling out with the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, just in the interest of historical accuracy may I suggest that the Bolshevik revolution occurred November 8, 1917, I think, and since November 8, 1917, Lenin and Trotski have been continuously in control of Russia.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator understand that Kerensky was a Bolshevist?

Mr. JOHNSON. Oh, no, no; I was just fixing the date when Lenin and Trotski came into control.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator is entirely in error as to when Kerensky came into power.

Mr. JOHNSON. It was before that. The revolution occurred November 8, 1917.

Mr. CARAWAY. When was it that Senator Root went to Russia?

Mr. JOHNSON. Prior to that.

Mr. CARAWAY. What month?

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it was in the spring.

Mr. KING. It was in June, 1917.

Mr. CARAWAY. Possibly I am in error as to my date. I am willing to accept the statement of the Senator from California, who seems to have accurate knowledge. Anyway, Kerensky's government was not in existence when the Senator from Washington says he would have had an army invade Russia and uphold our friends, because Kerensky had left Russia long before that time.

However, Mr. President, controversy leads nowhere. I had gotten up to express the hope that for once at least the Senate might forget its war with itself, or its abject truckling to the powers that be, or its hatred of the powers that be. There ought to come a time when we are willing to let measures be decided upon their merits.

Referring to what the Senator from Idaho said yesterday, I know that an invisible tax collector stood by the side of every farmer in America last year, the year before that, and this year. Whether the farmer was husking his corn or threshing his wheat in the Northwest or picking his cotton in my Southland, that invisible tax collector stood by his side and took one-half of everything he produced. That invisible tax collector is called "Isolation." That is the price we pay in order to have nothing to do with Europe. That is the price we are paying now. The farmers of America are paying this year, in the loss of markets, as much as half the debt Europe owes us, of which we are speaking. They lost that much last year. They are paying more, in order that we shall have nothing to do with Europe, than the entire expenses of conducting this Government for a whole year. That is the price you are levying upon the producers of America. If it is worth it, if you get enough satisfaction out of seeing women and children starve in Europe to warrant you in levying that burden upon the producers of America, you must be your own judges in that matter. But whatever the condition is, and whatever the remedy may be, I take it that in the last analysis you will have to answer for yourselves and your party for your action here to-day.

I do not say that any Senator who opposed the reconciliation of Europe, by the methods which I believed, ought to be criticized. I do not say that he was wrong, although I think he was. But whether he was right or wrong, I do know—and this is all I intend to say—that if you shall vote that this amendment shall not be adopted, that there shall be no economic conference, you will be condemning thousands and thousands of women and children to their deaths, and you can not escape that responsibility. You can say that no good can come of adopting this resolution, but you can not prove it. You know that unless some action is taken death must stalk through all the countries of central Europe this winter, and if you are unwilling to make one effort to save them you must carry your responsibility.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas has made a very impressive speech. I am very sorry that I missed a part of the colloquy. I wondered if he had referred to the power of hunger as propaganda of revolution.

Mr. CARAWAY. I did not.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to submit a few observations upon the pending amendment and to offer an amendment to the amendment, which I will send to the desk in order that it may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. FRANCE. I ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. In lines 2 and 3 strike out the words "such governments as he may deem necessary or expedient" and substitute therefor:

The States signatory of or adherent to the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes of July 24, 1899, and their successors and other States since recognized.

So as to read:

That the President is authorized and requested to invite the States signatory, etc.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, the purpose of my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is to make it certain that if this conference is called the participants at the conference will be all of the principal nations of the world. While I am very much in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, I feel that it is very important that we do not again call a conference consisting merely of the three empires of the world and this one Republic. I hope that at the conference which may be called the influence of the three great empires of the world, with their imperial policies, may be counterbalanced by the influence of this Republic, supplemented by that of the other Republics of the world.

Mr. President, the opposition to the proposal for a general international conference is not sudden. It is a settled, stubborn opposition. It is the organized opposition of the great interests of the world which have brought the world to all but utter ruin. The proposal for a general international economic conference is not new. On the 14th day of January, 1919, I offered a resolution providing for a general economic conference. In February, 1920, I again offered a resolution providing for a general economic conference. When the last Borah amendment for calling the disarmament conference was pending I was about to offer my resolution providing for a general international conference as a substitute for the Borah amendment when I was assured that if I did not do so, if I would let the matter as it then stood come to a vote, my resolution providing for a general economic-conference would be considered by the Foreign Relations Committee. It was not so considered, nor have the other resolutions which I offered bearing upon the European situation been considered.

After my journey to Russia in 1921 I offered a resolution based upon a knowledge of Russian conditions, the only accurate knowledge then available for this Government, the knowledge which I had obtained there. I offered a resolution, based upon first-hand information, which provided for the sending of an economic commission to Russia and the inviting of a Russian commission here. Neither the resolution providing for an economic conference nor the resolution providing for dealing with the Russian question was even considered by the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate.

That reveals a deep disease from which we are suffering here, the disease which caused the Senate to so largely abdicate its powers during the Great War in favor of the executive department, a most dangerous proceeding. The executive department can not know, no matter how competent it is, all of the problems of the country and all of the problems of the world. Its wisdom must be supplemented by the wisdom of men elected fresh from the people, and by the knowledge obtained by legislators who take the trouble to investigate or even to go to foreign lands to find out the true situation.

Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the European situation at this time, but I can not let the occasion pass without saying something as to conditions there.

Hardly had the armistice been signed, hardly had the joyous voices, the tumultuous shouting and the vibrant tones of the victorious bells announcing the end of war died away upon the chill November air before some of the Senators who, in spite of being in public life, are yet interested in public questions and not solely in political questions—and the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is one of these—began to realize that the acid difficulties of the reconstruction period would test the resources of the world's statesmanship even as they had not been tested by the problems of the war.

Senators can scarcely realize the situation which confronts the world to-day. In the Senate Chamber, surrounded by all the comforts which we have here, it is difficult for the imagination to run out over Europe and over the far reaches of Germany, Austria, the Near East, Russia, and Siberia, where the real problems for statesmanship lie. If the newspapers should suddenly announce to-morrow morning that during this very winter there would come a war to Europe which would mean the sacrifice of 15,000,000 lives it would be a startling piece of news. I want to say that I believe—and I can support my belief by figures—that more than 15,000,000 people may meet death in Europe this coming winter from starvation because of the refusal of the parliaments and the leaders of the world to fully comprehend the situation which confronts us. It is a situation which imperils the very foundations of our civilization.

Talk about propaganda! Talk about governments being overthrown by insidious propaganda! Why, Mr. President, I am surprised that a Senator of the United States should give voice to such an utter fallacy. Is there a boy reading the history of the world in his elementary school who does not know that revolutions are never caused by agitation, by propaganda, by discussions?

Revolutions are caused by conditions; and when we create the conditions which bring about revolutions they will come. Until those conditions exist they will not come. Hunger is the most potent cause of revolution. Even our Bolshevist friends know that. Even those Bolshevists whose policies have been so greatly criticized by men who knew nothing about them admit the fact that until conditions are ripe for revolutions propaganda and agitation will not bring them about.

But I want to say that the conditions this winter in Europe, if we do not act, will be ripe for revolution, and the red tide of anarchy may sweep the continent of Europe, may even reach England, and possibly cross the Atlantic to this most fortunate land; although I believe that here, in spite of many evidences to the contrary, we will be able to withstand even the most adverse conditions.

In passing, it might not be inappropriate for me to refer to the fact, only mentioned by the distinguished statesman from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]—for he is a statesman, even if he is a Senator—to the effect that already there were signs of deep unrest in the United States. The violation of certain of our Federal statutes has reached such a point that it may be called anarchy. Following the violation of the prohibition statutes, which we were quite sure would be violated if enacted—and for that reason I opposed them—there is now reported a wholesale violation of the statute against counterfeiting our currency. The Senators from the Northwest can tell us that while the patient farmers there are peacefully waiting for some solution of their problem, government has ceased to function, and governmental functions and activities are practically dead in portions of the Northwest because the funds ordinarily secured from the farmers through taxes are not available because the funds are not there.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRANCE. I will yield in a moment. Recently I had gone to Chicago, at great inconvenience to myself, hoping that I might be able to arouse some of the business men of that great metropolis to the seriousness of the situation confronting this country and the world. Coming back from Chicago I met a delegation of farmers from the Northwest who told me of conditions there which were far worse than anything I had dreamed of. I saw a county paper from a South Dakota town in which there were perhaps 1,000 farms advertised for sale because the farmers could not meet their taxes.

I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I hope the Senator will not be quite so general in his statement with reference to conditions in the Northwest. I have the honor to represent in part a Northwestern State. There is nothing of the kind with reference to the government ceasing to function in the State of Wisconsin nor any other State in the Northwest that I know of so far as the functioning of the government is concerned.

Mr. FRANCE. I meant to say to the Senator that the funds which are necessary for the maintenance of some county governments in the State of Wisconsin are not available because the farmers in the State of Wisconsin can not generally meet their taxes. That information I received from a resident in the Senator's own State, and there were several other residents of his State in the delegation.

Mr. LENROOT. There are many farmers in the State of Wisconsin who are in dire distress, but there is no government or agency of government in Wisconsin down to the smallest township that is not functioning to the fullest extent.

Mr. FRANCE. I thought I had made myself clear in stating that when a government can not through taxation secure the funds which it requires for the conduct of its business then it must sooner or later cease to function. It is certainly the case in many of the Northwestern States that the farmers have not the money with which to pay their taxes, and that is the only way of raising money for governmental use.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Will the Senator tell us of a single Northwestern State or a State anywhere that is not able to keep its courts or its county offices open? I would like to have the name of such a State.

Mr. FRANCE. I think I have covered that question quite fully. I was alluding to three specific examples of what I wished to allude to, merely in passing, of an indication that all of our governmental functions in the country were not going on in the usual healthy manner.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But the Senator made a statement which, if it is incorrect, is very unfortunate and very damaging.

Mr. FRANCE. I think the record will show what my statement was. My statement was that in a single county—and it can be duplicated by many other counties—substantially all the taxpayers who are farmers are unable to pay their taxes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The fact that the farmers are unable to pay their taxes is quite a different thing from the fact that the government has ceased to function. On the other hand, instead of this country being in a condition where it is unable to keep its courts open and carry on the civil business of the country, there is more money being expended in public improvements in the United States to-day than at any period of its history, and these improvements have been voted by the people and are being paid for out of the revenues collected from the people.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, can the Senator from Missouri cite me any State, county, or municipality in the United States which pays for its public improvements out of revenue? The distinguished Senator from Idaho a few days ago called attention to the danger of our mounting public debt, and I myself have some figures upon that very point. That is not a sound condition.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It is true, of course, that a great majority of the public improvements are being made out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds; but it is also true that the best financiers in the world take those bonds without question and at low rates of interest. They would not do that if government had broken down. Moreover, in all of the States about which I know anything provision has been made for the payment of interest and a sinking fund and the taxes are being regularly paid. I know of no greater injury that can be done to the economic situation of a country than by the proclamation of a bankruptcy that does not exist. This country is not bankrupt; our States are not bankrupt; and if they were, so much the more reason why we should not undertake to carry the load of Europe.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Missouri. One moment. We are told that we are as rich as Crœsus. That is, when it is desired that we shall go over to Europe and spend our money there. The next moment we are told that we are going to pieces because we have no money and that we are on the verge of starvation. Which end of this proposition do gentlemen intend to take?

Mr. FRANCE. That is a very simple question for me to answer, for I never take but one end of any proposition where our international relations are concerned, and that is the American end. I wish to say in that connection that I have heard a considerable amount of internationalism talked in this Chamber by Members on both sides. I am no internationalist. I would not sacrifice one dollar of American interests or make America sacrifice one single iota of her privileges to save Europe from ruin. I have but one care, and that is the care for my own country. That care for my own country is based upon the belief, which is a part of my being, that the only idea adequate to heal the agony of this disordered world is the American idea. I would not jeopardize this American idea by sacrificing a single American interest to save the millions of Europe from starvation. It is only because I believe that the conditions in Europe are such that our own institutions are being menaced that I think the time has come for us to act and for us to attempt to assert the leadership of the American ideal in the affairs of the world.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I hope the Senator from Maryland did not understand me, although a part of his remarks leads me to think he may have so understood me, to intimate that he was preferring the world over the United States. I cast no such aspersion on the Senator. I know he is just as much of an American as am I. I want him to understand that. I wish, however, to say that the point that I make is that in one breath we are being told that the people of the United States are impoverished to the point where they are likely to become Bolshevists, and the next moment we are told that we are so rich and so prosperous that we can carry the burdens of the world. Both of those propositions can not be true; and it is time in this debate to get down to a few plain facts.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I thank the able Senator from Missouri for his contribution to the debate. He knows in what high esteem I hold him, considering him one of the great statesmen of this body. I was merely saying, in passing, that the conditions in this country are most unsatisfactory.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. FRANCE. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The voice of the Senator from Maryland reaches very far. I do not like to sit here in silence, especially in view of the suggestions that have been developed in the colloquy, representing in part one of the Northwestern States, and allow to go unchallenged the statement of the Senator that government in those States has broken down.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I merely wish to say a word. I am familiar with the conditions in a number of the Northwestern States. I am familiar with the conditions in the State of Washington, which I in part represent; I am familiar with the conditions in the States adjoining that State, and in a number of other States in that section of the country. I think I am as familiar with those conditions as is the distinguished Senator from Maryland, and I can state not only that I do not know of any breaking down of government, but I can say affirmatively and positively that government has not ceased to function, but that it is functioning; that the State authorities are exercising their jurisdiction under their respective constitutions; that the courts are open; that the county governments are carrying on the work of the people; that all of the municipalities are actively engaged in the administration of the laws of an orderly, well-conducted, and free people.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I take no exception to the misinterpretation or the misquotation of my words. I am accustomed to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would not misquote the Senator.

Mr. FRANCE. I merely mentioned in passing the situation of the Northwest. It is as I have told the Senator. Thousands of farms are for sale in the Northwest because the farmers can not pay their taxes. I am a countryman; I come from a county which is supported by its farmers, and I know that if the farmers generally of my county can not pay the taxes it will interfere with the normal operation of governmental processes in that county. That is my proposition, and I maintain it now. I expect to see, of course, the Tory press to-morrow come out with the statement that "Senator FRANCE has stated that all governmental functions in the United States have suspended"; and if Senators who are listening to me can not understand my words any better than to put that interpretation upon them, how can I expect the newspapers, with their own games to play, with their own purposes to serve, with their own masters to obey, to put any better interpretation upon my words?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is not much opportunity to misinterpret the statement that government has ceased to function.

Mr. FRANCE. If I said that government has ceased to function, I think what I said in the paragraph made my meaning perfectly clear; but if it is not clear, I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment. I have never said that government had totally ceased to function in any part of the United States. I was not laboring under that impression; I have not that impression, and I did not intend to convey that impression. I intended to say just exactly what I have stated to the Senator; and I think that the Senator would do well to inquire into agricultural conditions particularly in Oregon, Washington, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana if he has not done so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRANCE. I only intended to submit a few observations, but at the present rate I am afraid that my observations will consume the whole of the afternoon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was merely going to ask the Senator a question. I should like to ask him if he has made any calculation of the amount of taxes, a share of which the farmers of whom he speaks have to pay, that have been imposed upon the people of the United States by the loans of money and the gifts of money which we have already made to Europe? I might suggest in supplementing my question that we loaned Europe a principal of something like $10,000,000,000, on which there is now said to be an accumulated interest of something like $1,000,000,000, making a total of $11,000,000,000 in round numbers, and probably considerably more than that. I remember it is not long since we made a direct appropriation of $20,000,000 out of the Treasury to buy food for Russia; that not long before that we appropriated $100,000,000 to form a revolving fund for the purchase of food for various countries of Europe; and in addition to those amounts still further amounts have been appropriated out of the Treasury, and there have been literally hundreds of millions of dollars donated by private subscription out of the wealth of the United States, out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the United States for the relief of various portions of Europe and Asia.

What I should like to ask the Senator is how he expects, in view of the picture which he is drawing of the distress of the farmers of the United States, calling attention particularly to the farmers of the northwestern section of the United States, to relieve that distress by going still deeper into their pockets to pay out money to foreign countries?

Mr. FRANCE. I am very glad the Senator has asked that question, because it is a question which it is the purpose of my remarks to answer. The Senator's mind evidently has been anticipating what I intend to say. I might preface what I have to say by stating that my proposition is not to take one dollar away from America for any purpose. I would have this country in the position of a creditor who is seeking so to rehabilitate his debtor that he can recover some of his loss.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that all of the speeches which have been made thus far have been general in character. I hope the Senator in his remarks will tell the Senate and the country what he thinks America ought to do to meet the situation. Let us do away with generalities; let us get down now to exactly what we can do, and what the American people ought to do to meet the situation. The passing of resolutions will not do it. In what way does the Senator want the relief for Europe to come from America, and how can it be extended?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, there is no man in the Senate to whom I would rather present my plan than the Senator from Utah, for he is a wise Senator and a very sound business man. It is true that the passing of resolutions will not solve the difficulty, nor will the refusal to pass them solve the difficulty. I have already presented my plan several times to the Senate. I have not been able to secure any considerable amount of attention to my plan, chiefly, I will say, because of the vicious practice which has grown up in the Senate of passing every problem up to the Executive for solution. If it had been considered by the Senate to be its duty to wrestle with our problems due to European conditions, the Senate would have considered the plan which I have presented, which in my judgment is a sound plan for the liquidation of the international debt. Some may not agree with me; some may say that my solution is not a sound solution; but it is a solution, and it is like a banker's solution, and it is a businesslike solution, and unless that solution is accepted I ask the opponents of it to propose something else. We must find a solution for the difficulties which confront the world or we will allow Europe to plunge to utter ruin.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the Secretary of the Treasury a year ago asked Congress for certain powers in order to meet the situation existing at that time; and it is no better to-day than it was, but is growing even worse. He asked that Congress give the commission to be appointed through an act of Congress the power to refund the obligations. He asked that they be given the power to extend the payment for 40 years, and he asked that the rate of interest be not named in the act itself, but be left entirely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury or the administration, so as to deal with every country according to the situation of that country and the conditions existing at the time the settlement was made. He asked also the power to treat the interest upon those obligations in a way that would take care of them at some time in the future, by the payment of monthly payments or yearly payments, or whatever plan might be adopted.

The Senator knows that Congress held that act down to the granting of only two powers. One was that the extension of time should not exceed 25 years. The other power granted was to reduce the rate of interest upon the obligations as it exists to-day—namely, 5 per cent—to not less than 4½ per cent, and to add the accumulated interest to the principal of those debts. That is all the power that was granted the commission, and I do not believe Congress knew at the time that every country in the world that was owing the Government of the United States, except possibly England, could not meet those conditions. I will say to the Senator now that what has happened since—and the information that has been brought to the commission is such that it is impossible for me at this time to go into detail, and it would not be wise for me to do it anyway as a member of the commission—has demonstrated beyond a question of doubt that those debts can not be paid by foreign countries, as was contemplated in the passage of that legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is very apparent from the letter which came in from the President to-day, and from the argument of the Senator from Utah, and from the other propaganda which is going on in the country, that while we are talking about not canceling the debt, it is proposed to put the matter in such a condition that for all practical purposes it will be a cancellation.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to intimate that I have such an idea. On the contrary, I have stated my position openly and publicly so many times that I did not think anybody even thought for a moment that I had such an idea.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the American people are not interested in this debt as a mere memento, to lie down here in the archives of the Treasury for an indefinite length of time, until the seventh and eighth generations shall have passed over. But it is the plan, and has been the plan for weeks, to extend these debts so indefinitely that instead of an actual cancellation it will be a practical cancellation..

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that not a scintilla of evidence has been submitted that I know of that would justify such a charge against the Foreign Loan Debt Commission.

Mr. BORAH. I am not talking about the commission. I do not know that the commission has any idea of such a thing, but that view is being advanced by powerful interests.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator now that I have not a doubt but that every member of that commission would be opposed to any cancellation of the debt.

Mr. BORAH. Why, of course they are opposed to the cancellation of the debt. I am not speaking about the wishes or desires of the commission as an individual entity or the actual open cancellation. I am speaking now of the plan which is being put forward, and which we are advised to-day we must go to the State Department to get our information concerning in a confidential way, to take the limitation off the commission. I do not have to go to the State Department to know that that scheme has long since been on.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that what I stated was in answer to a statement that was made by the Senator from Maryland, brought out by a question that I had asked the Senator from Maryland—that before he concluded his remarks I should like to have him submit some proposition, or his ideas, at least, as to how these debts from the foreign countries can be met and what he recommended for immediate action in order to relieve the situation in Europe.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I shall be very glad, if time permits, to refer to that subject, to which I have already referred on a previous occasion.

Referring to the statement by the Senator from Idaho as to the scheme for settlement of the foreign debt, I would say that is very simple. I do not know whether the Senator from Utah is familiar with it or not, but I am. The scheme is very simple, and I for one am very glad that the Senate took such action as to make that scheme unworkable by specifying a near date for the maturity of the bonds and by regulating the interest charges.

There are two classes of debts owing to the United States by the European countries. The one class is composed of the debts with interest owed by government to government, amounting to some $11,000,000,000. That debt is not giving the international bankers of New York any great concern; but there is another debt owing by Europe to this country which is giving them concern, and that is the debt owing to them—a debt represented by open accounts and bills payable in the banks; a debt amounting perhaps to a sum between four and six billions. Two years ago, according to a careful estimate by one of our leading banks, it was approximately $4,000,000,000, and since that time it has been added to. In other words, there are two classes of debts, the debts owed by governments abroad to our Government and those owed by Europe to our private bankers and investors. Included in that debt, which is made up of open accounts, is, of course, the debt represented by the old Anglo-French bonds which are now in the boxes of these bankers and of their customers. The proposition of the international bankers is to have this Government indefinitely postpone the debts owing to this Government in order to render the investments of the bankers more secure, and the Senate by wise legislative action headed off that proposition. In other words, the international bankers who themselves have European paper in their banks and the bonds of European countries in their boxes want to take care of their interests first by deferring for a long time the payments due from their debtors to our Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that that situation does not relieve anyone in Europe. It does not get them back to work. If all that the Senator has said were true——

Mr. FRANCE. It is true.

Mr. SMOOT. If the international bankers held the obligations of these countries for even the amount that the Senator states, the question before the Congress and the country and America, as all the speeches have led us to believe, is that there must be immediate relief in some way. What I want the Senator to tell the Senate and the country is, How are we going to give that relief? Where is it coming from? From what source? Does the Senator believe the time has arrived when the Government ought to extend further credits to these countries without the payment of the interest that is now due upon the obligations that those countries owe America? Does he think for a moment that the international bankers in this country and in foreign countries are going to advance further loans to these countries under the conditions described by him as existing in those countries?

We have to look at the thing in a business way. No human being living would like to relieve the suffering of Europe any more than I; but the question is, How are we going to do it? From what source is the relief to come? If it is to come from international bankers, as the Senator intimated that they are holding obligations of four or six billion dollars, they are not going to advance any more money unless they know that they are going to have some chance of that money being returned. That is just as natural as life itself. Now, the question is, Does the Senator think that we ought to advance them more money? If so, to what countries, and upon what conditions?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, it is a very simple proposition. The Senator criticized the Senate for not acquiescing in the plan of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; the Senator misunderstood me. I simply stated the situation, and the Senator knows that what I stated is absolutely true.

Mr. FRANCE. Perhaps I should not have used the word "criticized," Mr. President; but the Senator certainly suggested that the Senate did not acquiesce in the plan of the Secretary of the Treasury for dealing with these debts. Certainly the Senate did not, because the plan was not adequate. It merely provided for a deferment of payment. Now, any banker knows that you can not generally relieve a debtor merely by deferment of his payments.

There are three things for a banker to do if he has an insolvent debtor. First, he must defer payment. That is inevitable. He has no choice in that.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that that is exactly what we have in Europe in a great many of the countries.

Mr. FRANCE. I say, that is inevitable. If the debtor is insolvent, the deferment of payment is automatic.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not saying that England is insolvent. I am not saying that any of the other countries are insolvent. I am not going to particularize; but the Senator knows that many of the countries that owe the United States are insolvent, and those are the very countries where the suffering is taking place. Now, how are we going to relieve that situation?

Mr. FRANCE. If the Senator will permit me, I will give him what would be a banker's answer. The answer would be this: Deferment of payment is the first step. The finding of assets which might be utilized in the settlement of the account is the second step. The rehabilitation of the debtor is the third step. Those are the three steps—first, to defer payment; second, to find assets which might be used in liquidation; third, to rehabilitate the debtor.

The Secretary of the Treasury, a great financier and a preeminently distinguished banker, only suggested deferment of payment. He did not suggest examination of the assets, nor did he suggest any plan for the rehabilitation of the debtor. All three of those things are indispensable.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with the Senator as to that. But let us consider the case and see where we land. I suppose nobody will deny the fact that in order to relieve the situation Germany has to be relieved in some way.

Mr. FRANCE. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. She must receive assistance from some source. If Germany should apply for a loan from the international bankers of any country, those bankers would say, "What security have you to offer? How are we to feel secure for the repayment of the money we lend you?" The Senator knows that the reparations imposed upon Germany are such that she can not meet them. Her man power and productivity of the soil are not sufficient to meet the reparations that have been demanded of her. Is there any property in Germany, as long as those reparations stand as a first lien against Germany, that she could give for any further advance of money to relieve her of the stress she is in?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I appreciate the intelligent comment of the Senator from Utah, and we might discuss this matter at some length. I understand, however, that it is desired that a vote be had; and I do not wish to delay the vote, though I would prefer to proceed with my argument. But I wish to say, in passing, that I am not so unsophisticated as to be advocating a loan to Germany with an indeterminate liability in the shape of impossible reparations standing against her. Very shortly after the Versailles treaty was presented I began to contend—and for many, many months I have been contending—that the German reparations should be reduced and that we, as a creditor of Germany's creditors, should see that something be done to relieve Germany from paying these impossible reparations.

I have heard some talk to-day about the wonderful Versailles treaty and what it might have accomplished. A number of Senators on this side of the Chamber, some of whom are business men, voted for the Versailles treaty with reservations. Yet when the treaty of Versailles first came to the Senate the late distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Knox, a great statesman, a student of international affairs, and a student of finance, rose in his place and said in effect that the worst part of the Versailles treaty was not the League of Nations part, but the reparations part, and that if we attempted to place those reparations upon Germany we would hold back the reconstruction of the world for many years. Some of the viper press of the United States, the disloyal tory press of the United States, dared call the great distinguished Senator, Philander C. Knox, of Pennsylvania, of late lamented memory, a pro-German because he suggested the inevitable reduction of the German reparations, the attempt to pay which is keeping Europe to-day in distress, as we all now begin to recognize.

It was estimated by an eminent economist a year ago that at the rate at which the mark was then selling the total income of all the German banks, of all the German public utilities, of all the German industries at the then value of the mark was equal to $4,000,000,000 each year. That is an estimate by a distinguished banker of Boston, W. Irving Bullard. The reparations fixed against Germany, he estimated, amounted to $5,000,000,000 annually. Yet the total income from all of the German banks, industries, and public utilities was only equal to $4,000,000,000, one billion of which had to go to meet fixed charges and one billion of which had to go to meet depreciation, leaving a balance of a possible two billions for the reparations payment, when five billions had been fixed. Of course, it is well known that the reparations payments demanded of Germany are helping to create the situation in Europe to which I am about to refer.

I have long since advocated a reduction of the German reparations, and there is, I will say in passing, somewhere on the dusty files of the Foreign Relations Committee a resolution which probably has never been read by any considerable part of that committee, certainly has never been considered, providing for two things: First, for the liquidation of the debts owed us by certain governments by transfer to us from them of certain assets which they have and which can be transferred, and for a reduction of the total German indemnity to $15,000,000,000, which is the maximum amount which any economist thinks Germany can possibly pay.

Mr. SMOOT. What character of assets had the Senator in mind when he drew the resolution?

Mr. FRANCE. The former German African colonies and cables, transferred by Germany to the allied and associated powers, of which we were one. That may seem to be an unreasonable solution, but it is a solution. It would result in the liquidation of the debt, it would result in the restoration of the exchange rates, and it is a sound business solution. I mean to say it is a solution which a banker would consider, for I have said there are three things which a banker must do with an insolvent creditor—defer payment of interest and principal, seek assets which can be used for the liquidation of the obligations in order that the debtor may begin to buy again, and find means for the rehabilitation of the debtor.

The situation of our debtor, taking Europe as a whole, is this, that Europe can not buy the things necessary for her rehabilitation because she already owes us so much that the exchange situation prevents further adequate buying. The liquidation of what she owes us and the rehabilitation of her productive power must go hand in hand. That is true with reference to the restoring of any insolvent debtor to solvency. You must liquidate what he owes in order that he may buy more, in order that he may restore his productive capacity.

Mr. SMOOT. If that were all, and we were simply relying on the fact that there must be goods sold to Europe, I could answer that by saying that in this year, 1922, we exported more goods than we did in 1921. We exported 60 per cent more goods in 1922 than we exported the year before the war. So it is not the power of Europe to purchase our goods that is producing the unbalanced conditions in the world. It is far deeper than that. I grant that that would have a bearing upon the exchange values of money between countries. There is no doubt of that at all. But I was surprised to learn that the exports of even the products of the farm, of which we speak, have greatly increased, and in some respects they are greater this year than they have been at any time, with the solitary exception of 1918 and 1919, during the period of the war, when everything was bought at enormous figures.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, the very dominating Senator from Utah wants me to make my remarks in the order which he chooses rather than the order in which I had chosen to make them. I would say that I feel very happy that I am able for once to put the Senator in the wrong on figures. His figures of the exports this year, which show that our exports are greater than those last year, are certainly in error. I had intended to refer very shortly to the very subject to which the Senator has alluded in his remarks, and if the Senator will allow me to proceed until I finish——

Mr. SMOOT. I will; but I simply want to say to the Senator that my figures are from the Department of Commerce, and I have a letter of transmittal here, and can tell the Senator in detail what the articles were and the amounts. They will go into the RECORD before we get through with this discussion.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I might accuse the Department of Commerce of almost everything except putting out two sets of figures for the same transactions. I also have figures from the Department of Commerce, which are quite the contrary to those of the Senator from Utah. In fact, my figures from the Department of Commerce show that in the 11 months of 1922 we exported $3,490,345,750 worth of goods, as compared with $4,188,832,983 last year, showing a falling off in exports this year, in the 11 months, over last year of $698,487,233.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has not the figures for the full year?

Mr. FRANCE. This is for 11 months.

Mr. SMOOT. I have an estimate of the exports for 1922, and I will put all the figures in the RECORD.

Mr. FRANCE. They are the estimated exports?

Mr. SMOOT. We have to estimate them for the last few days.

Mr. FRANCE. I am very skeptical about such an estimate. I am dealing with the 11 months of 1922, as compared with the 11 months of 1921, and I know that there has been a falling off of about $690,000,000 in the 11 months.

I had not intended to detain the Senate so long, but here is our situation: The world is short of goods, and distressingly short of food. For more than four years millions of men in Europe were engaged in destruction, withdrawn from the peaceful and plentiful production of food and commodities and placed in the work of destroying life and destroying goods. It is perfectly apparent to all students of European conditions that the productive capacity of Europe since the war has not been restored, and therefore Europe is alarmingly short of all sorts of goods—cotton, wool, manufactured articles, and food products.

At the same time, with Europe to-day needing for her rehabilitation all kinds of commodities as desperately as she needed other commodities for the purposes of the war, our exports have alarmingly fallen off. Because of her failure to reconstruct her productive industries, Europe is in a desperate financial situation. As the Senator has already said, the budgets of Europe do not balance. I shall not discuss the British budget or the budget of any particular country, but a fair striking of any balance sheet in any country of Europe would show that the budgets do not and can not balance.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator does not mean to imply that because we have not contributed to the reconstruction of European industry the budgets do not balance? He does not allege that undue expenditure, unrestrained expenditure, which we would regard as amazing in this country, is not responsible for those deficits?

Mr. FRANCE. We could not be amazed by any expenditure for naval or military preparation. That is inconceivable. We are too accustomed to spending money for those purposes to be amazed. But if the Senator will allow me to proceed, I think I shall be able to develop my argument a little more clearly than if interrupted, and I have been asked to conclude as soon as possible—at which I am not at all surprised—in order that we might have a vote.

Here is the situation in general: In 1913 the aggregate debts of all the countries were $43,000,000,000. In 1918 they were $205,000,000,000. In 1919 they were $295,000,000,000, and in 1922 the total aggregate debts of the countries reached $400,000,000,000.

Of course, that does not mean the European countries alone. In addition to that there is an increased fixed charge for interest on this additional debt of approximately $15,000,000,000.

In addition to the increase of $15,000,000,000 annually in fixed charges there has been one absolute loss in income due to the killing and serious maiming of approximately 10,000,000 men. Those 10,000,000 men, on an average, might be considered to be capable of earning about $500 each, making a deficit in the loss of their earning power and in the loss of their productive capacity of approximately $5,000,000,000. This would make a total loss from the increase in fixed charges due to interest and the decrease in productive capacity due to loss of man power of $20,000,000,000 each year.

In addition to that apparent deficit there is the other deficit to which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] has referred—the deficit which is represented by increased expenditures for naval and military appropriations as compared with the same expenditures before the war. Then, of course, there is the increased expenditure owing to the fact that those who are maimed and disabled must be cared for by government pension. So there is an apparent deficit, taking all of those items into consideration, of possibly between twenty-two and twenty-four billion dollars annually in Europe.

Now, what is the proposition? It is a business proposition. The world as a whole is not earning its fixed charges, because its charges have been increased, its productive capacity has been decreased, and its productive power is decreasing because the means are not at hand for the rehabilitation of the productive power. With the increase in the fixed charges and decrease in earning in the world, there are only two alternatives. One is insolvency—and the insolvency of any of the great European countries, even Germany, would certainly produce an all but disastrous effect here, and the insolvency of all would be sure to produce it. We dare not consider insolvency. Then we must turn to the other horn of the dilemma and consider whether it is possible for us to increase the productive capacity of Europe and the world sufficiently to meet the increase in fixed charges. The logic is inevitable. We must either choose an insolvency because of the increased fixed charges, which amount to from twenty-two to twenty-four billion dollars annually, or we must find some way to increase the income of the world by increasing the productive capacity of the world.

There is the problem. What can be done about it? Something must be done, and we can not do it by sitting here wishing somebody would find a way. The only way it can be done is to call into a conference all of the great nations to see how in each nation the productive capacity of that nation may be not only restored, for that is not enough to prevent insolvency, but increased as well.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But, Mr. President, if we were to increase the production of goods in Europe, what would we do for a market?

Mr. FRANCE. That is not a hard question to answer at all. I say that the world is short of goods, short of all kinds of manufactured commodities; and if that be the case, we need not worry about the market. A market can be found. I have already had some observations to submit on that question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Did not the Senator vote practically to exclude suffering Europe from the American market?

Mr. FRANCE. I hope not, I will say to the Senator. Of course, it is very difficult to discuss any question here without discussing the tariff question. The tariff law which we enacted, whatever any other Senator or Member of Congress might call it, to me was an emergency tariff law—nothing more, nothing less. It was an antidumping law. We did not call it an emergency tariff law, but that is what it was, comparable in every respect to the safety of the realm act which was passed by Great Britain and which carried tariffs quite comparable to the tariffs carried in our law, and which also carried a provision for a sliding scale adjustment there by a committee which was formed under the English law for that purpose, the functions of that committee being comparable to the functions the President will perform here under the sliding scale process, so that the tariffs might not be inequitable and such as to absolutely prevent imports.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But the Senator said they are starving over there, so we passed an emergency law to keep them from bringing their goods over here and selling them quickly. Three or four years from now we will have a sliding scale that will let their goods in; but by that time they will all be dead, according to the Senator's theory.

Mr. FRANCE. No, Mr. President. I perhaps did not clearly state what I intended to state, and that is that the safety of the realm act of England and our tariff act, which I call an emergency act, both had for their purpose the making up by a tariff of the difference in the cost of production abroad and the cost of production at home. It was not intended to be a tariff wall; and I am quite sure that if it shall appear that all exports are being stopped by the tariff in any particular schedule, the tariff will be adjusted. That was my theory of the law, and on that theory I voted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that the figures will not justify the statement made by the Senator from Missouri. The tariff law was enacted September 22 of this year. October was the first full month during which the law was in effect. In October, 1921, we imported, of all goods, $343,330,815. In October, 1922, we imported $370,720,154. We imported more goods after the passage of the tariff law than we did before its enactment.

Mr. FRANCE. I thank the Senator for the contribution.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does the Senator want to let that stay just that way?

Mr. SMOOT. How does the Senator want me to let it stay?

Mr. REED of Missouri. How much wool came in—6,000,000 pounds?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no!

Mr. REED of Missouri. Does not the Senator know that a large part of that was made up because we had passed the so-called emergency tariff law that was very high in its rates, and when we enacted the new law lower rates than the emergency tariff rates existed, and thus let the goods come in which had been banked up waiting for the enactment of the new tariff law? The rates contained in the new tariff law were lower than those of the so-called emergency act, and that accounts in part for the importation. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SMOOT. There were 107,000,000 pounds of wool held in bond waiting for the passage of the tariff law. Of that 107,000,000 pounds of wool that was in bond, there have been about 80,000,000 pounds withdrawn and a rate of duty of 31 cents a pound on the scoured basis has been paid. If 100,000,000 pounds of wool had been brought in and paid for after taken out of bond, that would only have been $31,000,000 on all of the wool. So that it does not account for the increase in the imports of goods since the enactment of the law. It accounts for $31,000,000, and that is the whole of the amount of duty.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, Mr. President, if that is the case——

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I must decline to yield further, as I must conclude my remarks. I hope Senators will allow me to conclude. I do not wish to delay a vote upon the Borah amendment and I do feel that the observations which——

Mr. REED of Missouri. We are not going to have any vote to-night, I think, on any amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. I think it is the desire to have a vote.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. FRANCE. I am sorry that I can not yield further to the Senator from Missouri. I would do as much for him as for any Senator, but I feel that I must conclude. I feel that before a vote is taken upon the amendment the Senate should be advised of certain of the facts which I desire to present as briefly as possible.

Before I take up the figures which I had intended to present I want to say that to my mind immediately after the armistice there seemed to be three problems: First, to restore Germany as a productive nation; second, to restore Russia as a productive nation; third, to find some way for the liquidation of the debts owing us by certain of the countries of Europe in order that the European countries generally might find the exchange market so rehabilitated that they would be able to purchase raw materials and to generally bring about a restoration of their productive industry.

I was so persuaded in the first place of the necessity of the restoration of the productive power of Russia that I took my political life in my hands—and I lost it and I have no regrets—by openly advocating some action which would restore Russia as a productive nation. The restoration of Russia is a part of the general problem of European rehabilitation, and it has a direct bearing upon the amendment which I have offered; for any conference which might be called must, of course, include Germany and Russia; otherwise it would be worse than useless. It would fail as the Paris conference failed; it would fail as the Washington conference, in my judgment, failed; it would fail of removing the great economic difficulties which seem to be forcing the world inevitably to the brink of war.

Mr. WATSON. Has the Senator from Maryland offered an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. FRANCE. I have offered an amendment to the Borah amendment.

Mr. President, I wish to refer to how I happened to become interested in the Russian question. I was not interested in the Russian question because I was particularly interested in Russia; I knew nothing about Russia, except in a most cursory way, and I had very little particular interest in the Russian people; but I was considering how we might so restore Europe that Europe would be able to meet her obligations to us and how we might be able to keep open the markets of Europe for American goods. As I began to study that question I began to realize that Russia was the key to the whole European situation and that if we allowed Russia to continue prostrate we would invite in Europe inevitable disaster.

Consider the fact that prior to the World War Russia, on an average, exported to the industrial countries of Europe 460,000,000 bushels of grain. Russia is the trunk of the tree of Europe. Even before the World War the peoples of the industrial countries of Europe generally were not overfed. Yet, I repeat, prior to the World War Russia poured into the arteries of international commerce 460,000,000 bushels of grain every year, enough to support life in the bodies of about 60,000,000 people in the industrial countries. It soon became evident to me as I studied the European question that if Russia did not export a sufficient quantity of grain to support life in those 60,000,000 people they would inevitably be brought to the verge of starvation. Certainly it seemed inevitable to me that they would become so undernourished that they would become dissatisfied with the conditions in their respective countries and revolution would be invited.

To-day Russia is not exporting and can not export to the industrial countries of Europe her normal amount of 460,000,000 bushels of grain. Not only can she not export 460,000,000 bushels of grain but she herself needs for immediate import 100,000,000 bushels of grain, making an apparent deficit in Europe of 560,000,000 bushels of grain. We know what the situation was in Europe last winter. Hundreds of thousands of people starved in Russia, and hundreds of thousands of people in Germany were undernourished and yet at that time there were, perhaps, some carry-over supplies. This winter, however, the situation will be even worse, because not only is there that apparent deficit of 560,000,000 bushels of grain but there is a deficit because of the falling off of production in the other countries outside of Russia of 275,000,000 bushels of rye and wheat, making a total deficit, apparently, of grain in Europe of more than 800,000,000 bushels, an amount equal to the total of our last wheat crop. Senators can imagine what our situation here would be if we had not raised a grain of wheat last year with all our surplus of corn and potatoes and other edibles, which in many years we do not even use.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. FRANCE. I will yield to the Senator from Florida if he only wishes to ask me a question, for I am very anxious to conclude my remarks.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to ask a question. How many bushels of grain did the United States send to Russia with, I think, it was the $10,000,000 which we appropriated for that purpose?

Mr. FRANCE. We appropriated $20,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. How many bushels of grain would that purchase?

Mr. FRANCE. I think a considerable amount was expended for corn, but I have not at hand the exact figures as to the number of bushels of wheat which we exported to Russia.

Unfortunately, however—for it was really a tragic misfortune—we did not get that wheat to Russia in time for the last spring sowing, so the Russian crops this year have not been benefited by the shipment of the wheat into Russia last spring.

I repeat there is an apparent shortage in Europe of 800,000,000 bushels of grain. That, of course, is more than enough grain to supply 100,000,000 people with breadstuffs. The only redeeming feature of the terrible situation in Europe is the fact that they have produced in Europe this year an extraordinary potato crop—a billion bushels more than last year—so that they will have approximately 200,000,000 bushels of potato starch to in part make up the loss of the 800,000,000 bushels of grain so far as the starch foods are concerned; but that a destructive famine seems inevitable in Europe during the present winter can not be denied.

It is probably quite true that unless drastic steps are taken so that we can export all of our surplus foodstuffs to Europe several million—probably, putting it conservatively, 15,000,000—people will perish in Europe this winter from starvation. It is quite true, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has stated, that we have exported this year more than the usual amount of foods to Europe; I do not deny that, but the purchasing power of Europe has been so weak that even the physical demand has not created what might be called an economic demand for our grain and the price has not risen.

Not only that, but, to counterbalance the export of food, there has been a falling off of the consumption of foodstuffs in the United States due to our own industrial depression here. The mere fact that under these conditions we have exported to Europe more grain than we normally export is in itself an alarming one, for the reason that were it not for the desperate situation in Europe the Europeans would not be buying our grain in such unprecedented quantities. However, while our farmers in the West are unable to sell their grain at a price comparable to what the price should be, while they are compelled to sell their grain at far below the cost of production, indeed, while exports to Europe are not proceeding as they should, millions of people in Europe are in desperate need of all that we could supply in the way of foodstuffs.

I have been unable to get the newspapers to give any notice to this alarming situation in Europe. If I were a speculator, which I am not, I would be purchasing wheat to-day; and I am quite convinced that some of the wise ones who must know the conditions in Europe are quietly accumulating wheat at this very time, buying from the farmer at less than the cost of production and holding it in order that they may sell to Europe next spring when the price should certainly be much higher than it is now. I am in favor of a free market, of course, for grain. I do not believe that we can by law control the price of anything, but I say that if it is true that the newspapers are concealing European food conditions from the people in the interest of those who are quietly accumulating the grain, it is a crime which should not be lightly passed over if there is any way of dealing with it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what information he has that certain interests are hoarding grain?

Mr. FRANCE. I will say that the information which I have—and I have collected it simply because of my interest in this public question—certainly should be available to many of the big operators in grain, and it seems to me that if they have the information they might well be quietly accumulating grain before the price enhances. I have no criticism to make of their doing so; I am merely pointing out that it is very unfortunate that these facts should be kept from the farmers in order that this quiet accumulation of grain may go on. I will say further to the Senator from Michigan that I am not one of the Senators who believe in regulating from Washington every grain exchange, every newspaper, and every business transaction. I think that is one of the false theories of government with which some were indoctrinated during the war, much to the detriment of the country, and I am very free from that theory; but the situation seems to be as I have described it, and that the need in Europe for grain is desperate. There is an apparent deficit of 800,000,000 bushels of grain, and yet our farmers can not sell their wheat and corn for what it costs to produce them.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very much interested in the view expressed by the Senator to the effect that we may expect a very material rise in the price of grain during the spring months. That will be gratifying information to the destitute people of the Northwest. However, I tried to follow the Senator to learn upon what basis he ventures that opinion. The people of Europe will not within that period of time improve in their financial and economic condition, I am sure, so as to hold out the hope that they will eat more. Russia will produce no more. Is there any other element than the apparent shortage in the production throughout Europe affording hope along that line?

Mr. FRANCE. I value the Senator's opinion very highly; and I will say that I am merely expressing an opinion, and an opinion upon such a question is not, of course, compelling upon anyone.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I want to try to find out from the Senator upon what he bases his opinion, because I value his opinion.

Mr. FRANCE. I am rather persuaded that before the situation becomes too desperate in Europe the statesmen of the world will be so aroused that some means will be found to facilitate the purchase of grain. At any rate, however, it is undeniable that, in order to preserve their very lives, those Governments over there must strain their resources to the uttermost to purchase, if necessary, as they did during the war, enough grain to keep their people sufficiently nourished so that they can be held in stable government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is to say, the Senator thinks the situation is so desperate that relief must come.

Mr. FRANCE. It must come, in my judgment; and yet I say that it may possibly not come. I am not at all persuaded that we can cure the serious situation in which we find ourselves; there may be some ground for the pessimism which some express when they say that the situation can not be cured, but I think we should try to cure it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FRANCE. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Did I understand the Senator from Maryland to say that there was a shortage of 800,000,000 bushels of grain in Europe?

Mr. FRANCE. Apparently so.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator be so kind as to refer to his sources of information in regard to that?

Mr. FRANCE. I will say to the Senator that these calculations unfortunately must be worked out by a process of reasoning. We have not any adequate crop reports for Europe; we have no crop reports at all from Russia. I will refer the Senator to the manner in which I compiled my figures. I said that prior to the war Russia exported to the industrial countries of Europe on an average 460,000,000 bushels of grain. That quantity of grain is not now available for those industrial countries. Russia now must import 100,000,000 bushels of grain in order during the winter to sustain the lives of her people who are short of grain. There is a deficit of 560,000,000 bushels. The fairly accurate crop reports of the countries outside of Russia indicate that there is a shortage of wheat and rye of 275,000,000 bushels. Adding that to 560,000,000 makes a deficit of grains of approximately 835,000,000 bushels. Now, even if you cut that in half the situation is desperate, because 800,000,000 bushels of grain is an ample quantity of grain to support the lives of 100,000,000 people, and I have only been predicting that approximately 15,000,000 would face actual starvation in Europe the coming winter, which, I will say to the Senator, is very conservative.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator's statement that there is a shortage of 800,000,000 bushels is a startling one to me.

Mr. FRANCE. It is, I will say to the Senator; it is a very startling one.

Mr. STERLING. I would rather have a different statement than that given by the Senator, namely, that we must reach this by a process of reasoning. It seems to me that crop estimates might be furnished that would be quite reliable. I am reminded, if the Senator will permit me, of what we were urged to do during the war by the present Secretary, Mr. Hoover, the then Fuel Administrator, and of his statement as to what the shortage was or would be in Europe with the man power of Europe so engaged in the prosecution of the war; but the Senator's figures are surely away beyond anything that was given us at that time.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say to the Senator that I presume he does not question that prior to the war Russia produced 2,600,000,000 bushels of the grains, about 1,600,000,000 bushels more of these grains than the United States produced. I presume he would not question that.

Mr. STERLING. As the Senator from Indiana suggests to my mind, what kind of grain? Was it wheat?

Mr. FRANCE. No; certainly not wheat; but I would recall to the distinguished Senator's mind that there are no wheat eaters in the world except in the United States and possibly in England. I mean to say, wheat eaters in the sense that they support life by the use of wheat. No; I am referring, of course, to wheat, rye, barley, and oats, the staple food grains; and in such a situation as this we must, of course, take into consideration all of the food grains. Let me say to the Senator that the distinguished Senator from Idaho, I think, yesterday—perhaps it was another—presented figures showing that the world was short a billion bushels of bread grains. I am very glad that the Senator is becoming alarmed, because it is time that we became alarmed over the real food situation and less alarmed over the propaganda situation, because the worst propagandist in the world for revolution is hunger gnawing at a man's stomach.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand my friend to say that there is a shortage of 830,000,000 bushels of wheat in Europe, or of all grains combined?

Mr. FRANCE. No; of all of the grains. The shortage of 275,000,000 bushels is the shortage of wheat and rye. That is the shortage in the countries outside of Russia. The total shortage which I said was the shortage represented by what Russia formerly exported is a shortage of wheat, rye, barley, oats, and corn.

Mr. WATSON. How much of wheat?

Mr. FRANCE. This is what Russia formerly exported—161,000,000 bushels of wheat, 34,000,000 bushels of rye, 168,000,000 bushels of barley, 65,000,000 bushels of oats, and 30,000,000 bushels of corn. I will put these figures in the RECORD. They have been put in the RECORD once before.

Mr. WATSON. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Russians are not wheat eaters?

Mr. FRANCE. Not as we are.

Mr. WATSON. Do they export all they raise?

Mr. FRANCE. Oh, no—no, indeed. I do not think it is necessary for me to put in all of the figures of the production. The total production of those grains in Russia was 2,600,000,000 bushels, as compared with our total production of the same grains of about 1,000,000,000 bushels.

Now, I appeal to the Senators. There can be no question as to the significance in my figures. I say that the alarming fact, which no other Senator here has seemed fully to realize, is that Russia—the great granary of Europe, producing normally 2,600,000,000 bushels of grain—has been practically prostrate for four years; and the inevitable result of that will be malnutrition, a great amount of starvation, and profound unrest in the industrial countries of Europe. As a matter of fact, the situation in Germany to-day, which is one bordering on revolution, has been brought about owing to the shortage of food, and I want to say that the same situation exists to a lesser degree in England itself, for many people in England are on short rations to-day because of the failure of the agricultural productive power of Russia; and I say to you, Senators, that if you really face this great Russian question you will find that there can be no rehabilitation of Europe until the agricultural productive power of Russia is rehabilitated. Russia, of course, always paid the interest on her external obligations and for her imports of manufactured goods with her exports of grains. That 460,000,000 bushels of grains exported every year by Russia went, of course, for the payment of the interest on the debt she owed the other countries, and for the payment for what she bought in the way of manufactured articles. The reason why the French are making such demands upon the Germans is that the French are deprived of income which they might be receiving from Russia, owing to the fact that Russia is not in a position to make any payments, in view of the fact that she can not export.

Mr. President, I have already referred to how this situation affects the United States. We found in 1921 that we were in a very serious condition, due to unemployment. We had between four and five millions of men unemployed, and we did not know why it was. It was very apparent that the slowing down of our industries, causing that unemployment, was due to a falling off in our export trade; and I will put into the RECORD the figures showing the falling off of our export trade in 1921 as compared with 1920. Our export trade fell off $3,700,000,000.

That is quite a tidy sum if you stop to figure it up. That is a sum sufficient to pay 4,000,000 men $70 a month for a year, and yet we wondered why you had unemployment and why our farmers could not sell their grains at a living price. It was due to the sudden curtailment of our export trade, and this year it is worse; and I will say, as meeting the food-export figures of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that during that period of 1921, owing to industrial depression, our domestic consumption of wheat, according to estimates, fell off 250,000,000 bushels compared with 1920.

Mr. President, it is a source of regret to me that so few Senators seem to understand the real causes which bring about war. We hear so much talk about disarmament, and I really believe that there are Senators here who think that if we did not have navies and armies we would not have any war. That is the most absurd proposition that ever could be conceived of. We could disband every army, scrap every navy, destroy every rifle, abolish gunpowder, and still, if the economic conditions were such as to bring about war, war would come. We had wars before these great agencies of destruction were ever dreamed of, and we will have them, perhaps, if civilization shall go down into darkness, after they have been forgotten.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the truth of what the Senator has just said is proved by all history. Applying it to naval disarmament, the greatest naval battles in the history of the world, which have had more effect upon the destinies of mankind than any others, were fought long before we had any modern navies at all.

Mr. FRANCE. That is true. My fear with reference to the disarmament conference was that if Great Britain, Japan, and France—the three great remaining empires of the world—met with the United States to formulate any sort of a policy, we would naturally drive into another camp the great, the mighty nations, the mightiest nations in all the world so far as man power and natural resources are concerned—Russia, Germany, China, and the Mohammedans—creating a countercoalition. A very few weeks after I expressed that fear Russia and Germany had already struck hands in a notable treaty. The situation in Europe is such, the economic distress in Russia and Germany is such, the situation in the Near East is such, that Russia, Germany, and the Mohammedans are naturally being consolidated together under the hammers of repression and oppression into a mighty counteralliance which threatens war.

If the British deliver an ultimatum to the Turks, what will happen? Why, I heard a Senator declare here that it was safe to go into the four-power pact because Russia would not revive within the 10 years of the treaty's life. I asked him where his information on that score came from. I knew that he had no information.

I knew that the great arms conference was sitting with its eyes blinded as to what was going on in Russia, and I knew that it was making a terrible mistake; for all the Russians need to-day is artillery, and they have an army which they can put in the field that could march to Paris and could hardly be stopped. We have read in the papers within a few days that the great Krupp industry has received a concession of several hundreds of thousands of acres of land in Russia—and for what purpose? It seems to me that it is quite possible that it is in payment for artillery; and certainly the closest sort of relationships exist between Germany and Russia. It is a situation which certainly needs most careful study.

Mr. President, I have concluded what I have had in mind to say. I say that we face the most critical situation which the world has ever faced, and it is time for us to lay aside our prejudices, to discard all policies of vengeance and violence, and to seek to apply policies which will mean the reconciliation of all peoples and the rehabilitation of the productive power of the world. If we are to do that, we must have an international conference where these great questions can be discussed. What is Russia to do with reference to her former external obligations, her former debt? What is to be done about the German reparations? What is to be done about the obligations owing by the various countries to the United States? Those are the great questions which must be settled if we are to prevent a most serious situation overtaking the world.

Mr. President, I had anticipated discussing the European situation from a slightly different angle within the next few days. I am in doubt as to whether it would be helpful or harmful for me to state what I believe to be the real reason for our Russian policy. Certain it is that the whole weight of the international bankers and of the leaders of Great Britain, France, and Japan is thrown on the side of not allowing us to deal directly with Germany and Russia. The Empires have their own imperial purposes to serve, and it seems to me that we should be very careful not to be guided or influenced by their advice on these great international questions. We should formulate our own German policy and our own Russian policy. I think if the real situation behind the politics of Europe were thoroughly understood, it would mean that we would soon most radically change our general European policy, and particularly our Russian policy.

I felt that it was my duty to put some of these figures in the RECORD with reference to the European situation. Of course, if Senators feel, in view of certain unreasoning opposition here and there, that they wish to defeat this amendment, it is for them to decide. Personally, I want to see my party deal with this situation in a masterful way. I want to see a policy adopted by our party for this Republic which will mean the assertion in the world's counsels of American leadership and the application of the great principles of exalted benevolence enjoined upon us by Washington, who in his farewell address said:

> Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence.

Mr. FRANCE subsequently said: Mr. President, during the course of my remarks yesterday I had intended to ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my remarks certain letters and resolutions substantiating what I had said. In the haste of closing the debate I neglected to do so. Therefore I now ask unanimous consent to print in connection with my remarks of yesterday letters from the Department of Agriculture and certain resolutions which bear out the statements which I made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Figures from tables of Mr. O. B. Austin, statistician of the National City Bank of New York, showing the increase in the national debts of the world.

1793, total of national debts	$2,483,250,000
1820, total of national debts	7,299,750,000
1850, total of national debts	9,000,000,000
1874, total of national debts	22,500,000,000
1900, total of national debts	31,201,759,000
1913, total of national debts	43,302,300,000
1918, total of national debts	205,396,000,000
1919, total of national debts	295,070,000,000
1921, total of national debts	400,000,000,000

National debt of United States now 10 per cent of pre-war wealth.
National debt of Great Britain now 50 per cent of pre-war wealth.
National debt of France now 73 per cent of pre-war wealth.
Austria-Hungary and Germany each now has a national debt in excess of the national wealth.
The increase in the fixed charges of the nations as the result of the increased interest payments on approximately three hundred and sixty billions of increased national debt must be in 1921 about fifteen billions of dollars, as compared with 1913.

Mr. FRANCE. It has been claimed that the earning power of the world has been reduced by the absolute loss of 10,000,000 of men, at their most productive ages, due to deaths and serious and total disabilities. Estimating the productive power of each of these men as worth $500 per annum there would appear to be an annual deficit of $5,000,000,000 due to loss in man power. Adding to the $15,000,000,000 representing the increased interest charges the $5,000,000,000 of decreased income through loss of man power gives us a deficit of $20,000,000,000 annually. To this must be added increased charges for the care of the disabled and for pensions for widows and orphans.

Russia can not now export these grains to the industrial countries, but requires, it is estimated, to import 100,000,000 bushels of wheat for seed and food. Adding the loss of the grains which she formerly exported to what she requires for import would give us an apparent shortage of 560,000,000 bushels of these principal grains. In addition to this apparent shortage must be added the decrease in the production of rye and wheat in the European countries outside of Russia, as follows:

Table showing the loss of production of rye and wheat in the principal European countries in 1922 as compared with 1921, without including Russia, and the increase in the potato crop.

Total loss			275,913,000

I offer the following paragraphs from those memoranda giving the figures showing the loss in grains and the increase in the production of potatoes in Europe in 1922 as compared with 1921:

[Extracts from statement of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture from memoranda submitted by Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.]

The present estimate of the rye production of Europe for all countries reporting amounts to 670,715,000 bushels as compared with 726,812,000 bushels last year, or a decrease of 56,097,000 bushels. These estimates include figures for 18 countries, and all of the principal rye producing countries have reported except Russia.

According to our last published statement the European production for 1922 was 985,650,000 bushels compared with 1,215,084,000 bushels for 1921, or a decrease of 229,434,000 bushels. This statement was published in Foreign Crops and Markets October 11, 1922, page 215, and in Weather Crops and Markets for November 18, page 449.

Since that statement was prepared revised estimates have come in from some countries for both 1922 and 1921, so the total European production for 1922 is now estimated at 988,719,000 bushels as compared with 1,208,535,000 bushels in 1921, or a decrease of 219,816,000 bushels.

The European potato production this year is estimated to be 8,260,184,000 bushels as compared with 2,192,640,000 bushels in 1921, or an increase of 1,067,544,000 bushels. These estimates do not represent the total European production since they include only 12 countries. Among the countries for which figures are not available are France, Russia, Ireland, Spain, Sweden, and Italy, which together produced an average of 1,702,205,000 bushels during the period 1909–1913. Reports on the condition of the potato crop indicate that it is good in Europe generally this year.

From what I have said it is apparent that considering the world as a whole, as made up of the great civilized nations, we may say that it is short of food and goods, disordered in its productive power, and practically insolvent. The remedies are: The immediate calling of a general economic conference; a world-wide plan for food and seed conservation and for increased acreages next year; financial machinery so that our farmers can export at profitable prices to meet Europe's famine need; the restoration of Russia's agricultural productive power; increase of total world productivity by development of her human and natural resources; reduction of German indemnity; liquidation of the international debts, especially those owed to us by Europe; establishment of cooperation or a concert between the nations in plans for reconstruction, reconciliation, the spread of civilization, the application of equity and justice in international affairs, and permanent peace.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks the following bills and resolutions, presenting in concrete form my solution for these various problems created by the World War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

RESOLUTION OFFERED BY MR. FRANCE JANUARY 14, 1919, PROVIDING FOR AN IMMEDIATE PEACE, THE RETURN OF OUR TROOPS FROM EUROPE, AND THE CALLING OF A GENERAL INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE TO DEAL WITH THE POLITICAL, INDUSTRIAL, AND FINANCIAL INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS GROWING OUT OF THE WAR.

[Sixty-fifth Congress, third session.]

Senate Resolution 412.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 14, 1919.

Mr. FRANCE submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas on the 11th day of November, 1918, the President of the United States announced the signing of an armistice between the United States and the Central Powers, against which this Nation had been at war, the President at that time declaring "The war thus comes to an end"; and

Whereas it has not as yet come to the knowledge of the Senate of the United States that peace negotiations have been entered into with the enemy; and

Whereas the keeping for any length of time of an American Army upon European soil is undesirable and a cause of vast expense and of deep anxiety to the American people; and

Whereas profound unrest among the people of many nations and violent revolutions in several countries, which spirit of unrest and revolution are augmented by the hardships resulting from the maintenance of armies of occupation, and by that underproduction, throughout the world, of the necessities and commodities of life which has resulted from the long withholding of many millions of men from productive industry, must be a cause for deep concern on the part of the several governments: Therefore be it

Resolved, First. That the Senate, as part of the treaty-making power of the Government, does hereby consent to and most earnestly advise that at the very earliest possible moment negotiations be entered into with the enemy looking to the establishment of a just peace, and that all subsidiary questions which might delay the establishment of such a just peace between the nations, without which peace national stability is everywhere endangered, may be postponed for a later discussion at an international conference.

Second. That the Senate, as part of the treaty-making power of the Government, does hereby consent to and most earnestly advise that at the earliest possible moment consistent with the safety of this Nation American troops be returned from Europe; and, further, that after the establishment of peace the President call upon the Governments of North and South America to appoint two delegates each to an international conference, to be held at some suitable time and place, to consider plans for the closer cooperation of these Governments in promoting justice, progress, and friendship among and within the said countries of the Western Continent; and further, That the President also, at some time subsequent to this conference of the American Republics, call upon all the nations to appoint delegates to another international conference to be held at some suitable time and place to discuss and consider plans for the promotion of justice, progress, and friendship among and within the nations of the world, such conference to particularly discuss and consider plans for the removal so far as may be of the economic and social causes of war, and to this end particularly give attention to—

First. The congestion of population of some nations.

Second. The underpopulation of other nations.

Third. The unregulated competition between the more populous and industrial countries for the raw products and trade of the less populous and agricultural ones.

Fourth. The exploitation of the weaker and the less advanced by the stronger and more highly organized nations.

Fifth. A larger self-determination of peoples and nations.

Sixth. The possibility of the cooperation of the more advanced nations for the improvement of the conditions of the backward countries, particularly those of Africa and parts of Asia, by the formulation of plans for the reclamation of waste lands for the utilization of natural resources, including water powers, for wise colonization, for education, and for the spread of civilization in the interest of those countries and of the world.

Seventh. The best means for the wider and more rapid extension of education and civilization throughout the world, looking to the ultimate elimination of national, racial, and religious antagonisms.

Eighth. The establishment of constitutional republics or of governments of such uniformity throughout the world as would make for that national stability upon which could be based a permanent international order.

Ninth. The elimination of all causes of national enmities and the establishment of friendship and justice between the nations, with a view to the ultimate establishment of a league of nations or world federation of republics for the purpose of promoting the cause of progress and of peace throughout the earth.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY MR. FRANCE FEBRUARY 26, 1920, PROVIDING FOR THE REESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE AND THE CALLING OF AN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE TO FORMULATE PLANS FOR INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION; TO CONSIDER THE COMMON AND MUTUAL INTERESTS AND THE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE STATES AND PEOPLES OF THE WORLD; TO RECOMMEND PROJECTS OF UNIFORMITY, RECIPROCITY, OR COOPERATION IN THE ACTION OF THE STATES, RESPECTIVELY; TO FORMULATE A BODY OF INTERNATIONAL LAW BASED ON THE SECURITY OF THE FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS OF THE INDIVIDUAL AS THE PRIME FUNCTION OF ALL GOVERNMENTS, AND FOR APPLYING AS BETWEEN STATES THE ANALOGIES OF THE LAWS OF PARTNERSHIP AND COTENANCY, AND AS BETWEEN STATES AND THEIR RESPECTIVE COLONIES, PROTECTORATES, AND DEPENDENCIES THE ANALOGIES OF THE LAWS OF CONSERVATORSHIP, GUARDIANSHIP, AND TRUSTEESHIP; TO DEVISE METHODS FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF THE PEOPLES OF COLONIES, PROTECTORATES, OR DEPENDENCIES FROM THE STATUS OF DEPENDENCIES TO THAT OF INDEPENDENCE AND TO FULL PARTICIPATION IN THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES; TO PROMOTE COOPERATION AMONG THE MORE ADVANCED NATIONS FOR THE IMPROVEMENT AND ADVANCEMENT OF THE BACKWARD COUNTRIES AND TERRITORIES; TO CONSIDER THE PROBLEMS OF THE CONGESTION OF SOME AND THE UNDERPOPULATION OF OTHER NATIONS AND THE UNREGULATED COMPETITION BETWEEN THE MORE POPULOUS AND INDUSTRIAL COUNTRIES FOR THE TRADE AND RAW PRODUCTS OF THE LESS POPULOUS AGRICULTURAL ONES; TO STUDY THE PROBLEM OF INTERNATIONAL FINANCE, CREDITS, AND EXCHANGE, WITH A VIEW TO THE PROMPT SHIPMENT ON SUITABLE CREDITS, PARTICULARLY INTO RUSSIA, GERMANY, AUSTRIA, CHINA, AFRICA, AND ANY OTHER AGRICULTURALLY OR INDUSTRIALLY UNDEVELOPED OR PROSTRATED COUNTRIES, OF TOOLS, AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS, SEEDS, AND OTHER MATERIALS NECESSARY TO PRODUCTION, AS WELL AS FOODSTUFFS, NECESSITIES, AND COMMODITIES, FOR THE PURPOSE OF ENCOURAGING A RESUMPTION OF PRODUCTION WHICH WILL BE FAVORABLE TO THE REHABILITATION OF THE WORLD; TO LOCALIZE HOSTILITIES BETWEEN STATES; TO MAKE FURTHER PROVISION FOR THE PACIFIC SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES; TO ENCOURAGE THE ESTABLISHMENT, WHERE STABLE GOVERNMENTS DO NOT EXIST, OF CONSTITUTIONAL REPUBLICS OR GOVERNMENTS OF SUCH CHARACTER AS WOULD MAKE FOR THAT NATIONAL STABILITY UPON WHICH COULD BE BASED A PERMANENTLY PEACEFUL INTERNATIONAL ORDER; TO PROMOTE AMITY AND MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE ORIENTAL AND OCCIDENTAL PEOPLES; TO CONSIDER THE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC RELATIONS OF THE STATES AND PEOPLES OF THE WORLD AS NATURALLY AND NECESSARILY UNITED FOR MUTUAL AID AND BENEFIT; AND TO CONCERT MEASURES ACCORDINGLY.

[Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

Senate Joint Resolution 163.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 26, 1920.

MR. FRANCE introduced the following joint resolution, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 163) providing for the reestablishment of peace and the calling of an international conference to institute a concert of nations to advise concerning international cooperation as a substitute for the League of Nations and for a national referendum.

Whereas on the 11th day of November, 1918, the President of the United States announced the signing of an armistice between the United States and the powers with which the United States had been at war, the President at that time declaring "the war thus comes to an end"; and

Whereas it is most desirable that there shall be a prompt termination of the status of war by the formal legal reestablishment of peace between the United States and Germany; and

Whereas the peace treaty has failed to receive the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senate, one of the reasons for the negative action being that more than one-third of the Senate hold that the covenant of the League of Nations incorporated in said treaty if adopted by the United States would contravene its fundamental principles as declared in the Declaration of Independence by subjecting the external relations of the United States to the control of a foreign body not recognizing these principles, would violate the Constitution by attempting to change the form of government of the United States without a constitutional amendment, and would ignore and tend to destroy the right of States under the law of nations to defend themselves and to extend civilization in behalf of all civilized nations by means of war when other means are impossible; and

Whereas there is a profound unrest throughout the world, due in large part to the failure of the Paris peace conference to formulate such plans for peace and for international cooperation for the advancement of justice, liberty, and the general welfare as would commend itself to the great liberal spirit of the age and the new enlightened conscience of mankind; and

Whereas the long-continued underproduction and rapid destruction during the war of the necessities and commodities of life, particularly of food, have resulted in a serious shortage, which makes imperatively necessary an immediate reorganization of all agricultural, industrial, financial, and commercial activities for the maximum production in all countries and for the distribution among the nations by the normal methods of trade and commerce of such food, necessities, and commodities; and

Whereas because of the close community of financial, industrial, and commercial interests of all of the nations of the world, the industrial and financial prostration and paralysis of Germany, Austria, Russia, and other recently belligerent countries of Europe, with the necessarily ensuing unemployment, impoverishment, and starvation of their citizens, with the threatened unrest and revolution in certain of these countries, are impeding the rehabilitation and are menacing the peace of the world and the stability of all government; and

Whereas, therefore, it is desirable to bring about immediately a situation of general peace and to take measures for establishing at the earliest practicable moment a form of international organization, approved by the public sentiment of the people of the United States, to deal with the social and economic problems growing out of the present war, and to bring about as nearly peaceful relations as possible between States by judicious and carefully wrought out measures of international cooperation; and

Whereas those opposing the plan of international organization contained in the covenant of the League of Nations recognize that it has now become necessary for the United States to cooperate methodically and permanently with the States and countries of the world and to take the lead in establishing a concert of nations to direct such cooperation by considered advice, but have heretofore been confined to an indirect and imperfect expression of their views by means of reservations to the said covenant proposed in the Senate; and

Whereas the question of the participation of the United States in an international organization is an issue in the approaching presidential election, and it is desirable that the plan of international organization approved by those opposing the League of Nations should be formulated so that the voters, by supporting a candidate for the office of President pledged to one or the other of the two plans, may express the public sentiment concerning the policy to be pursued by the United States respecting international organization: Now, therefore, in order to promote a general pacification, to declare the plan of international organization approved by those opposed to the plan of the League of Nations, and to make provision so that at the next national election a referendum vote may be had determining the public sentiment of the United States concerning the form of international organization which the people approve, be it

Resolved, etc., That the status of war with Germany, declared by the Congress by Senate Joint Resolution 1, on the 5th day of April, 1917, be, and it is hereby, declared to be terminated and the full status of peace be, and it is hereby, declared to be reestablished.

2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and advised to make treaties of peace without annexations or indemnities and of trade and intercourse with the Republic of Germany, all matters of dispute between the two countries to be submitted for arbitration to The Hague tribunal.

3. That, in pursuance of this resolution declaring the reestablishment of peace, all American troops now upon foreign soil shall be immediately returned to the United States.

4. That the President is hereby authorized and directed, by invitations to be sent out by him during the month of May, 1921, to invite the States signatory of or adherent to the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, of July 24, 1899, and their successors, and all other States since recognized or which may be recognized prior to the sending out of the invitations, to send three delegates each, and also two delegates in behalf of each of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, respectively, of the various States having colonies, protectorates, or dependencies, to assemble at Washington, on a date in September, 1921, to be fixed in the invitation, to consult concerning the formation of a more perfect general concert and union, the establishment of general justice, the assurance of the general tranquility, the promotion of the general welfare, and the securing generally of the blessings of liberty to the peoples now living and to their posterity.

5. That the list of said States to be invited shall include the following: Argentine Republic, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brasil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hedjaz, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Yugoslavia, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Persia, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, Salvador, Serbia, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

6. That the invitations shall expressly state that the motive of the United States in issuing them is to initiate and bring about a concert of nations as a substitute for the League of Nations, and shall be expressly with the understandings as herein set forth, namely: There shall be an international conference of the States, composed of three delegates from each of the States, and an assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, composed of two delegates from each of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, the international conference and the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies to sit separately but at the same time. The assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall deliberate exclusively concerning social and economic measures and shall report to the international conference. The international conference and the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be the first of a series of periodical conferences and assemblies of similar character, meeting at periods of three years at places determined by the international conferences. The general object of the conferences and assemblies shall be to constitute a concert of the States and countries of the world on the general lines of the International Conference of American States and the Inter-American High Commission, by means of central and national institutions and processes adapted to carry on orderly discussion, deliberation, and judgment concerning matters of common interest with a view to inducing such peaceful and voluntary action of the States in the common interest as may be needful to bring about international cooperation. All resolutions agreed upon either in the international conference or in the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be of an advisory character, and any international or pannational organs or processes initiated or instituted shall be of a voluntary nature and shall have only advisory powers. The international conferences shall establish and maintain a system of advisory correspondence, with continuation committees sitting in the intervals between the conferences to prepare for the international conferences and the assemblies of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies and to carry on the system of correspondence. The more specific objects of the international conference, of the assembly of colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, and of the continuation committees, and the purpose of the correspondence between the States participating shall be—

(a) To consider the common and mutual interests and the social and economic relations of the States and peoples of the world as naturally and necessarily united for mutual aid and benefit and to recommend such projects of uniformity or reciprocity in the action of the States, respectively, as will enable them to cooperate for the general welfare.

(b) To formulate a body of international law based on the security of the fundamental rights of the individual as the prime function of all governments and for applying as between States the analogies of the laws of partnership and cotenancy, and as between States and their respective colonies, protectorates, and dependencies the analogies of the laws of conservatorship, guardianship, and trusteeship.

(c) To devise methods for the advancement of the peoples of colonies, protectorates, or dependencies from the status of dependencies to that of independence and to full participation in the international conferences.

(d) To decide concerning the admission into the international conferences of any communities claiming to be States formed by the division of existing States or by the junction of States or parts of States.

(e) To promote cooperation among the more advanced nations for the improvement and advancement of the backward countries and territories, particularly those of Africa and parts of Asia, by the formulation of plans for the reclamation of waste land, for the utilization of natural resources, including water powers, for wise colonization, for the promotion of education and the spread of civilization throughout the world.

(f) To consider the problems of the congestion of some and the underpopulation of other nations and the unregulated competition between the more populous and industrial countries for the trade and raw products of the less populous agricultural ones.

(g) To study the problem of international finance, credits, and exchange, with a view to the prompt shipment on suitable credits, particularly into Russia, Germany, Austria, China, Africa, and any other agriculturally or industrially undeveloped or prostrated countries, of tools, agricultural implements, seeds, and other materials necessary to production, as well as foodstuffs, necessities, and commodities, for the purpose of encouraging a resumption of production which will be favorable to the rehabilitation of the world.

(h) To localize hostilities between States by cooperative policing of the high seas or otherwise and to take such action in case of such hostilities that the result of any armed conflict between States may be to increase the area within which the rights of the individual are effectively secured and to render more perfect the union of all the States for mutual aid and benefit.

(i) To make further provision for the pacific settlement of international disputes and for the settlement of such disputes according to accepted principles of law and by due process of law; and for this purpose to establish an international supreme court of justice and a system of inferior international courts having jurisdiction of controversies between States in which the parties in interest are citizens of different States, and also of such controversies between States in their own right, as may be susceptible of decision by application of accepted principles of public or private law.

(j) To encourage the establishment, where stable governments do not exist, of constitutional republics or governments of such character as would make for that national stability upon which would be based a permanently peaceful international order, and to promote the institution in each nation of appropriate national agencies of international correspondence and concert and the control by national legislatures of the appointment and instruction of national delegates to the international conferences.

(k) To promote amity and mutual understanding between the oriental and occidental peoples and to proceed with all possible means and speed to conciliate the people of Russia, China, India, Afghanistan, the Central Powers, and Turkey, in order that these nations or countries may not form against the western powers a hostile coalition which might menace the peace of the world.

7. That the functions of the United States as the initiator and host of the international conference and the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be in the charge of a committee which shall come into existence in the month of April, 1921, and shall consist of the then Secretary of State as chairman, the then Secretary of the Treasury, the then Secretary of Commerce, two Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The delegation of the United States to the international conference and to the assembly shall be nominated to the President by said organization committee and said nominees when approved by the President shall be appointed by him by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The said organization committee shall also suggest to the first international conference and to the first assembly a plan for their organization, a program of matters to be considered, a project for regulating the action of the continuation committees and a plan for organizing and regulating the central and national agencies of correspondence and concert; but nothing in the plans, project, or program so suggested shall be inconsistent with the provisions of this resolution.

8. That the general expenses of the international conference and of the assembly shall be borne by the United States, each participating State, however, paying the salaries and expenses of its own delegates and of the delegates in behalf of its colonies, protectorates, and dependencies.

9. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the carrying out of the provisions of this resolution the sum of $500,000.

10. That in case a candidate for the office of President, who shall have publicly announced his adherence to the plan of the League of Nations with or without reservations shall be elected at the national election in November, 1920, this act shall expire on March 4, 1921, at noon, and shall thereafter have no force or effect.

11. That the provisions of this resolution shall take effect immediately after its passage and its approval by the President.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY MR. FRANCE FEBRUARY 27, 1920, PROVIDING FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF MORE FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA, FOR THE LIFTING OF THE EMBARGO AGAINST SHIPMENTS TO THAT COUNTRY, FOR THE EXTENSION OF TRADE AND COMMERCE WITH THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE, FOR THE ARRANGEMENT OF CREDITS, FOR THE WITHDRAWAL OF ALL TROOPS OF THIS COUNTRY WHICH MAY STILL BE ON RUSSIAN SOIL, FOR ANY NEEDED EXPLANATIONS AND REPARATIONS WHICH MAY BE DUE FROM THIS COUNTRY FOR OUR INVASION OF RUSSIAN TERRITORY, FOR THE EXPRESSION OF OUR GRATITUDE TO THE RUSSIAN PEOPLE FOR THEIR HEROIC PART IN THE DEFENSE OF CIVILIZATION, OUR FELICITATIONS TO THEM FOR HAVING OVERTHROWN A DESPOTIC GOVERNMENT, AND ASSURANCES OF THE DESIRE OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO COOPERATE WITH THEM AND TO ASSIST THEM IN EVERY PROPER AND POSSIBLE WAY IN THEIR EFFORTS TO ESTABLISH INSTITUTIONS WHICH WILL INSURE TO THEM AN ORDERED LIBERTY.

[Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

Senate Joint Resolution 164.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 27, 1920.

Mr. FRANCE introduced the following joint resolution, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 164) providing for the establishment of more friendly relations with Russia, for the lifting of the embargo against shipments to that country, for the extension of trade and commerce with the Russian people, for the arrangement of credits, for the withdrawal of all troops of this country which may still be on Russian soil, for any needed explanations and reparations which may be due from this country for our invasion of Russian territory, for the expression of our gratitude to the Russian people for their heroic part in the defense of civilization, our felicitations to them for having overthrown a despotic government, and assurances of the desire of the American people to cooperate with them and to assist them in every proper and possible way in their efforts to establish institutions which will insure to them an ordered liberty.

Whereas from time immemorial there have existed, with few misunderstandings, most cordial relationships between the Governments of the United States and Russia; and

Whereas because of the devotion of the American people to free institutions, the citizens of the United States had long looked forward to the time when the people of Russia would see fit to establish such free institutions for themselves; and

Whereas during the European war the noble Russian people made heroic sacrifices, cooperating with the allied nations in the war against Germany, without which cooperation Germany might have been victorious; and

Whereas it was not because of any lack of devotion to freedom and to the cause of the Allies, but rather on account of the incompetence and corruption of their autocratic government, which failed to supply the munitions of war, that the Russian people made a separate peace with Germany; and

Whereas no unfriendly act against the United States has been committed by the Russian people but, on the contrary, the Russian people have borne with patience our unlawful invasion of their territory and intermeddling with their internal affairs; and

Whereas the people of the United States desire the continuance of friendly relations and the reestablishment of trade and commerce with the Russian people and wish, by every proper means, to assist in the rehabilitation of the industrial and agricultural activities and agencies of Russia for the sake of the Russian people, as well as for the general welfare of the world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, advised to communicate at once, through the Department of State, with the Government of Russia, assuring the people of Russia of our friendship, sympathy, and desire to cooperate with them and to reestablish with them full and cordial relationships of friendly intercourse, trade, and commerce; and, further, that the President be, and he is hereby, advised—

(1) To instruct the Department of State to raise the embargo against the shipment of goods to Russia;

(2) To consider and advise as to the best method of arranging credits which will make possible the shipment of such American goods as may be needed and desired by the people of Russia for the rehabilitation of their country;

(3) To immediately withdraw from Russia any and all American troops which may still be on Russian soil;

(4) To enter upon negotiations, through the Department of State, concerning any explanations or reparations which may be due from this country because of our invasion of Russian territory;

(5) To convey to the people of Russia expressions of our appreciation and gratitude for their heroic part in the war and our felicitations to them for having overthrown a despotic government, and assurances of the desire of the American people to cooperate with them and to assist them in every proper and possible way in their efforts to establish institutions which will insure to them an ordered liberty.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY MR. FRANCE APRIL 12, 1921, AUTHORIZING THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO UNDERTAKE NEGOTIATIONS FOR THE PURCHASE OF THE TERRITORIES IN EAST, SOUTHWEST, AND WEST AFRICA, AND IN OCEANIA, OVER WHICH GERMANY EXERCISED SOVEREIGNTY PRIOR TO THE WAR; TO UNDERTAKE NEGOTIATIONS WITH A VIEW TO ACQUIRING BY PURCHASE OR OTHERWISE THE CABLES SURRENDERED UNDER ARTICLE 244, ANNEX VII, OF THE TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY; TO ENTER UPON THE NEGOTIATION OF A TREATY OF INTERNATIONAL COMITY, COMMERCE, AND COOPERATION WITH THE ALLIED AND ASSOCIATED POWERS LOOKING TO THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE HUMAN AND NATURAL RESOURCES OF AFRICA; TO URGE THE FIXING BY THE ALLIED AND ASSOCIATED POWERS OF A JUST AND REASONABLE INDEMNITY TO BE PAID BY GERMANY TO SAID POWERS; AND TO NEGOTIATE FOR THE SETTLEMENT OF THE PRINCIPAL SUMS AND INTEREST THAT REPRESENT THE DEBTS NOW OWING BY THE SAID ALLIED AND ASSOCIATED POWERS TO THE UNITED STATES, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

[Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.]

Senate Joint Resolution 11.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
April 12, 1921.

Mr. FRANCE introduced the following joint resolution, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 11) authorizing the President of the United States to undertake negotiations for the purchase of the territories in east, southwest, and west Africa, and in Oceania, over which Germany exercised sovereignty prior to the war; to undertake negotiations with a view to acquiring by purchase or otherwise the cables surrendered under article 244, Annex VII, of the treaty of peace with Germany; to enter upon the negotiation of a treaty of international comity, commerce, and cooperation with the allied and associated powers looking to the development of the human and natural resources of Africa; to urge the fixing by the allied and associated powers of a just and reasonable indemnity to be paid by Germany to said powers; and to negotiate for the settlement of the principal sums and interest that represent the debts now owing by the said allied and associated powers to the United States, and for other purposes.

Whereas since the 11th day of November, 1918, when the President of the United States announced the signing of an armistice between the United States and the powers with which the United States had been at war, little progress has been made toward the rehabilitation of the European nations, and there are widespread financial and industrial depression, unemployment, misery, and social unrest; and

Whereas the dismemberment and bankruptcy of Austria, the disorganization and insolvency of Germany, the unfavorable conditions in Italy, the isolation of Russia from the world's trade, and the diminished purchasing power of the European countries because of the enormous debts owed by certain of the European nations to the United States have created conditions which tend to prevent the sale and shipment from the United States of the raw products and food supplies so desperately needed in Europe for the rehabilitation of industry and the feeding of starving peoples; and

Whereas a satisfactory settlement or liquidation of the huge debts and obligations growing out of the war, owed by certain countries to other countries in Europe and to the United States now seems to be necessary, if there is to be a speedy rehabilitation of industry in Europe and in the United States; and

Whereas cordial and constructive cooperation between the advanced nations for the solving of these serious financial, industrial, and international problems and for the advancement of the backward peoples and the development of the undeveloped, natural resources of the world has become a necessity; and

Whereas the submarine telegraphic cables to which Germany under the peace treaty renounced all rights, titles, and privileges in favor of the principal allied and associated powers, have become the subject of a controversy in which the interests of the United States are vitally involved: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President be authorized to call and enter an international conference of the principal allied and associated powers—Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan—for the formulation of plans for the adjustment or settlement of the international debts and obligations growing out of the war, particularly the debts owed by certain of the principal allied and associated powers to the United States; that the President be further authorized to urge international policies and actions for the relief of the overburdened and bankrupt peoples by the extension of credits; that the President be authorized to promote the export trade of the United States with Europe, with Asia, and with Africa by the removal of financial and artificial barriers and restrictions; to negotiate the acquisition for the United States of the territories in east, southwest, and west Africa, and in Oceania over which Germany exercised sovereignty prior to the war; to undertake negotiations with a view to acquiring, by purchase or otherwise, from the principal allied and associated powers, the cables surrendered under article 244, Annex VII, of the treaty of peace with Germany; to enter upon negotiations looking to a treaty providing for international comity, commerce, and cooperation between the United States and the principal allied and associated powers for the purpose of the upbuilding and development of the peoples and of the natural resources of Africa, Oceania, and of the backward portions of the world; and to urge the fixing by the principal allied and associated powers of a just and reasonable indemnity to be paid by Germany to said powers.

SEC. 2. That the President, in order to enable to arrive at a just and equitable determination and settlement of all debts growing out of the war, particularly those owed by the principal allied and associated powers, or any of them, each to the other or to the United States, be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter upon conversations and negotiations with the said principal allied and associated powers, namely, with Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan:

(a) For the determination of the extent of the debts and obligations owed by Germany to the principal allied and associated powers, the debts and obligations owed by any one of the principal allied and associated powers to any other power and those owed by the principal allied and associated powers to the United States; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized—

(b) To urge upon the principal allied and associated powers the immediate necessity for fixing the indemnity sum to be paid to the principal allied and associated powers at such an amount as can be met by Germany without an undue strain and disturbance of international financial and trade arrangements, and to recommend to and urge upon the principal allied and associated powers that such indemnity sum should be, in addition to the sums already paid by Germany in money or in kind, approximately, and not to exceed that named by the principal allied and associated powers, Great Britain and France, at the Hythe conference, tentatively, namely, the principal sum not to exceed $15,000,000,000, or not more than $1,000,000,000 in gold a year for 28 years, and further to urge, upon this sum, a credit to Germany of approximately $5,000,000,000 be allowed for full, final, and unconditional cession to the said principal allied and associated powers and to the United States of the territories in Africa and Oceania which were, prior to the war, under German sovereignty, namely, Togoland, Kamerun, German East Africa, German Southwest Africa, German Samoan Islands, German Pacific Islands.

(c) To enter upon conversations and negotiations with Great Britain, France, and Italy looking to the purchase by the United States from the said powers of the colonial territories in Africa over which, prior to the war, Germany exercised sovereignty, territories with an area approximately of 1,032,280 square miles.

(d) To enter upon conversations and negotiations with the said principal allied and associated powers, including Japan, looking to the purchase by the United States of the Samoan Islands and of the islands in the Pacific over which Germany exercised sovereignty prior to the war.

(e) To enter upon conversations and negotiations with Germany and Japan for a full and unconditional release by them, or either of them, of all rights, titles, or privileges of whatever nature which they, or either of them, might claim or have in said territories or islands in the Pacific.

(f) To enter upon conversations and negotiations for the acquisition by the United States from the principal allied and associated powers, or from any of them, and from Germany any residual right which she may claim, indeed, all rights, titles, or privileges of whatever nature which they or any of them may claim or have in the submarine cables to which Germany, under article 244, Annex VII, renounced all rights, titles, or privileges to the said principal allied and associated powers.

SEC. 3. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to enter upon such conversations and negotiations looking to the purchase by the United States from the principal allied and associated powers of the said territories and of the said submarine cables, with a view to relieving the said principal allied and associated powers—Great Britain, France, and Italy—by a credit to them on the debts which they owe the United States of the amount of the purchase price which the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay by such a credit on said debts for the said territories and submarine cables, namely, a sum approximately $5,000,000,000 and not to exceed $6,000,000,000.

SEC. 4. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, in the event of a successful termination of the negotiations for the purchase by the United States of the said territories and submarine cables, to enter upon further negotiations looking to treaty agreements between the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and Germany for cordial international cooperation in solving the problems of Africa and for the development of the undeveloped natural resources of Africa by the formulation of plans for the reclamation of waste lands, for the utilization of the natural resources, including water power, for wise colonization, particularly by the citizens of the overcrowded countries, and for the promotion of education and civilization throughout Africa in the interests of the people of Africa and of all the nations of the world.

SEC. 5. That in the event of the failure of such conversations and negotiations to result in the acquisition by the United States, in the manner and for the sums above recited, of the territories and cables herein described, the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to negotiate for the prompt settlement, principal and interest, of the debts owed by the said principal allied and associated powers to the United States, and, pending such settlement, to request collateral satisfactory and sufficient as security for said debts.

SEC. 6. That it is the sense of the Congress that such an agreement upon and discharge of the debts of the nations, and, in particular, the satisfaction of the claims of the United States in the manner herein proposed, would be highly promotive of the good will and economic well-being of the peoples and governments of the principal allied and associated powers and those of the other European countries, and that the United States in entering upon the conversations and negotiations, through the President, with the several governments herein named, is moved by a desire to have such adjustments made, in order that there may result an associated effort by the enlightened nations in behalf of the backward peoples of the territories affected, to the ends of human welfare and the promotion of the ideals of civilization.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY MR. FRANCE DECEMBER 15, 1921, AUTHORIZING THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO SEND A COMMISSION TO RUSSIA AND TO INVITE A RUSSIAN COMMISSION TO THE UNITED STATES TO HOLD INFORMAL CONVERSATIONS WITH THE DE FACTO GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA FOR THE PURPOSE OF ARRIVING AT A BASIS OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND RUSSIA.

[Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

Senate Joint Resolution 145.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,

December 15, 1921.

Mr. FRANCE introduced the following joint resolution, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) to authorize the President of the United States to send a commission to Russia and to invite a Russian commission to the United States, to hold informal conversations with the de facto Government of Russia for the purpose of arriving at a basis of understanding between the United States and Russia, to discuss and to negotiate all problems and differences which must be adjusted, looking to the formal recognition by the United States of the de facto Government of Russia and to the restoration of friendly international and commercial relationships between the United States and Russia.

Whereas there has been carried on in this country an insidious and misleading propaganda against the people of Russia, designed to disturb the friendly relations, which had for many years existed between the United States and Russia, and to alienate the people of these two countries from each other; and

Whereas the alienation of the people of the United States from the people of Russia and the deprivation of our farmers, cotton planters, woolgrowers, manufacturers, and exporters of the great Russian markets for raw products and manufactured goods are working great hardship to them and are redounding to the great advantage of the producers, manufacturers, and exporters of other countries; and

Whereas our farmers and planters are suffering an acute distress while millions in Russia must starve, and we have millions of workers unemployed because of the industrial depression while Russia requires shoes, clothing, machinery, agricultural implements, tractors, railway supplies and equipment, and all kinds of manufactured goods and articles in unprecedented quantities; and

Whereas from motives of self-interest, as well as for the sake of humanity, we must desire to enjoy the advantages of the Russian markets, to share in the rehabilitation and development of Russia, to secure mutual understanding and friendly cooperation between the United States and Russia; and

Whereas several of the nations of Europe, including Great Britain, have already invited to their countries commissions from Russia and have sent to and now have in Russia trade delegations, while the United States has, to the disadvantage of the people of the United States, refused to hold negotiations with the Russians, maintaining the indefensible policy adopted at Paris and practically abandoned by all other nations, of isolating Russia for the purposes of punishment and coercion from commerce and intercourse with the world; and

Whereas there is a widespread demand throughout the United States for such a change in our governmental policy toward Russia as will enable the people of the United States to obtain correct information as to conditions in Russia, to participate in the great advantages of the Russian markets, and to enjoy the benefits of cordial international and commercial relationships with the people of Russia: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to select, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, seven prominent citizens of the United States, one of whom shall be experienced in international relationships and diplomacy, one to be a farmer representing our agricultural interests, one to be a member of and representing organized labor, one to be a manufacturer and representing industry, one to be a banker, financier, or political economist, and two to be representatives of the general interests of the United States at large, all of whom shall constitute a commission to visit Russia for the purpose of investigating and making report upon the problem of the restoration of normal and peaceful relationships between the United States and Russia; and

That this commission of seven members may be authorized by the President, in his discretion, to employ clerical assistants, expert accountants, political economists, interpreters, legal counsel, and such other assistants for the purpose of carrying on its work as the commission may deem necessary: Provided, That no member of this commission shall be paid compensation at a rate in excess of $6,000 a year and actual traveling expenses while in the United States and actual traveling and living expenses while absent on official business from the United States, and that no employee of this commission shall receive compensation at a rate in excess of $5,000 a year, together with actual traveling expenses in the United States and actual traveling and living expenses outside of the United States when on the official business of the commission.

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to send this commission at the earliest opportunity to Russia, if this shall be agreeable to the de facto Government of Russia, for the purpose of holding conversations and carrying on negotiations in Russia with the de facto Government of Russia for the purpose of establishing a basis of mutual understanding and cooperation between the two countries, for the purpose of settlement of all differences which may exist between them, and the adjustment of all claims which either of these Governments or its citizens may assert or have against the other, and for the bringing about of conditions which will make possible the resumption of cordial international and commercial relationships between the two countries.

That the President be authorized to particularly direct the commission, if the de facto Government of Russia shall so desire, to extend to the Russian Government such advice and assistance in the formulation of such plans for the stabilizing of the Russian currency, for the economic restoration of Russia, and for the solution of the problems growing out of the revolution as would tend to restore mutual confidence and understanding between the two countries.

That the President be authorized to direct the commission to discuss with the de facto Government of Russia and to carry on negotiations concerning the recognition and refunding by the present de facto Government of Russia of Russia's proper share of the debts and obligations of Russia outstanding, particularly the obligations of the old Imperial Government, and concerning the proper proportion of such old imperial debt outstanding which should be borne by the present Government of Russia and the proportion to be borne by the countries constituting the territories disannexed from Russia by the powers in the peace settlement.

That the President be authorized to direct the commission to discuss all other matters which must be considered and adjusted looking to the bringing about of friendly relationships, and to charge it with the general duty of securing the most complete information possible, to be reported to the President and to the Congress and to the people of the United States concerning the attitude, the conditions, and the circumstances of the Russian people, and the purposes toward the United States of the de facto Government of Russia.

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to submit to the Congress from time to time, as he may obtain it, information from this commission as to conditions in Russia, with a view to the earliest possible recognition by our Government of the de facto Government of Russia.

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to invite the de facto Government of Russia to send a commission of seven members here to discuss with our producers and exporters the question of trade with Russia, and to negotiate with our Government all those questions which our commission to Russia shall be authorized to discuss with the de facto Government of Russia, and such other matters as the President may deem best to discuss with such commission.

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated, the sum of $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the expenses and salaries of the commission and of its employees and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY MR. FRANCE DECEMBER 22, 1921, AUTHORIZING THE PRESIDENT TO CALL AN INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE FOR THE DISCUSSION OF THE ECONOMIC PROBLEMS AND QUESTIONS OF INTERNATIONAL FINANCE, PARTICULARLY THE PROBLEM CREATED BY THE OUTSTANDING OBLIGATIONS BETWEEN CERTAIN OF THE NATIONS, AS THE RESULT OF THE WORLD WAR.

[Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

Senate Joint Resolution 150.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
December 22, 1921.

Mr. FRANCE introduced the following joint resolution, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 150) authorizing the President to call an international economic conference for the discussion of the economic problems and questions of international finance, particularly the problem created by the outstanding obligations between certain of the nations as the result of the World War.

Whereas there are grave economic and financial problems which have grown out of the war, and which must be solved before there can be a return to normal international, financial, and commercial relationships, and a reasonable basis for a permanent peace; and

Whereas serious disturbances of the exchange markets presenting insuperable barriers to the normal process of trade are due to the huge debts owing by certain of the nations of Europe to the other nations, and the question of the terms upon which there may be a liquidation of these debts is an international question involving the interests of all nations; and

Whereas because of the close community of financial, industrial, and commercial interests of all the nations of the world there can not be secured any cooperation for the solution of these common economic problems without an international economic conference: Therefore be it hereby

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized and directed, by invitations to be sent out by him during the month of January, 1922, to invite the States signatory of or adherent to the convention for the pacific settlement of international disputes of July 24, 1899, and their successors, and all other States since recognized, or which may be recognized prior to the sending out of invitations, to send three delegates each, and also two delegates in behalf of each of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, respectively, of the various States having colonies, protectorates, or independencies, to assemble at Washington, on a date in March, 1922, to be fixed in the invitation, to consult concerning the formation of a more perfect general concert for the establishment of general justice, the assurance of the general tranquillity, the promotion of the general welfare, and the securing generally of the blessings of liberty to the peoples now living and to their posterity and the solution of the grave economic and financial problems growing out of the war.

That the list of said States to be invited shall include the following: Argentine Republic, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hedjas, Hungary, India, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Persia, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, Salvador, Serbia, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia.

That the invitations shall expressly state that the motive of the United States in issuing them is to initiate and bring about a concert of action between the nations for the common solution for the general welfare of the grave financial, economic, industrial, and commercial international problems growing out of the war.

That there shall be appropriated, out of any sums in the Treasury not heretofore appropriated, the sum of $100,000 for the carrying out of the provisions of this act.

JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED BY MR. FRANCE MARCH 9, 1922, AUTHORIZING THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO SEND A COMMISSION TO RUSSIA AND TO INVITE A RUSSIAN COMMISSION TO THE UNITED STATES TO HOLD INFORMAL CONVERSATIONS WITH THE DE FACTO GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA FOR THE PURPOSE OF ARRIVING AT A BASIS OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND RUSSIA.

[Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.]

Senate Joint Resolution 177.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 9 (calendar day, March 14), 1922.

Mr. FRANCE introduced the following joint resolution, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 177) to authorize the President of the United States to send a commission to Russia and to invite a Russian commission to the United States to hold informal conversations with the de facto government of Russia for the purpose of arriving at a basis of understanding between the United States and Russia.

A BILL INTRODUCED BY MR. FRANCE MAY 6, 1920, AMENDING THE WAR FINANCE CORPORATION ACT IN ORDER THAT THERE MIGHT BE A SECURED CREDIT TO GERMANY OF $250,000,000 IN ORDER THAT GERMANY MIGHT PURCHASE FOODSTUFFS FROM THE UNITED STATES.

[Sixty-sixth Congress, second session.]

(S. 4341.)

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
May 6, 1920.

Mr. FRANCE introduced the following bill, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (S. 4341) to amend the War Finance Corporation act.

Be it enacted, etc., That the War Finance Corporation act is hereby amended by adding to Title I thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 22. (a) That the corporation shall be empowered and authorized to pay to any person, firm, corporation, or association engaged in business in the United States the contract price of supplies of food and raw materials hereafter purchased, or agreed to be purchased, by the German Government from any such person, firm, corporation, or association, and to accept, in full payment of the moneys so advanced, the bonds, obligations, or other evidence of indebtedness to be issued by Germany for the payment of the moneys so advanced, to bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of such advance: Provided, That the said contract shall be approved by the corporation as to price, quantity, and subject matter; that the said contract shall be for such supplies of food and raw materials as may be judged by the Governments of the principal allied and associated powers, parties to the treaty of peace between the said powers and Germany, to be essential to enable Germany to meet her obligation for reparation under the said treaty; and that the said bonds, obligations, or undertakings by Germany shall be a first charge on all the assets and revenues of the German Empire and its constituent States, and shall be paid in priority to all other bonds, obligations, and undertakings of Germany except such as may be issued for the payment of the costs and expenses of the armies of occupation subsequent to the armistice of November 11, 1918.

"(b) The total advances to be made by the corporation shall not exceed $250,000,000.

"(c) The terms of payment of the said bonds, obligations, or undertakings, the conditions of priority, and the assets and revenues of Germany, against which the said bonds, obligations, or undertakings shall be a charge, shall be fixed and established by the Reparation Commission appointed under and pursuant to the said treaty, subject to the approval of the corporation.

"(d) Any such bond, obligation, or undertaking shall provide that the payment thereof shall be a lien and charge against the property of Germany or of any of her nationals in the custody of the Alien Property

Custodian after the payment of debts due to the nationals of the United States.

"(e) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of making payments by the said corporation as and when required under the provisions of this section."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator from Utah ready to go ahead now?

Mr. KING. No; but I think after a conference with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] we will be able to expedite the consideration of several amendments we have to offer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the consideration of the bill will go over until to-morrow?

Mr. POINDEXTER. As to the matter the Senator from Tennessee spoke to me about, that was my understanding, but I thought perhaps if the Senator from Utah has some other matter to present he might be ready to go ahead with it this afternoon.

Mr. KING. I have one or two amendments I have not put in shape yet, but I assure the Senator that in the presentation of all the amendments I shall occupy not to exceed half an hour.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In view of that I shall move an executive session.

Mr. KING. Very well.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, under the order previously made, until to-morrow, Friday, December 29, 1922, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 28, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art still going on with life. Unto us may it mean something intensely. Help us to meet the claims that conform to Thy holy will and to ever feel the constraints that are upon us. Giver of life, take our lives, so often misused and contradictory, and restore, renew, and simplify them and give us strength to use them better. Continue to work through us Thy great purposes which Thou hast for the good of our country. Teach us that our love and faith are tested by what we are willing to suffer and sacrifice and that these are the graces that bring us to the Father of us all. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SLEMP, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted a bill (H. R. 13593) making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes, which, with the report thereon (Rept. 1318), was ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I reserve all points of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado reserves all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the judicial review of legislative procedure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the judicial review of legislative procedure. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to is here printed in full as follows:

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, it is proposed by constitutional amendment to take from the Supreme Court the power of judicial review of legislative enactment.

It is further proposed that congressional enactments may be reviewed by the court, but if declared a violation of the Constitution by the court, then Congress may by subsequent enactment replace the law upon the statute books and further court review be restrained.

Which means that if the court in review holds the law to be good and not a violation of the Constitution it becomes a law.

If the court holds the law is bad because it violates the Constitution, then Congress can make it good by the simple process of reenactment.

If Congress passes a good law once, it is to remain, but in order to make a bad or unconstitutional law constitutional it will be required to do the bad thing twice, and by this repetition bad law becomes as good as good law.

If Congress strikes the Constitution only one blow with one fist, it will be called a draw; but if Congress comes back and hits the Constitution a second blow with the other fist, Congress wins.

DISCUSSION NECESSARY.

The destruction of $300,000,000,000 in property and 30,000,000 in lives has shaken the whole world to its very foundation, and a certain unsettling influence in our country has produced an unusual increase in crime, accompanied by assaults upon our form of government and its Constitution.

These assaults upon our Government can only be stopped by a statement of its fundamental objects and a repeated and reiterated defense of its form, by an explanation of its machinery.

This was not necessary 20 years ago but is necessary to-day, for the study of the Constitution is now neglected and our Bill of Rights is assailed in official life and by secret organizations of a political character.

The official violation of the express prohibitions contained in our Bill of Rights will find its gradual correction by the courts.

The lawless methods of the secret organization will, because of its lawlessness, be destroyed by enlightened public sentiment and criminal prosecution.

The propaganda designed to destroy our system of government must be met by discussion and answer.

The effective way to counteract these assaults is by a simple statement of our system of government and explanation of how it functions.

To restore mental poise, at least political optimism, the advantages of our form of government should be stated.

And while discussing its wisdom, its series of checks and balances, point the way to change by the orderly and intelligent use of the ballot.

Only an imperfect understanding exists of the division of power between the legislative, executive, and judicial.

We understand how to apply the ballot to change an offensive Executive, and that a legislator may be removed and another more acceptable be selected.

JUDICIAL POWER NOT UNDERSTOOD.

But the place of judicial power in our National Government is not understood; there seems some mystery about it; and when it is assailed, some may carelessly and without examination agree with its critics.

There have been revolts against the Executive, and we are accustomed to a discussion of this office at all times, and every four years in national elections the personality of the President, in the press and on the rostrum, is subjected to the severest test of public acclaim or disapproval.

Every two years we have a political campaign in which candidates of the various State legislatures, Congress, and the United States Senate are analyzed, respective political platforms discussed, and the issues are understood by the voter who gives thought to the subject.

But with the third great power, which comes by appointment of the Executive—the President—with the consent and approval of the legislative—the Senate—he is not familiar and leaves its discussion to the lawyer or trained educator.

First. We must understand that the judicial power of the Government is created by the joint act of both the executive and legislative branches, and then upon its creation it becomes a check upon both of the branches which created it.

Second. That while Supreme Judges are appointed for life, the legislative branch—the House and Senate—may remove by impeachment.

Third. That the Executive—the President—may be punished for an unwise selection by a subsequent defeat administered by the electorate.

Fourth. That during the nearly century and a half of our national history no scandal and but little criticism has been honestly directed against either the integrity or ability of the members of our Supreme Court.

Not since the early years of our national life, when all its machinery was rough and its detailed powers uncertain, has there been open or organized effort made to take from the judicial power the right of review of legislative enactment.

There have been criticisms of decision, and naturally in each trial there have been two sides to each controversy presented for determination, and no single judgment could be entirely satisfactory to both, and there has followed dissent and disappointment.

But in all these years until now there has been no political movement to destroy the power itself.

ITS REMOVAL WOULD DESTROY.

To destroy, by constitutional amendment, one of the three coordinate and foundation branches of our Government means the destruction of the present American form of government and the setting up of an entirely new and different system.

It would remove the balance of power between the executive and the legislative.

It would destroy the judicial check upon both.

It would either increase the power of the executive and lead the way to monarchy or increase power of the legislative and destroy the force of the executive.

It would take from the American plan of government its marked difference from that of any other nation which preceded its formation.

It would destroy all those interpretations of our laws which have developed with our progress and civilization and have become in effect new laws.

It would involve the rewriting of thousands of laws by both State and National Governments.

It would destroy the arbiter which decides disputes between States and citizens of States.

It would leave our Bill of Rights, so essential to personal liberty, without special official defender.

It would destroy the heart of the Constitution because it would kill the defender of the Constitution and leave 110,000,000 people subject to the intemperate, hasty, or arbitrary act of the two remaining branches of our Government.

It would remove all protection for the right of the minority.

It would place unlicensed and unlimited power in the hands of a majority.

It would destroy the written defense of individual liberty, because there would be no power to defend our written guaranties.

It would take away the balance wheel which causes the affairs of government to run smoothly and methodically.

It would destroy our dual form of sovereignty.

It would be a crowning victory for the advocates of government by mobs.

It would take from the Government its fine conscience to judicially determine right from wrong by a solemn tribunal which, unswayed by partisan heat or temporary excitement, punishes or rewards without impulse created by passion or prejudice.

It would destroy our sane plan of checks and balances.

It would disturb, unsettle, and make uncertain all the relations between men as individuals; it would make uncertain the relations between States; it would endanger the sanctity of contract; it would create for a period distrust and disputes which would destroy our national equilibrium and cause agricultural, labor, commercial, and industrial chaos.

Various persons in official life and at least two national conventions called to form new political parties advocate the destruction of the court by abolishing the power of judicial review.

This would take from the Supreme Court the power to uphold the Constitution and, by decision, to prevents its violation.

This would create, as a natural consequence, a change not only of the Constitution of the United States but of the constitutions of each of the 48 States comprising our national Union.

It would mean the rewriting of all the laws of the Nation and all the laws of each State in the Nation.

It would strike at the very vitals of our Government and, upon its ruins, would substitute anarchy for order, passion for moderation, and mob rule for judicial decree.

CONGRESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY.

The Congress and the legislatures of the various States are at least partly to blame for this new movement.

Each Member of Congress and each member of the State legislature takes oath and with uplifted right hand solemnly swears before God to uphold and defend the Constitution.

And frequently within a week's time he votes for a bill which he knows at the time, or upon investigation could ascertain, is in violation of the Constitution and which the Supreme Court, acting under their oaths of office to "uphold and defend the Constitution," must in turn declare to be void.

The Member knew the bill was unconstitutional, but he calmly removes all blame from himself, places the full failure upon the court, smiles upon his constituent, secures his support, and awaits with calm indifference the howl of rage and disappointment which follow the court's unpopular decision.

In former years the question of a measure's constitutionality was given consideration and Members listened with attention to a discussion of its legality.

To-day time for such discussion is limited by the Rules Committee of the House, and, in the brief allotment accorded Members, it is almost impossible to discuss the subject.

An adverse court decision on a measure of great public interest is followed by denunciation of the ruling by the thoughtless, and finally, in organized form, comes a demand that Congress may pass any law without review or check by an impartial tribunal.

There are, naturally, some close questions upon which even the court divides, and many important decisions are by a mere majority of the court.

Time given to the discussion of the constitutionality of a law would benefit the public and afford at least a measure of protection for one of the three coordinate branches of our Government which can not publicly defend itself.

JUDICIAL REVIEW.

Briefly, without legal precision and omitting all reference to other powers of the Supreme Court, it will be found its power of review rests upon common sense.

In unanswerable logic, one of the framers of the Constitution said:

> There is no position which depends on clearer principles than that every act of a delegated authority, contrary to the tenor of the commission under which it is exercised, is void. No legislative act, therefore, contrary to the Constitution, can be valid. * * *
>
> The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar provision of the courts. A constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges, as a fundamental law.
>
> It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning, as well as the meaning of any particular act proceeding from the legislative body.
> If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, that which has the superior obligation and validity ought, of course, to be preferred; or, in other words, the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statute, the intention of the people to the intention of its agents.

Our Constitution, it must be remembered, not only grants authority to govern but just as expressly limits such authority.

John Marshall could not stop criticism, but he confounded objection in two sentences:

> To what purpose are powers limited, and to what purpose is that limitation committed to writing, if these limits may, at any time, be passed by those intended to be restrained.
> If the former part of the alternative be true, then a legislative act contrary to the Constitution is not law; if the latter part be true, then written constitutions are absurd attempts on the part of the people to limit a power in its own nature illimitable.

While the lesser power, a Congress—with but two years' life—can not override a greater power, the Constitution, with its history of nearly a century and a half, the Supreme Court always gives the benefit of doubt to Congress in declaring its acts constitutional and must be clearly convinced of an act's unconstitutionality before it will so decide, and this is the rule of State supreme courts.

It may be said courts lean toward legislative enactment rather than away from it.

THINGS CONGRESS CAN NOT DO.

There are certain individual rights the Constitution demands that Congress must not destroy.

If court review is abolished, then Congress can in any one session take away these rights:

(1) Religious liberty; (2) freedom of speech; (3) freedom of the press; (4) the right of peaceful assembly; (5) the right of petition for redress of grievances.

(6) The right of State militia to bear arms.

(7) No soldier shall be quartered in time of peace in a house without consent of the owner.

(8) Unreasonable search and seizure.

(9) No arrest except upon probable cause (10) supported by oath or affirmation (11) describing the place (12) and the persons or things to be seized.

(13) Capital offenses must be found by a grand jury indictment.

(14) No person shall for the same offense be twice put in jeopardy, (15) compelled to testify against himself, (16) nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; (17) no private property taken for public use without just compensation.

(18) In criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy a speedy (19) and public trial (20) by an impartial jury (21) in the district wherein the crime is committed; (22) to be informed of the nature of the accusation; (23) to be confronted by witnesses; (24) to have compulsory service for obtaining witnesses (25) and the assistance of counsel for his defense; (26) the right of trial by jury where the sum exceeds $20.

(27) Excessive bail shall not be required (28) nor excessive fines imposed (29) nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.

These rights are now all guarded by the Supreme Court, and its decrees have so far been enforced by mere announcement and notice given by its marshal.

But back of its decree and marshal is the respect of the Nation, which means the whole power of Army and Navy should necessity require.

The average man and woman finds in these provisions their greatest protection against abuse and tyranny; they are now written so all may understand and not subject to change by the whim or caprice of a passing Congress.

CHANGES.

The Constitution is a very simple human document, written in plain language, that contains only 4,000 words of 89 sentences, and can be read aloud in 23 minutes.

We should amend our statute law to meet the requirements of a changing and complex civilization, but in making changes the fundamentals of government and the balance of powers should be preserved.

In interpreting our statutes and in passing upon their constitutionality an immense amount of law has been written, now consisting of over 250 volumes. The abolishment of judicial review would destroy this immense storehouse of legal interpretation and place upon an unskilled Congress a work of staggering magnitude.

History has the habit of repeating itself, but it is doubtful if we could to-day produce men capable of satisfactorily changing our form of government.

The old framers had just been purified in a long, bloody struggle for human liberty. They had all the necessary guideposts of history for review. They were singularly free from sordid motive. Their work has brought approval from the great thinkers of all nations, and it should not be changed in form without weighty reasons, and then at a period better suited for constructive reflection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] will please resume the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13559, the Interior Department appropriation bill, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. 13559) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, and for other purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose yesterday there was pending a point of order made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] against the provisos in the pending paragraph for Indian school and agency buildings, on page 24, the first proviso beginning on line 11. I would like, if agreeable to the gentleman from California, for the convenience of the Chair as well as my own, to have the gentleman designate the particular portion of the language to which he takes exception rather than require the committee to justify all three provisos.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, maybe the gentleman might expedite the matter by explaining the particular part of the first proviso as to bridges and roads. It might relate to reserves. Bridges might be indefinite as to amount and location. Clearly there would be no right and authority to construct bridges outside of the reservations. As to the second proviso, I will not make any question on that. I believe it ought not to be there in that shape, but I believe the committee has power on that.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman does not object to the second proviso?

Mr. RAKER. No; I do not.

Mr. CRAMTON. He objects to the first proviso on the ground that the money might be used outside the reservation?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. To the second he does not object?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. CRAMTON. Now, as to the third proviso——

Mr. RAKER. I believe the gentleman will concede that that changes existing law.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will not concede that. He will concede that it is legislation, but it is already permanent law and is unnecessary, and I am willing to have that taken out.

Mr. RAKER. All right.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will agree with the gentleman to offer an amendment striking out the third proviso.

That leaves only the question of the first proviso, and as to that the gentleman waives any objection to it so far as it relates to work upon reservations. The language of the item, Mr. Chairman, is "construction or repair work of roads and bridges and on school and agency buildings"; "including the purchase of necessary lands and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith." The proviso in question is that this appropriation for the purposes stated "shall be available for the payment of salaries and expenses of persons employed in the supervision of construction or repair work of roads and bridges and on school and agency buildings in the Indian Service."

It is my understanding that this item has to do only with such construction or repair work on roads and bridges as is upon the reservations and in connection with the institutions. For that, of course, there is ample authority, and to that the gentleman has no objection. Apart from the point of order, if the language is uncertain as to that, if it does leave it open for construction of roads not upon reservations, I think the committee would not object to an amendment that would make it clear.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. CARTER. It does not seem, Mr. Chairman, that there is any ambiguity about that language. It provides for repair work on roads and bridges. That is certainly within existing law. Those contemplated must be on the reservation. I agree with the gentleman in charge of the bill that if there is any doubt about it, I myself would like to see it fixed so that the money must be spent within the limits of the reservation. But I do not believe it is necessary.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, to obviate delay in a discussion that is not necessary, I will also agree to offer an amendment to insert after the word "bridges," in line 14, the words "on Indian reservations." The only question in my mind as to that is whether the word "reservations" is broad enough to include lands that might be used in connection with schools, and so forth.

Mr. RAKER. The language is peculiar—"roads and bridges, schools and agency buildings." But on the gentleman's statement as to that proviso and the last one I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. We will get to it. The point of order being withdrawn, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the last proviso, beginning on line 21, be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 24, line 21, strike out the colon and insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. HAYDEN. How will it read then, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. CRAMTON. I propose only to strike out the last proviso. I will say to the gentleman I am advised it is already permanent law and unnecessary to be carried any longer.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the gentleman expect to add the words "on the Indian reservations"?

Mr. CRAMTON. I expect to do that later. This is on striking out the third proviso. The further pending amendment is to strike out the third proviso. I will offer the other later.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment at the end of line 14. After the word "bridges" insert "on Indian reservations and other lands devoted to the Indian Service." I think that will meet the wishes of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 24, line 14, after the word "bridges" insert the words "on Indian reservations and other lands devoted to the Indian Service."

So that as amended the proviso will read:

Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for the payment of salaries and expenses of persons employed in the supervision of construction or repair work of roads and bridges on Indian reservations and other lands devoted to the Indian Service and on school and agency buildings in the Indian Service.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, while I do not now think of any contingency which may arise, yet it is entirely possible that where there is a nonreservation Indian school located away from the Indian country it might be necessary to build a bridge to get to it.

Mr. CARTER. This would cover that, "other lands devoted to the Indian Service."

Mr. HAYDEN. But suppose a bridge had to be built off from the school ground in order to get to the school?

Mr. CARTER. This would not cover that.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not understand that the appropriation is now used for any such purpose. I think wherever that happens there is specific language in the bill authorizing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDIAN SCHOOL TRANSPORTATION.

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian and public schools, and for placing school pupils, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give them moral, industrial, and educational training, $90,000: Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this sum may be used for obtaining remunerative employment for Indian youths and, when necessary, for payment of transportation and other expenses to their places of employment: Provided further, That where practicable the transportation and expenses of pupils shall be refunded and shall be returned to the appropriation from which paid. The provisions of this section shall also apply to native Indian pupils of school age under 21 years of age brought from Alaska.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that this is another general appropriation of $90,000, a $5,000 increase over last year, providing for the collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian and public schools, and so forth.

Yesterday I tried to make clear the proposition that it would be a businesslike policy if these different amounts were so itemized that we could show the exact amount spent for each reservation and each school. My friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and myself had some controversy over that, he taking the position that the school appropriation could not be spent for any other purpose. I quoted a statement in the hearings before the investigation commission, printed this morning on page 976 of the RECORD, in which Mr. Meritt, Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, stated to the committee that the money could be used for relieving distress, and so forth.

Mr. CARTER. What money?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The support of schools money.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is mistaken about that, according to his own quotation from the testimony.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to call attention to the statement made by Mr. Meritt in which he said:

We have no fund that is known as the general administrative item. These items are particularized for school support. For example, we could use a part of the lump-sum appropriation for school support in maintaining schools on that reservation; we could use part of the appropriation for relieving distress, for maintaining physicians on that reservation. We could use part of the appropriation for the farmers in paying the salary of a farmer on that reservation.

Now, I want to go just a little further and quote from page 856, volume 1, of the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Sixty-sixth Congress on the condition of various tribes of Indians. The gentleman will remember that Congress appropriated $15,000 and directed that committee to investigate the Indian Bureau. They spent the $15,000, and I am afraid very little beneficial results have come from that investigation, although we sat day after day for two years in an effort to get to the bottom of this very involved and complicated system. But here is a question I asked Mr. Meritt at that time, on page 356 of the hearings:

Mr. KELLY. I was just trying to bring out the principle when I used that illustration. There are other instances through the bill that I have noticed, and I want to get information as to why the system grows up by which there are large lump-sum appropriations in the same bill that apparently is carrying specific appropriations for everything, and, to my mind, should be carried in specific appropriations right down the line. Why are those two opposing principles in the same bill every year?

Mr. MERITT. That is a matter of growth, covering a long period of years.

Mr. KELLY. What is your judgment on that, Mr. Meritt?

Mr. MERITT. As to the wisdom of it?

Mr. KELLY. As to the wisdom of the policy.

His answer is the crux of the whole matter:

Mr. MERITT. If I were a Member of Congress and a member of the committee, I think I should advocate the appropriation bill being made up so that when we make an appropriation for a reservation or a school that would be the entire appropriation for that reservation or that school, so far as it would be possible to do it.

Remember, Mr. Meritt is Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs in charge of these bills, and is one of the ablest men I ever saw before a committee, adroit, resourceful, and able. I am only sorry that he is not using his splendid ability for another purpose than attempting to add to the activities of this bureaucracy. But that is what he said, and that is exactly what I attempted to do yesterday when I tried to get an amendment adopted to itemize these expenditures under reservations and under schools, so that there would not be a dollar carried in this bill that it could not be explained what it was spent for, and the activity for which it was spent. We might then know exactly what each reservation and what each school was costing.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is one important distinction between what Mr. Meritt said he would do as a Member of Congress and what the gentleman from Pennsylvania yesterday tried to do. Mr. Meritt said "so far as it was possible," or words to that effect. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania paid no attention to that, whether possible or impossible. His amendment provided that every cent spent on a reservation must be foretold in advance.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman quibbles about that, because here is an item of $90,000 for the transportation of school children. In my State of Pennsylvania they also pay out money for the transportation of pupils, and I can find at Harrisburg an account of every dollar that has been spent by the township. I can show you where that money goes, and at very little clerical expense, but the $90,000 carried here is a lump appropriation expended here and there without any statement as to the reservation it is spent on, so that we can not tell the total expenditure for any reservation. If estimates can not be made in advance, the Budget policy is a mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have no doubt that the gentleman can ascertain from the Indian Service what has been spent, but no one can definitely foretell just how many dollars of this will be spent next year on each reservation, and that is what the gentleman called for in his amendment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; and I called also for a statement of expenditures made. I hope the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. CRAMTON] will do this when the bill comes before the committee next year. He says it can easily be done for the last year; that is, that he can get the total expenditure for each reservation and for each school, from all these items, so that it can be laid before the committee. If he will do that, then we will know exactly where this money has been spent. I shall be glad to see that done when next year's bill is presented to this House.

Mr. HAYDEN. I understood the gentleman to say that the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania makes appropriations itemizing the amount to be paid to every township.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I do not ask for that. I want the bureau to bring the estimates and show where the money was spent. We do that in the Legislature of Pennsylvania and we know how much was spent in each township.

Mr. HAYDEN. Do you make a lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. HICKS. What the gentleman wants is for them to make a post-mortem examination.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; but I want the amount laid out and to show how the money was spent last year. That was the point that I wanted to bring out in the discussion we had yesterday, and I hope that Mr. Meritt's suggestion as to what he would do if he was a Member of Congress will be carried out next year.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the controversy between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself on yesterday was clean-cut and there should be no confusion about it.

What the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated was that a part of the school appropriation could be used for farmers out on the reservation and away from the schools. He read from what he said was a record of old hearings. As I understood his reading them, he made Mr. Meritt say the same thing, to wit, that a part of a school appropriation could be used for paying farmers out on the reservation away from the school. I wondered at the time that the assistant commissioner, familiar with conditions from his long service in the bureau, could have knowingly made any such erroneous assertion. Since the alleged statement has been published in yesterday's RECORD I find that Mr. Meritt made no such statement and in fact no statement that could be distorted into any such misleading construction. Let us see what Mr. Meritt did say. I read from the statement placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, credited to Mr. Meritt:

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. Meritt, let me ask you, can you use funds from a general fund for a purpose for which a specific appropriation is made under the law?

Mr. MERITT. Where there is a specific appropriation for a specific purpose we are not permitted to supplement that appropriation by any other fund. For example, where we have an appropriation for a nonreservation school we would not be permitted to use any of the general appropriation for school support to supplement the specific appropriation for a nonreservation school. * * *

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. Meritt, what do you use that $6,000 for; for the Klamaths?

Mr. MERITT. We use it for administrative purposes on the Klamath Reservation.

Mr. CARTER. Can you take here from the general administrative appropriation any funds to use for administrative purposes there?

Mr. MERITT. We could take from the Indian school support.

Mr. CARTER. But that is not answering the question. My question was: Could you take it from the general administration item in the bill?

Mr. SNYDER. That support of the Indian schools is a general administrative item.

Mr. MERITT. We have no fund that is known as the general administrative item. These items are particularized for school support. For example, we could use a part of the lump-sum appropriation for school support in maintaining schools on that reservation; we could use part of the appropriation for relieving distress for maintaining physicians on that reservation. We could use part of the appropriation for the farmers in paying the salary of a farmer on that reservation.

Mr. CARTER. But you could not do it if you had a specific appropriation for any of those purposes, could you?

Mr. MERITT. No, sir.

Thus it will be seen that the controversy between Mr. Meritt and myself was not whether in expending these funds he could cross the line of school appropriations and go over to industrial appropriations. The controversy was strictly whether he could apply funds from a general item to supplement funds appropriated for a specific purpose. Specifically, could he use a specific item for administrative purposes on a certain reservation and then draw from a general administration item for expenditures on that same reservation. Never was the question discussed as to diverting funds appropriated for schools to the use of farmers; and this statement, placed in the RECORD by the gentleman himself, does not warrant the assertion that anyone connected with the Indian Bureau ever made any such foolish asservation.

Let me call attention to that portion of the commissioner's alleged statement pertinent to this controversy, in order that this membership may judge for itself if there is indeed any further proof necessary. Mr. Meritt said:

Mr. MERITT. We have no fund that is known as the general administrative item. These items are particularized for school support. For example, we could use a part of the lump-sum appropriation for school support in maintaining schools on that reservation; we could use part of the appropriation for relieving distress for maintaining physicians on that reservation. We could use part of the appropriation for the farmers in paying the salary of a farmer on that reservation.

Mr. CARTER. But you could not do it if you had a specific appropriation for any of those purposes, could you?

Mr. MERITT. No, sir.

That is the language of Mr. Meritt, as quoted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and it is as unmistakable and plain as the English tongue could make it.

Does Mr. Meritt say that moneys appropriated for schools may be used for farmers? No; not even by the remotest implication. He simply says in plain, blunt English words, "We could use a part of the lump-sum appropriation for school support in maintaining schools on that reservation," and later on, "We could use part of the appropriation for the farmers," meaning the lump sum, "in paying the salary of a farmer on that reservation." Nothing could be plainer, nothing could be less ambiguous, nothing could be more distinct and intelligible, and in no place, in no particular does this statement placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Pennsylvania himself even remotely intimate any such foolish assertion by the assistant commissioner as that he was authorized to use funds appropriated for schools in the employment of Indian farmers out on the reservation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Turning from the controversy between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Oklahoma as to what is the point of controversy between them, I want to ask the chairman of the subcommittee just how this money is used for placing the school pupils under the control of white families. Do these Indian children who are placed in the homes of white families remain there permanently? Do they become members of the family with the white people, so that they are subject to the regulations of the home and likely to be called upon to work as the other children would be in the household? What is the general plan in the expenditure of this appropriation?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not sure that I can answer all of the gentleman's inquiries, but approximately $5,000 of this appropriation is expended in obtaining remunerative employment for Indian youths, and for the payment of transportation to the places of employment. The other portion of it is transportation, sending pupils from their homes to the nonreservation boarding schools. Of course, that involves some transportation, but the portion the gentleman refers to is the expenditure of the $5,000, which is to secure employment in white homes and otherwise for Indian youths, the intention being, I assume, to place the Indian in the surroundings of modern American homes where he will acquire a full knowledge of the English language, of American customs, and at the same time be in employment where he will be self-supporting and perhaps earning something in addition thereto.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the $5,000 is set aside for obtaining employment, but then there is the item of collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian public schools; but the item to which I am directing particular attention is for placing school pupils, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give them moral, industrial, and educational training. Do these white families take these Indian children into their homes?

Mr. CRAMTON. In some instances.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And give them training, send them to schools, and are paid for that purpose?

Mr. CRAMTON. Let me read from what Mr. Meritt said:

> Mr. MERITT. You will also notice that a part of that money is used for the purpose of procuring employment for our Indian youths. We have a large number of children, for example, at the Riverside School in California, who go out for employment. At Mr. Peairs's school, Haskell Institute, they have a number who go out for employment when the school is not in session.
>
> Mr. PEAIRS. Yes; we have quite a large number every summer, during the vacation months, that we send out in the neighborhood of 50, 60, or 75 miles of the school into homes and on farms.
>
> Mr. MERITT. We feel that this is good education for them, to get out in the white homes, during the summer vacations, and learn how the white people live, as well as earn their money, and cultivate the habit of industry.

I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] is familiar with the subject and could give it more in detail to the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then I shall ask the gentleman from Oklahoma whether this is the placing of school pupils in the homes of white families only during vacation periods.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I expect I can better inform the gentleman by giving him a general statement about it. This money is used for the transportation of pupils to and from their homes. It is also used for securing employment for the pupil both before and after leaving the school—before he leaves the school in the vacation period and after he leaves the school, of course, in permanent employment. Then there is the third, and a very beneficial purpose, which is set forth by the language which the gentleman from Michigan has just quoted, and that is what is known as the outing system. In many of the Indian schools the term lasts only about eight school months. It begins in September and runs for eight months, giving the child in some of those Indian schools about four or five months' vacation. During that vacation the child is sent out into white families, the girl usually to learn cooking and sewing and housekeeping with some good white woman who must furnish proper testimonials as to character and other things, and then the boys are sent out to families to do farm and dairy and other work of that kind.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But only during the time of the vacation period?

Mr. CARTER. Only then.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that these white families do not have control of the general education of the child?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, no; the child goes back to the school when it begins again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The policy proposed yesterday by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is not a complex one. It is not ridiculous. There is nothing about it that calls for any action that is unreasonable. He merely proposed that the Indian commissioner should submit to the Committee on Appropriations a detailed estimate of the amount of money that he would need for each separate project. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] immediately interposed that it is a post-mortem proposition. It is not. He is asking for these estimates before we appropriate the money. That is not post-mortem. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] in trying to crush the proposition said that it is perfectly reasonable to ask him to tell how he spent the money after he spends it, but that it is impossible for him to tell us what his estimates are of the amount of money that he is going to need for the coming fiscal year. That is the way he disposes of it.

There is nothing unreasonable about the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think it is a wise policy and one that ought to be adopted. Take that Book of Estimates and go through it, and there is not a subject in there, not a single analysis that is given, that does not embrace the item of "miscellaneous" involving thousands of dollars; that does not embrace "outstanding indebtedness" that involves several hundred thousand dollars, the itemization of which is not shown at all. I think the committee ought to be reasonable. I think that when a sane proposition like that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is proposed, where it has merit, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS], who comes from the leading business State of this Nation, ought to appreciate the business horse sense that is involved in the policy, and he ought to get behind it.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. My thought when I made the remark about its being post-mortem was that in many of these items you can not tell in advance what money is going to be refunded until it is refunded.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am not talking about refunding, I am talking about spending. I am talking about what the gentleman from Pennsylvania was talking about when he said we must demand estimates of the amount of money proposed to be expended in the next fiscal year. That is what his amendment had to deal with. If, as was stated by the gentleman from Michigan, it is impossible to give estimates, then our whole Budget system is a farce. Our whole Budget system is founded on the policy of giving reliable information in advance of the expenditure. It is impossible to go into detail before the Budget Committee. All the Budget Committee demands is general estimates. Then it becomes the province of the Committee on Appropriations, after the Budget Committee gets its general estimates, to get the estimates in specific detail.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman should admit that anything that the chairman of the subcommittee has done has been with an effort to differentiate between the cases where an itemization was possible and desirable, and other cases where itemization to the degree demanded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not only impossible, without tremendous expense, and probably impossible even then to foretell, but also unnecessary and quite undesirable.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to submit to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan this proposition: If he will take that so-called Book of Estimates and go to his office and spend a month on it, he can not tell within a million dollars of where the money is going specifically. It is just one conglomeration of generalities. Go through it, look at the analyses of estimates given there, and then the explanation that is attempted in the succeeding pages, and you will find that it is one generality after another. You can not tell within a million dollars of where the money is really going.

I think in view of the fact that the House has given these 35 men this tremendous power and responsibility, when a Member from Pennsylvania like our distinguished friend [Mr. KELLY] offers a wise policy, I think it ought to be treated seriously and given due consideration by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDUSTRIAL WORK AND CARE OF TIMBER.

For the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to educate Indians in the proper care of forests; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian women and girls housekeeping and other household duties, for necessary traveling expenses of such matrons, and for furnishing necessary equipments and supplies and renting quarters of them where necessary; for the conducting of experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, cotton, and fruits, and for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; for necessary traveling expenses of such farmers and stockmen and for furnishing necessary equipment and supplies for them; and for superintending and directing farming and stock raising among Indians, $375,000, of which sum not less than $50,000 shall be used for the employment of field matrons and nurses: Provided, That the foregoing shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin: Provided further, That not to exceed $20,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, cotton, grain, vegetables, and fruits: And provided further, That the amounts paid to matrons, foresters, farmers, physicians, nurses, and other hospital employees, and stockmen provided for in this act shall not be included within the limitations on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of August 24, 1912.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, merely for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. HICKS. I have not had the opportunity of going through these hearings, and so this may be a foolish or academic question. But why is the proviso in there excluding the Menominee Indian Reservation from the operation of this act?

Mr. CRAMTON. The Menominee Indian Reservation lumbering, as I understand, is a separate proposition, which at one time was a matter of considerable controversy in Congress before my time. There are extensive lumbering operations now going on there. It is cared for by separate legislation, and it is my impression that the exclusion clause here is to avoid having this act taken as in any way amending or interfering with the other act.

I will say to the gentleman further that this is an appropriation to aid in carrying on industrial and other work. The Menominee operations are self-supporting, and it is not necessary to use any of this money for that purpose. Further, there are in the hearings statements from the Indian Service as to the progress of these Menominee operations, showing the profits obtained, and so forth.

Mr. HICKS. Has this proviso been carried in other bills for many years?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; and there is no necessity for any appropriation for the Menominee operations, and that would be a sufficient reason for its exclusion here.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES OF INDIAN SERVICE.

For pay of special agents, at $2,000 per annum; for traveling and incidental expenses of such special agents, including sleeping car fare and a per diem of not to exceed $3.50 in lieu of subsistence, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, when actually employed on duty in the field or ordered to the seat of government; for transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Office of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for pay of employees not otherwise provided for; and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, $109,500: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of this appropriation may be used for continuing the work of the Competency Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma: Provided, That not to exceed $15,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended out of applicable funds in the work of determining the competency of Indians on Indian reservations outside of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 28, line 6, after the semicolon, by striking out the words "For pay of employees not otherwise provided for."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 28, line 6, after the word "duty," strike out the words "For pay of employees not otherwise provided for."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph carries an appropriation which is indeed general. It is styled "General expenses of Indian Service, $109,500." It is in addition to the items carrying practically every class of employees known to the Government, and the justification on page 209 of the hearings had before the subcommittee gives this statement:

The purpose of the fund, "General expenses, Indian Service," is adequately set forth in the title. It is used exclusively for general and not specific purposes. There are about 150 different agencies and schools throughout the country, nearly every State west of the Mississippi River having one or more agencies or schools within its territory. To carry on the work of these various schools and agencies it is necessary to employ over 5,000 persons in order that the work may be efficiently and expeditiously carried on. A force of special agents and supervisors is maintained for the purpose of making regular and periodic inspections of the various agencies and schools to see that all work is properly and carefully carried on.

Now in the analysis the salaries and wages and traveling expenses of these employees carried in this item amounts to $84,000; $84,000 out of some $109,000. I submit that here is a case where we should at least stop putting a general provision in for the pay of employees not otherwise provided for. There are teachers, agents, inspectors, farmers, stockmen, and supervisors to infinity carried in this bill specifically, and an item of this kind adding still others under a general clause seems to me unjustifiable.

Mr. BLANTON. And it involves $109,500.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes; and it can be eliminated without doing any injury, and making a saving of that much to the taxpayers. I believe that at least, after making a general appropriation of $109,500, we should take out the blanket authority of putting in other employees without specifically stating where they shall be sent or for what purpose.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Do the hearings disclose where this money is likely to be spent and upon whom?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They do not. There is no showing for reservation or school, although we heard yesterday about this wonderful Book of Estimates which, it was contended, itemized everything. I believe that an expenditure like that should be segregated according to the reservation and school. We should not attempt to deceive ourselves in a matter of this kind. This is a wasteful policy and my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the item involved here for the main part is analyzed in detail by the department to the committee. It does include the language to which reference has been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY]. The item is one that would need to be taken care of either in this general way or else it would need to be taken care of by an allocation of the amount of money involved to the various agencies having to do with the Indian work.

For instance, we have seven supervisors at definite salaries; we have three special agents; we have four traveling auditors; we have one supervisor, five superintendents, one chief clerk, eight clerks and financial clerks, and other definite employees who are engaged in some definite class of work. Then in addition to that we have occasion to use miscellaneous and temporary employees for a particular short period of time in bringing up work at one agency or another, and it is more economical to handle this work by having a lump sum, not too large, from which these expenses may be borne. It will be no economy to strike this item from the bill here, because you will need to provide definite items for the different agencies throughout the country, and the items would need to be large enough in each case to take care of the maximum expenditure required in each particular instance. In this case we can keep the item fairly small, because then it is elastic, and it can be used to meet an emergency whenever it may arise. The item should remain in the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Could the gentleman tell us out of the five thousand and odd employees in the Indian Service how many are Indians? Have you any record of it?

Mr. FRENCH. About 2,000 employees.

Mr. RAKER. Can the gentleman advise the committee whether or not it is the policy of the service to give competent Indians, both men and women—young men and young women as well—employment wherever opportunity presents itself?

Mr. FRENCH. It is the general policy, and my impression is not only that it is the general policy but that in many instances it is required. Officers coming before the committee have testified of their great desire to have Indians employed in various capacities for the effect in encouraging other Indians and for the training it gives the Indians who are employed.

Mr. CARTER. The general rule is to give the Indians preference. That has been carried to the extent of establishing an Indian employment division within the Indian Bureau, headed by Charley Dagenette, a Peoria Indian, as I recall. It is a part of his business to look after the employment of Indians in the service, and look after their welfare and see that they do not get the worst of it in promotions and otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Is it the policy to give them employment wherever they can under these circumstances?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly, and that is done.

Mr. FRENCH. The last two items that we passed over I think are entirely for Indian employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on line 13, page 28, to strike out after the word "appropriated" the word "may" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 28, line 13, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I realize that this is not a good way of getting at what I desire, but I can see no other way of stating it than to provide that $15,000 shall be expended for determining the competency of Indians on Indian reservations. I realize that the word "may" there gives a leeway which might be justifiable if a real effort were being made to determine the competency of these Indians; but the difficulty has been that a policy has gone on for years under which only a very few Indians a year are declared competent. Where there should be thousands, there are only tens. It seems to me that 91 years of hothousing these Indians and supporting and civilizing them at a cost of many millions we ought to be able to produce some competent Indians. There never was a normal Indian who, with 21 years' training under American conditions, could not become a competent citizen. I do not believe there are any more Indians than white men who would be naturally incompetent if they were given the same opportunities and the same environment. But the Indian Bureau can not exist without the Indians, and that is the philosophy that runs through these bills. I believe that we should do the best we can here to declare the policy that there shall be real efforts made on the part of the Indian Bureau officials to declare these Indians competent, to cut them loose and let them sink or swim. That is the only way that manhood ever develops, by letting men out to face the difficulties of life and to win or to fail. Some white men fail and so some Indians will fail, but the majority of them will get to their feet and will come to a point where they will win a place as members in the American community. I hope that something can be done which will indicate that Congress is determined to see that the Indians who are really competent are declared competent, their lands given them, their division of the tribal funds made, and then take them for all time from the clutches of the Indian Bureau, whose existence is the reason for the expenditure of these vast funds.

Mr. STEPHENS. Following the gentleman's line of argument, does he not think it would be a good idea to abolish all of our civil service laws in order to turn out those who are dependent upon them?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is this difference: The personnel in any other bureau of the Government is not the same kind of a bureaucracy as in a bureau where you are dealing with helpless wards. These Indians are wards. They can not vote——

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. There is not an Indian in Oklahoma who has not full rights, and every member of the Five Civilized Tribes is like all the other citizens of the United States.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, that only applies to one State. I do not mean to say that all of the Indians can not vote. But if all could vote to-day, there would be a different Indian policy.

Mr. CARTER. This only applies to the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; I am amending the other item, outside of the Five Civilized Tribes. The gentleman does not understand what he is talking about. If he will follow my amendment he will see that I leave out the Five Civilized Tribes and that I have offered to amend the next item, leaving it so that he can take care of his own Five Civilized Tribes if he so desires.

Mr. CARTER. Let me find out what the gentleman's amendment really is.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. These Indians in the majority of cases have no votes. They are the ones on the reservations. They have very little influence; but here is a bureau that has considerable influence, because it has the power to give certain things to its friends. I believe if there is a choice between standing for the Indians and standing for the Indian Bureau, Congress should stand for the Indians, and that means that you will have to declare these Indians competent when they are competent. I have known of cases where Indians had great ability but could not get allotments, could not get themselves declared competent, although they were competent in fact; could not be turned loose, no matter how earnestly they requested it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the gentleman has moved to strike out the word "may," in line 13, on page 28, and to substitute the word "shall."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. BUTLER. That proviso, as I understand, refers entirely to the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Not at all. This refers to those who are outside of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman repeat his amendment? Perhaps I am mistaken.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. My amendment is on page 28, line 13.

Mr. CARTER. What does the gentleman propose?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I propose to strike out the word "may" and to insert the word "shall," so that this bureau shall get our idea that we want Indians who are really competent declared competent and turned loose. This does not touch the Five Civilized Tribes. Perhaps the gentleman from Oklahoma says they do not need any competency commission.

Mr. CARTER. I never made any such statement, and I have a commission provided in here for that.

Mr. BUTLER. I asked my question because of the statement made by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It is just the opposite of what the gentleman from Oklahoma stated. I leave out the Five Civilized Tribes and am trying to get a competency commission on the other reservations. It simply provides for $15,000 for determining the competency of Indians who are entitled to it and declaring them competent with such benefits as accrue from such action.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania undertakes to put strange words in my mouth and assign positions to me that I never occupied when he says that I have taken the position that the Five Civilized Tribes did not need any competency commission. If the gentleman will look at the bottom of page 29 he will find there an item for a competency commission for the Five Civilized Tribes. That item was placed in the bill several years ago by an amendment proposed by me and has been carried along ever since. For several years we used the mandatory term there, but we found that we were getting no further by using the word "shall" than by using the word "may." The language provided that "not less than $15,000 shall be used for a competency commission for the Five Civilized Tribes," and so forth, yet in the analysis of expenditures subsequently submitted to our committee we found that only $5,000 had been expended. We had no desire to force the expenditure of money on the bureau that could not and will not be used in relieving the Indians from the bureau supervision. Our friend from Pennsylvania seems to labor under the delusion that no progress has been made with reference to the releasing of the Indian.

Let me call his attention to a few outstanding facts. There are a few more than 101,000 enrolled members of the Five Civilized Tribes. As late as 1908—14 years ago—all of them were restricted Indians and not a single one could sell his property nor execute any valid contract with reference to it without permission of the great White Father at Washington. Within the duration of these 14 years restrictions as to alienation and contract have been removed from nearly 70,000, leaving only a bit more than 30,000, or about one-third, still remaining under Government supervision. Every member of less than one-half Indian blood has all restrictions removed and every Indian of less than three-quarters has every inhibition removed except homestead restrictions, and practically all educated full bloods and those of more than half blood have been released from all restrictions.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Why should these Indians be continually carried on the bureau rolls and held under supervision as tribal Indians are held?

Mr. CARTER. I think I have just shown that about two-thirds of them are not held under supervision at all, and I know of no reason why their names should be dropped from their rolls simply because they have been declared competent. Moreover, it is necessary to carry the names on the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, for they still have a residue of tribal property undisposed of. The tribal affairs of the Cherokees, numbering about 41,000 members, have been completely disposed of, and the tribal government abolished. The tribal affairs of the Creeks and Seminoles, some 17,000, as I now recall, have all been settled with the exception of three boarding schools. All the tribal property of the Choctaws and Chickasaws has been sold and that estate wound up with the exception of their segregated mineral lands. Most of the surface of the mineral land has been sold, all the asphalt deposits have been sold, and about 20 to 25 per cent of the coal deposits are sold, as I now recall. The department claims to have been unable to sell the remaining coal deposits on account of the general depression affecting the price. When the balance of these coal deposits are sold another per capita payment to Choctaws and Chickasaws will be in order under the law, and certainly that could not be made unless the names of all the beneficiaries were carried on some kind of authentic document, whether you call it a bureau roll, a roster, a list, or whatnot.

More than $25,000,000 of their funds have been distributed among the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes during the past six years, making a per capita distribution of about $1,000 to every man, woman, and child enrolled with the two tribes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. My amendment does not touch the Five Civilized Tribes. It applies to the others; and does not the gentleman, who has had a great deal of experience and who knows as much about Indian affairs as the committee—and I sat with him pleasantly on the committee that investigated the Indian Bureau and I know that he has tried to solve these great problems—I want to ask him if $15,000 is too much to spend for the purpose of getting competent Indians out from under the bureau and giving them a chance to be American citizens in American communities.

Mr. CARTER. I was not inveighing against the gentleman's amendment, either with reference to the Five Civilized Tribes or other Indians. I have no objection to it; the only thing I was undertaking to do was to keep the gentleman from Pennsylvania from putting me in a false position; putting words into my mouth which I never uttered. Notwithstanding the great progress made in releasing the Indians and admitting of them into full-fledged citizenship, if I had thought they needed no other release from restrictions I would not have agreed to the appropriation of $15,000 for the competency commission. I was on the subcommittee that reported it and insisted that it stay in the bill.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman did agree to have the word "may" substituted for the word "shall."

Mr. CARTER. Yes; and for a good reason. We had found that in the bill of the last fiscal year it was provided that the bureau "shall" use $15,000.

The officials of the bureau said that they were unable to use more than $5,000. Therefore, what is the use of camouflaging and demagoguing, pretending to do something for little political gain in Oklahoma, that does not serve any beneficial purpose in the way of legislation? I want to get results; I do not want to make any grand-stand play. I want to get my people down there graduated into full-fledged citizenship, so that they will be able to take care of themselves at the earliest possible moment. Every step I take is in that direction, and there is no use of trying to do something which we have found impossible. That is why I agreed that the word "shall" should go out.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not opposed to this amendment?

Mr. CARTER. No; it is a matter of no consequence, one way or the other. The bureau officials will use it if they deem it necessary and they will not use it if they think it unnecessary, regardless of the language you put in the bill, and our most recent experience has proven that to be a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDUSTRY AMONG INDIANS.

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, which sum may be used for the purchase of seeds, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable Indians to become self-supporting: Provided, That said sum shall be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1930: Provided further, That not to exceed $15,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians, and that no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purchase of tribal herds.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. This item proposes an expenditure of $80,000 for the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians, to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops. On page 26 of the bill there is a section dealing with industrial work and the care of timber. A reading of that section discloses the fact that it is proposed by that appropriation to encourage and aid the Indians in the cultivation of grain, vegetables, fruit, and so forth. Will the gentleman in charge of the bill explain why it is necessary to split those items? How is the work related? It seems to cover the same service. The item last referred to on page 26 of the bill is for the cultivation of vegetables, cotton, and fruit. This item just read has to do with the cultivation of fruit, grains, and other crops.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, generally speaking, the item at the bottom of page 25 running onto page 26 is for the purpose of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations, and so forth, and the conduct of experiments on agency farms, and the teaching of domestic science and farming and stock raising, and so forth. The item before us is to accomplish the same general purpose, but through a somewhat different method, for encouraging industry by the purchase of seeds, animals, and so forth. In that connection the department says that under this plan no money is loaned to the Indians directly, but the appropriation is used for the purchase of seeds, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary, to enable the Indians to become self-supporting.

The department further says:

The Indians generally appreciate the benefits of this appropriation and make every effort to pay the amounts due under their agreements. They are allowed six years to pay for live stock and four years to pay for other articles. This appropriation has been one of the largest factors in the industrial progress of the Indians and has enabled many Indians to become self-supporting who would otherwise still be dependent upon the Government. The appropriation has been used on about 80 different reservations located in practically all the Western States, and nearly 40,000 Indians have received direct benefits therefrom.

From the total appropriations of about $4,000,000 that have been made, $2,400,000 has been repaid. The general purpose is the same, but the one is through methods of instruction and the other through giving them equipment with which to carry on the industry.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Is this activity—that is, the one with reference to the purchase of seeds, animals, tools, and so forth—closely related to the work of experimentation, and so forth, covered by the paragraph on page 25?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is a relation that is necessary, and they are both parts of a plan to bring about eventually the self-support of the Indians, but it is necessary that the two activities be carried on side by side.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to the gentleman, though I would not undertake to put my opinion against his knowledge, he having studied the matter, that the purchase of seeds, tools, and general application of that which is ascertained by experimentation ought to be very closely related to the experimentation. In other words, the people who make the experiments determine that a given grain or cotton, or whatever agricultural commodity they have, is well suited to a given locality, and ought to have to do with the purchase of the seeds.

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume that is the case. I call the gentleman's attention, however, to the items themselves. This is a reimbursable item; the money is to come back to the Government, and, as a matter of fact, it is coming back. Out of $4,000,000 heretofore appropriated, $2,400,000 has been repaid. The other is a gratuity that does not come back; it is for instruction.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Is there any additional personnel employed, the salary of which is a burden on this activity, by reason of the item on page 29?

Mr. CARTER. No. The principal difference between the two items is that one is reimbursable and the other is a gratuity. That is the only difference. One is used in connection with the other.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma has overlooked the fact that there is a little item of $4,800 for salaries out of the $80,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. How much money has been expended through this paragraph?

Mr. CRAMTON. Four million dollars, beginning with 1912. In one year as much as $600,000 was appropriated.

Mr. BUTLER. How much has been recovered?

Mr. CRAMTON. Two million four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. About $1,600,000 remaining unpaid?

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, the time has not expired.

Mr. BUTLER. We are bound to lose something, of course. I know that, and I am not making any criticism of anyone. I think this is one of the useful things in the bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. We should emphasize the fact that $2,400,000 has come back. The percentage has been much better than has been our experience with the white farmers of the West where seeds were furnished them.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARIZONA.

For support and civilization of Indians in Arizona, including pay of employees, $185,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Page 31, line 20, after the figures "$185,000," add the following: "Provided, That in this item and in all others in this act making appropriations for the support and civilization of Indians not more than 25 per cent of the amount here appropriated shall be expended for salaries, wages, and expenses of employees of the Bureau of Indian Affairs."

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this is the first specific item for the support and civilization of Indians. It carries $185,000 for the Indians of Arizona. This bill carries these items for support and civilization in a total of $3,219,700. That is in addition to the appropriation of $370,000 for the relief of distress and in addition to the appropriation of $150,000 for vehicles used in the service, and in addition to the payment for Indian schools and others. This is an item used in a certain way called "for support and civilization."

Now I make the requirement in my amendment that for these special appropriations at least 75 cents out of a dollar shall go to the benefit of the Indians themselves, and that only 25 per cent of it be spent for salaries and expenses of employees.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. How does the gentleman expect the Indian to get this other 75 per cent? How is he going to have the money delivered to him?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would get that 75 cents delivered to him at an expense of 25 cents. I will show what has been done on a few items in this bill. Colorado receives an appropriation for support and civilization of Indians of $3,788, and under that the salaries and wages were $2,605. That was for salaries and wages alone and did not include traveling expenses, supplies, and so forth. For the Florida Indians last year the appropriation for support and civilization was $6,535, while salaries and wages alone consumed $4,187. In Idaho, on the Fort Hall Indians there was expended $24,361; for salaries and wages, $14,391. In Kansas, on the Pottawatomies there was expended $3,230, and out of that $2,154 went for salaries and wages. In Minnesota, for the Chippewas there was spent $43,200, and for salaries $30,319. In Montana, at the Fort Peck Agency there was expended $28,081, and for salaries and wages, $19,171.

I believe if you go through this bill you will find that more than 50 per cent of these appropriations for support and civilization of Indians went to salaries and wages alone, not counting their expenses. That is not support and civilization of the Indians. That is the support of the Indian Bureau and the pauperization of the Indians. If Congress takes money out of the Treasury for the support and civilization of the Indians, its benefits ought to go to them, not in cash alone, but the things purchased should be for the benefit of the Indians themselves.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman think that too much of the money goes to the civilizer here?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I surely do. I think the support is for the employees of the Indian Bureau instead of for the Indians.

This is a reasonable proposition, Mr. Chairman. I realize we have not a quorum here and it is impossible to secure the passage of amendments with the few Members here present. But this is a reasonable proposition, that 25 per cent is enough out of each dollar for the support and civilization of the Indians to be spent on the employees of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman please explain to the committee how it will civilize the Indian to pay him money out of the Treasury?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows I am not talking about that. I am anxious that the benefits shall go to the Indians.

Mr. HAYDEN. You want to take three-quarters of this money, as I understand it, and give it to the Indians in cash?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, no. The support and civilization is not given in cash. We have rations and relief of distress provided in other items.

Mr. HAYDEN. You want to give them rations and relief?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, no. I want this padded salary list cut in two or more. I believe this amendment of mine would save $800,000 to the Treasury and that the help that the Indians get would be exactly what it is now.

Mr. LAYTON. If that is the case, is it not worth while having a quorum to settle the question?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, no. If we had a quorum we would have some constructive amendments put into this bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Is not civilization largely a matter of education, and is not education largely a matter of salaries?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, I am talkng about the large proportion of these funds beng spent in salaries and wages under the title of support and civilization.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does not the gentleman's amendment provide that 25 per cent of the appropriation shall be applied to the Indians in the field?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No. I am willing that these items for schools and relief of distress, and so on, should be given largely in salaries to teachers and physicians, but when we come in and appropriate $3,000,000 and more for support and civilization of the Indians I want that money to be spent for the Indians.

Mr. BRITTEN. What is the gentleman's definition of civilization if it is not education? Education, of course, must necessarily go through the salary pay roll.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not know that this bill carries $5,000,000 a year for education alone, and that this item we are discussing is an entirely different matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, this is an item that is similar to a great many that appear throughout the bill, and hence I think that the situation should be clearly put before the committee. The item is for the support and civilization of Indians in Arizona, $185,000. That money could be used in different ways. We could ship out to an Army post $185,000 worth of bacon, cloth, and so forth, and tell the Indians "Come on, boys, and we will support you as long as that $185,000 lasts," and there would be no expenditure for salaries. One hundred per cent of the appropriation would go to the Indians. In that way it would go further than the gentleman is suggesting; but whether it would really be for the benefit of the Indians is a question on which most authorities disagree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Most of the authorities will agree that the proper policy is not to give the Indian corn, but to help him to learn how to raise corn and handle his land so as to produce corn for his own support. Most authorities will agree that that is the most beneficial and in the long run the most economical to the Government.

Now, as to this item, the department said:

The Indians to be benefited under this appropriation number approximately 43,300, of which 42,992 are full bloods.

Only $5 per Indian approximately is expended. If you buy bacon, corn, and so forth, $5 would not last long.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Of course, the gentleman understands that other items are being used along with this $185,000 for support and civilization.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am now talking about this item. I read further:

These Indians are scattered over a territory composed of 18,653,014 acres. As most of the land in this State is not adapted to agriculture, many of the Indians are engaged in stock raising, and every effort is being made to advance them along this and similar lines.

In other words, it is a matter of education, as the gentleman from Illinois has emphasized. The greater part of this appropriation is to be expended in the payment of salaries of employees of the several agencies. The gentleman wanted information, and it is here in the hearings.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I read it in the hearings, and that is the reason I introduced the amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. All right. We have nothing to conceal. The sum of $96,660.27 is for salaries of employees at the several agencies, of which there are 13, in the performance of their official duties in instructing the Indians; not in handing out rations to them, but in instructing the Indians in the method of stock raising.

The remainder of the appropriation is to be expended for the purchase of subsistence supplies and other miscellaneous expenses in connection with the supervision of these Indians. The entire amount requested will be required for the support and civilization of the Indians in Arizona during the fiscal year 1924.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] made a speech yesterday. He says there is not a quorum here. There was not a quorum here yesterday. I am sorry his speech does not appear in the RECORD this morning so that those who did not hear it yesterday could have read it to-day. Those who are here to-day who were not here yesterday have not the advantage of the information the gentleman gave us yesterday. If they had heard the speech, they would know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to wipe out the Indian Service, and this amendment is just one of the amendments by which he wants to accomplish the purpose of destroying the Indian Service. I hope the committee will not support his amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. This appropriation is $485,000, and it carries only $12,960.28 for subsistence. I do not know whether that is for subsistence of Indians or of employees of the bureau, or what not; but if every cent of it is used for subsistence of Indians, it is the best argument that can be offered on the floor of this House to show the advancement of the Indians. They have advanced to the point where for this great number, some 43,000 Indians——

Mr. CRAMTON. More than 42,000 full bloods.

Mr. CARTER. Forty-two thousand nine hundred full bloods, or a little less than 43,000, only $12,000 is required for subsistence, less than 30 cents per capita, whereas I dare say 40 years ago it would have taken one-third this entire appropriation for subsistence for the same number of Indians. So I say this item is the best argument for the progress that the Indian is making and a real argument in defense of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This money for subsistence supplies is not used for subsistence of the Indians entirely. It is used in great part for subsistence of employees.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman had only listened to what I said, he would not be wasting our time by repeating my statements. The amount expended for subsistence—$12,000—is such a small portion of the entire amount that any controversy as to whether it be for Indians or employees would be immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent and might well be stricken out of the record.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman would be happy if not a cent of it went to the Indians?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman is talking about rationing the Indians, I say yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am not talking about that.

Mr. CARTER. I think the quicker you get away from the rationing system and put the Indian on his own feet, as the gentleman has been talking about, the quicker you make a self-sustaining citizen of him, and everyone should certainly know that to be the paramount purpose of the Indian Bureau. I would rather spend money in this bill for educating the Indians and making good self-sustaining citizens of them than to dole it out $5 or $10 at a time for rations or anything else.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is a typical illustration of a radical change sought to be accomplished by one who has no knowledge of the actual facts and conditions on the Indian reservations. The gentleman has obtained the alleged information, which is the basis for his amendment, by hearing somebody tell about the Indians or by reading what somebody else has written about them, but never having visited these Indian reservations and having no personal information as to the facts of course the gentleman does not really know what should be done.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman made that statement yesterday, and I admitted that I did not have any reservation in my district, and that therefore I can probably give a little attention to the Indians as well as to the Indian Bureau. I have not an Indian in my district as far as I know.

Mr. HAYDEN. I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no Indians residing in his district, because if he had, and had visited them on their reservations, he would know something about the conditions which exist there. Not having been upon these reservations, the gentleman has acquired from somebody else a mass of misinformation which he is now inflicting upon the House. The fact is that nine-tenths of this appropriation is spent for salaries of Indian agents, stockmen, farmers, and other employees on these reservations. If I understand the gentleman, his desire and purpose in offering his amendment is to cut down the salaries of these employees by three-fourths and expect them to live on the remaining one-fourth, and to dole out to the Indians, either in cash or in goods, the remainder of this appropriation.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No, no.

Mr. HAYDEN. That would be the worst calamity that could ever happen to the Indians of Arizona. Fortunately they have never been pauperized. The Navajos, Pimas, Papagoes, and practically all of the Indians in Arizona are self-supporting. They are not ration Indians. The Apaches are the only Indians who ever received rations, and that was at a time when they were prisoners of war. They are the only Indians in Arizona who know anything about the ration system. So long as I remain a Member of this House I shall exercise every effort to prevent any Indian in Arizona from receiving anything in the way of a direct gratuity from the Government of the United States except in the case of the old and infirm. I want every able-bodied Indian to earn his own living and to make his own way, to realize the value of a dollar because he has worked for it. If the gentleman's amendment were adopted, and I presume that he offers it in all seriousness, if it accomplishes that which he seeks to have done, it would result in having three-fourths of this money appropriated out of the Treasury and either paid to the Indians in cash or in goods. This would be a pure gratuity for which they did no work and which they did not honestly earn. This would immediately instill in the minds of the Indians the idea that Uncle Sam, the great father at Washington, owes them a living and that they do not have to work to support themselves and their families.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not concerned about rations, and he should not be, in view of a ration which has been shown to me and for which I will give the authority, Joseph K. Dixon, of Philadelphia. This is the ration for a northern Cheyenne Indian for one month. Here are the rations for one month: Three pounds of meat, one-fourth pound of sugar, one-fourth pound of coffee, two small scoops of flour, little baking powder, salt, and soap. That is the monthly ration for an Indian who is destitute.

Mr. HAYDEN. If that Northern Cheyenne was an able-bodied Indian he ought not to receive any rations from the Government.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. He was destitute, sick, and in a cellar with a dirt floor, with a temperature 40 degrees below zero.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then he should have been sent to one of the Indian Service hospitals.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is just one month's rations.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's amendment means nothing more or less than taking money out of the Treasury of the United States and paying it over to able-bodied Indians in the State of Arizona who are now making their own way, who are entirely self-supporting, and who stand before the world as capable of earning their own living. His offering it at this time proves the truth of the old saying that "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing."

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman from Arizona allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my good friend.

Mr. BUTLER. We owe a great duty to the Indians, we all admit that. But this item seems that it is costing us more to feed them than it is to attempt to educate them.

Mr. HAYDEN. Undoubtedly it would cost the Government a large sum of money to feed all of the Indians. I am certain that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would not want to thus pauperize them.

Mr. BUTLER. Not for a minute, but it seems to me that it may be necessary to expend this large sum of money for agents, inspectors, and so forth. I do not know, for I have never studied the subject as has the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. There are 13 reservations in Arizona and 43,300 Indians reside thereon. Does the gentleman think that $185,000 is too much overhead to pay for the supervising of all of the affairs of the Arizona Indians, whose property includes over 18,650,000 acres of land?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I was asking the gentleman for information.

Mr. HAYDEN. In further reply to the first remark made by my friend let me say that there was a commission appointed by President Grant to study the Indian problem. That commission reported that it then cost a million dollars to kill an Indian. That figure was derived by dividing the expense of keeping soldiers in the Indian country by the number of Indians that had been killed in warfare. Therefore, the commission concluded that it would be much cheaper to feed them than to kill them, and that was the beginning of the ration system. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Fort Mojave, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $50,000; for general repairs and improvements, and enlarging dining hall, $12,000; for equipment for irrigation plant, $8,000; in all, $70,000.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if there is any limitation on the age of a pupil going to a day school or any of the Indian schools.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think there is no limitation of age, although, as a matter of fact, I think almost without exception they are minors.

Mr. WATSON. Is there a limitation of age at the day schools on the reservation?

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as I know—and I am a long way from being an authority—there is no limitation of age at any of the Indian schools. Almost every school, excepting those relating to some industrial activity, are attended by minors.

Mr. WATSON. Can men or women regardless of age take advantage of this appropriation?

Mr. CRAMTON. So far as I know there is nothing to prevent it, but I think that almost without exception the pupils are minors, and it is an exception that one of them is an adult.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Government require compulsory education?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; though the Government in many cases is active in securing the attendance of Indian pupils. I think the gentleman would be interested in reading in the hearings the statement in reference to education by Commissioner Burke, Mr. Meritt, and Mr. McDowell, secretary of the board of Indian commissioners, on the subject of education. All their statements are in the direction that there is a very encouraging movement on the part of the Indians to desire their children to be in school and the desire of the Indian children to go to school. Voluntary applications are greater than the facilities of the schools to accommodate them.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 800 Indian pupils at the Sherman Institute, Riverside, Calif., and for pay of superintendent, including not to exceed $1,000 for printing and issuing school paper, $160,000; for general repairs and improvements, including construction of additional sleeping porches, $15,000; in all, $175,000.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 25, after the word "porches" strike out the rest of the sentence and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$40,000; in all, $200,000."

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, last year when the Interior Department appropriation bill was before the House I offered a group of three amendments. One increased the number of students from 750 to 800. The second increased the allowance for their support from $150,000 to $160,000. The third, $25,000 to provide increased capacity to take care of the additional 50 students.

The committee has adopted now the first two of my amendments offered last year and has provided for the increased attendance at this school by 50 additional pupils. They have made proper provision for their support, but the committee failed to provide funds for increasing the housing facilities. I say that because the item in this bill, "General repairs and improvements, including construction and additional sleeping porches, $15,000," is only the same amount which has been appropriated for a number of years for general repairs and improvements at this school. It has been $15,000 a year right along, except last year, when, there having been a small surplus left over from the year before, this item was cut down to $14,000. It has now been put back to the sum heretofore carried for this purpose. The introduction of the additional language into this bill, to wit, "including construction for additional sleeping porches," without the appropriation of additional money means nothing. It confesses the need for additional sleeping porches but withholds the means for securing them. It is, of course, economy in one sense of the word, for we can refuse to provide any houses for them or any place for them to sleep—they can sleep on the ground—but the purpose of maintaining these schools is to teach, among other things, civilized ways of living. If we want them to retain the habits which they have on the tribal reservations, that is one thing; but when we start out with the idea that the purpose of maintaining these schools is to teach them the ways of civilized people, to teach them trades and occupations, and, for instance, to teach the girls housekeeping, then it seems to me that we ought to at least provide proper housing facilities for them.

Last year I stated that there was a waiting list of 100 Indian children who want an education but could not be admitted to this school for lack of capacity. Then the Greenville Indian School in northern California burned down and many of their students were brought down to Sherman Institute and are being taken care of there as an emergency proposition. They had to be taken care of because there was no place else for them to go. They are crammed in there to-day like sardines. It is a deplorable condition and is to be tolerated only as a temporary situation.

Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of the Indian Bureau, has been praised very highly by the members of this committee, who say that he conducts the Indian business economically and efficiently and has never asked for a dollar that he did not need. He asked for this very item, the very amount that I am asking for, for repairs and improvements, $15,000, which has always been allowed, and $25,000 in addition to that for the purpose of providing these much-needed sleeping porches. For the committee to say that changing the amount of the general-repairs item for $14,000 last year to $15,000 this year, when it has been $15,000 for many years, and that that $1,000 increase is to provide sleeping porches is a joke. No man here but knows that you can not put a porch on the front of a private dwelling house for $1,000. But they say they will do it some way. It is like making bricks without straw. It can only be done, if at all, by neglecting some vital and necessary repairs. It may be possible to build the porches and let the roofs leak, but that is mighty poor business and mighty poor economy.

I want now to read the statement of one who knows very well the situation at this school with respect to the amount of money needed for general repairs:

Last year, instead of receiving an additional appropriation it was reduced to $14,000, which has made it difficult to provide needed improvements and repairs. Next year one and probably two new boilers will be an absolute necessity, this requiring an expenditure of approximately $5,000. Extensive repairs to our steam-heating system are also necessary, as well as extensive repairs to the roofs and floors of many buildings, requiring more than ordinary expenditure of funds. A new pump will be needed at the school farm. We can not make these unusual as well as absolutely necessary repairs from the repair fund heretofore allowed from year to year. It is false economy to neglect necessary repairs and improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWING. It seems to me that the committee has overlooked a vital part of this item and has failed to provide any money with which to build the sleeping porches, although it declares that the schools should be equipped with sleeping porches.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. How many pupils were there at the time this amount was admitted—750?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. And they propose to admit 50 more and make the same allowance?

Mr. SWING. Yes; but in the meantime they have taken in an additional number. There are in the school now 791, but they are in a deplorable condition—three and four of them jammed into one small room, a thing which would not be permitted under ordinary health and sanitary rules and regulations of any modern city. It is a temporary condition, however, which should be promptly remedied.

I feel there has been an unwarranted discrimination against this school, because the committee in the case of every other school of this class, where they have added 50 pupils they have also added a substantial sum to the usual amount of the repair fund for the purpose of building additional sleeping porches, and only in the instance of the Sherman Institute have they failed to provide any appropriation over and above the amount usually appropriated for ordinary repairs.

This school, in my opinion, is one of the best schools in the United States. It gives the most for the money. Last year the committee brought out the information that out of 26 schools in the United States 65 per cent exceeded the lawful maximum rate per capita, which is $250 where there are less than 200 pupils and $225 where there are more than 200 pupils. This school in Riverside made the remarkable record last year of $168 per capita. There are only two other schools in the United States that beat it. One is at Cherokee, in North Carolina, which is an unfair comparison, because there a number of the pupils are day students only, and the Government is not paying for their food and clothing. The other is the Chilocco school in Oklahoma, which is partially endowed, because it owns 8,000 acres of land, 6,000 of which are under cultivation. Taking school for school, of those which are in the same class as this, you will find that this school is the most economically and efficiently operated Indian school in the United States. With this fine record we ought not to hesitate to provide facilities for taking care of those Indian children who desire to attend this school. I agree with the committee and compliment it upon the idea that they are carrying out of enlarging these schools, because they have found it to be true that where they increased the number of students at a school they decreased the per capita cost, because the overhead is about the same in any event.

Mr. HAYDEN. Where do the pupils come from that principally attend the Sherman Institute?

Mr. SWING. I have 12 reservations in my district; some of them come from along the Colorado River.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is the gentleman sure that none of them come from outside of the State of California?

Mr. SWING. Oh, yes; they come from all the Southwest, because the school has an excellent standing and a fine reputation.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is it not a fact that much more than half the students at that school are from States outside of California?

Mr. SWING. I do not think as many as that. There was last year a waiting list of 100. I tried to get 2 pupils in myself, but was unable to get them in.

Mr. HAYDEN. And those were California Indians that the gentleman tried to get in?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly they ought to take care of the California students rather than send outside of the State and pay transportation charges for bringing them in.

Mr. SWING. Oh, they do not send outside of the State to get them. They come there of their own accord, many paying their own traveling expenses in order to get there.

Mr. Meritt said in testifying before the committee:

> This is one of our best schools, and we feel that the Indian children are fortunate to have a school like this in which to get an education.

And the Indian children do feel just that way, and that is why there is a waiting list all the time. With this magnificent plant, with a wonderful record for efficiency and economy, we ought to be glad to avail ourselves of its usefulness by increasing its capacity without at all increasing its overhead expenses. I hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard in opposition to the amendment. I am very frank to admit it is difficult to oppose such an amendment, both because of the sincere zeal of the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING], who has urged the amendment not only on the floor but in personal conversation with the chairman of the subcommittee on several occasions, and in addition to that there is the recognition on the part of the subcommittee that this is one of the very good schools and that it is doing very good work. Of this school it was said a year ago by Mr. Meritt that if they had the money for repairs and improvements and additional construction, they could take care of 1,000 at a small additional cost. The attendance at that time at the school was 732. That was within the appropriation made at that time. The average attendance of the current year is 791, and the administration of the school should be given credit that with an appropriation for 750 pupils they have actually taken care of 791, and that at a per capita cost, as the gentleman says, below that authorized by law. The average cost is only $168. They make a splendid showing. The present bill proposes an appropriation for 800, which is 50 more than the appropriation for the current year. It is only nine above the average attendance at the present time.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. SWING. That is an increase from 732 last year.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, yes; I get all of that.

Mr. SWING. And 791 this year, with no additional appropriation for the increase.

Mr. CRAMTON. I admit all of that. The present attendance is 791, and we are appropriating for 800, and we anticipate that they will have room for more than 800.

Now, it is true that if we give them $40,000, as the gentleman proposes, they would pretty well fill up the school next year; if we gave them more they would fill it up, because we are not alone taking care of California there but we are taking care of the Navajos and other tribes as well. The gentleman has made comparison with other schools and talked about endowments and farms, and so forth. This school received from agricultural products raised on 146 acres $21,812, and all of it goes to any purpose they want for the maintenance of that institution. In the Cherokee School, over in North Carolina, where they have a most remarkable per capita cost—and the gentleman referred to that school as having such a large income—the total value of the agricultural products raised there was $5,314; the value of other products was $1,905; and the amount received for labor was $273.73.

Mr. SWING. What conclusion does the gentleman draw from the comparison of the two schools?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am simply emphasizing the fact that while a splendid showing has been made by the Sherman Institute a similar splendid showing has also been made by the Cherokee School and by other schools.

Now, the difficulty that confronted the Budget officers passing on this matter, and the difficulty that confronts the committee facing the problems of these schools, is that they all make appeals which we would like to grant, but there must be a sum total after all and there must be an apportionment between the schools, and we must face the fire of such gentlemen as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], who charges that the bill already is too large.

We must not unduly increase the amounts. They have 791 pupils now. We appropriate for 800. That is an increase really of 9, although I am frank to say that if we give them that they will have over 800 pupils in the school. I dare say that they have them packed pretty closely now. But, on the other hand, gentlemen are complaining that we are giving too much luxury to the Indians.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Having great confidence in the gentleman's good judgment, I would like to know whether he thinks those children are overcrowded? I am particular about that. I hope they are not overcrowded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am sure that the management are packing them as closely as is conducive to good health. They are trying to take care of as many as they can. There is no evidence about their being packed in to an extent that is injurious to their health. The management are trying to get the most out of the money which the Government gives them.

Mr. SWING. Sixty were moved down from our end of the State, and the institution had no choice, but had to receive them.

Mr. CRAMTON. And the appropriation carried an extra amount to take care of them. I admit that they are crowded in as close as they ought to be, but not closer than is consistent with good health. There is no evidence to the contrary.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Are they crowded in as closely as they are in the public schools in Washington?

Mr. CRAMTON. That depends upon whose judgment you follow.

Mr. WINGO. It is not a question of judgment. It is a question of mathematics.

Mr. CRAMTON. It depends on whose mathematics. But let us take up the District bill when we come to it.

Mr. WINGO. It is a matter of comparison.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that white children sometimes are pretty well crowded.

Mr. WINGO. If the children are crowded in these Indian schools as badly as the children are crowded in the city of Washington, I think we are treating them shamefully.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman does not mind, I would like to finish my statement.

Mr. Meritt states in the hearings that the $15,000 covers also the construction of additional sleeping porches for the accommodation of the added number of pupils. The cost of the sleeping porches is $5,000; and to be sure of what his understanding is, I talked with him this morning, and I am advised that if this $15,000 is given they will find, in that $15,000, $5,000 for the construction of additional sleeping porches, and therefore the increase as anticipated will be taken care of, although not as fully as the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING] or I myself would like.

Mr. CARTER. You will notice that the statement is that the approximate cost of the sleeping porches is $5,000, which is to be taken from the $15,000 appropriation?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. That is about the same proportion of increase for improvement that they allowed to the Phoenix school in the same climate where they have different conditions and where it is better for the children to sleep in sleeping porches than inside?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words for the purpose of asking a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. BUTLER. What does the superintendent say about the crowded condition there? Does he make a request for this additional money?

Mr. CRAMTON. The superintendent asked for repairs and improvements, $30,000; for new buildings, $75,000; for equipment, gymnasium, and hospital, and so forth, $15,000; purchase of additional land, $75,000. That is the superintendent's idea. He evidently supports the $15,000 anyway.

Mr. BUTLER. Does he speak especially of the crowded condition there?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have nothing on that, but I will state that it is admitted that the institution is filled up now, but they have a wonderful climate in California, and they will stand crowding.

Mr. BUTLER. There is none better.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition for the purpose of asking the chairman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. KETCHAM. Just a moment ago the chairman made reference to the total value of agricultural products at this Riverside school. We have been making some comparisons, based on the value of these agricultural productions per acre at each Indian school, and I find that this school at Riverside, Calif., their production is $149.39 per acre, rather an unusual production. In contrast with that of the Cherokee Indian school in North Carolina they have $106.06 per acre. How does the committee arrive at that? That is an unusual production.

Mr. CARTER. I suppose it is arrived at by setting down just exactly what was produced. But you can not always tell by the area how much the products will amount to.

Mr. KETCHAM. It is the quality of the area?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes. The land may be better in one place than in another.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, I can explain that in a nutshell. One is irrigated land, the other is not. Therefore one is more intensely cultivated, with a much better production than the other.

Mr. KETCHAM. The gentleman is not exactly clear about that, is he? Does he say the lands at Cherokee are irrigated?

Mr. CARTER. No; the lands at Riverside are irrigated.

Mr. KETCHAM. The production at Cherokee is larger than at Riverside.

Mr. CARTER. I thought the gentleman made the other statement.

Mr. KETCHAM. No. One is $106.06 and the other $149.39.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SWING) there were—ayes 9, noes 27.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Fort Bidwell Indian School, Calif., including pay of superintendent, $22,500; for general repairs and improvements, $6,000; in all, $28,500.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 36, line 3, strike out the figures "$22,500," in line 3, page 36, and insert "$24,000," and in line 4, page 36, strike out the figures "$28,500" and insert the figures "$30,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this change of $1,500 looks almost infinitesimal. It ought to be at least $10,000 instead of that amount, at a very low estimate. There will be an increasing number of pupils at this school the coming year. The department in its estimate and in its statement before the committee urges that the amount of $30,000 be allowed, $24,000 for superintendent and maintenance and $6,000 for repairs.

I want to say now in response to what was said yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma that I think the gentleman did not really mean what he said when he said that this is a very expensive school. The misfortune is that several of these schools are not like some of the larger ones, for which a great amount of money has been poured out. In this school, as in others that I know of, the superintendent gives at least half of his time, if not more, and the employees give about half of their time as agents outside of the schools, traveling over the district and the State, and at this particular school traveling over three States looking after the Indians' lands and the Indians' interests. So that ought not to be charged to the per capita of the school, although it is unjustly so charged. This school ought to have this amount, and I trust the committee will not oppose this slight increase.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. When we had the last amendment up I suggested to my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON], in charge of the bill, that if these Indian schools were as crowded as the schools in the city of Washington they ought to have some relief. My friend suggested that that depended on whose judgment was taken. I am not taking the judgment of anybody on the question of the schools of the District of Columbia. I am basing my conclusions upon a personal knowledge, mathematical and mechanical, as well as a general survey of the schools of the District of Columbia. Of course, we are what might be called a city council for the District of Columbia. Nobody can ever accuse me of partiality for the District of Columbia, but candor compels me to admit that every time I look into the school situation in the District of Columbia I blush with shame.

The schools in this District are not taken care of as they should be. I think I know some of the reasons why they are not. It is a reflection upon Congress that we permit the condition to exist that does exist here. The facilities are inadequate and the schools in every way might be improved by a proper recognition of the problems and by proper appropriations, and by a businesslike constructive program extending over a term of years. I say that not only from the standpoint of business judgment but as one who has given a good deal of study to education. I have taken a great deal of interest in it. I have taught school myself and I am always interested in the public-school system anywhere. I state, as my judgment based upon a personal study of the school system in the city of Washington, that it is a shame and a disgrace that Congress does not treat the schools of this District better than it does.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, speaking in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], the maximum per capita cost for pupils at these Indian schools is $250 for schools of the size of the institution in question and $225 for the larger schools. The Indian Service, however, has been able to administer these schools so economically that they are being maintained upon a per capita cost of $200 for schools of the larger size and $225 for schools of this size, and this bill is framed upon that basis, except in the case of two or three schools in the extreme north where, naturally, the cost of fuel and so forth is greater during the winter. Schools in North Dakota and Montana, I think, are the only exceptions. The schools in California are based on a per capita cost of $225 for the smaller ones, and the committee has therefore cut the budget estimate as to this school, where there are only 100 pupils appropriated for, to conform to that general policy. The sum of $22,500 allows them the same amount proportionately as is carried for other small boarding schools through the country. In addition to that, this school, which is a small one, has $6,000 coming in from the operation of its farm, and that is also used for the support and maintenance of the school.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Did the gentleman have anything before the committee to show the amount of work performed by the superintendent and officers of this school in the handling of Indian property and disposing of materials of the Indians outside of the school?

Mr. CRAMTON. Is it the purpose to give this $1,500 increase to the superintendent?

Mr. RAKER. No; it is for the general business of the school.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I think that matter is quite immaterial. I have no information on that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 36, between lines 4 and 5, add as a new paragraph the following:

"For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Greenville School, California, including pay for superintendent, $24,000; for general repairs and improvements, $4,000; for repair of school building on account of and by reason of the fire of December 17, 1921, to be immediately available, $60,000; in all, $88,000."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING] has presented a good statement in regard to the Riverside School. A part of the pupils from the Greenville School went there and are there at present. They are not appropriated for. I have looked over the provision for the school at Carson and there is no provision for them there. I visited that school, went over there to look at it, and spent some little time there. No provision is made for them at the schools in Oregon and none in the other schools in California.

It was stated positively, and the RECORD will show it was stated, that they were going to transfer these pupils to the Bidwell Indian School and improve the Bidwell School and give additional buildings and equipment so as to provide for them there. They have not done so. They have made no provision for these Indian children. When the deficiency bill was up June 23, 1922, I presented an amendment which was ruled out on a point of order. At that time I showed that there are 28 public buildings—I want to call this particularly to the attention of the subcommittee and the committee—28 public buildings unused, standing idle. The valuation of this property was $250,000. There are 320 acres of Government land not estimated in value but probably worth $15,000, a good farm and good equipment. We have had already in the bill provision for sleeping porches, $10,000 or $20,000, and gymnasiums. Here is a school, and I care not who makes the report, I know that nobody has been there except perhaps some subagent. They may write to the committee and make statements, but I know that nobody has been there with authority, except, perhaps, Mr. Pierce may have been there, but nobody else. None of the committee is personally familiar with it. Everybody in the community is desirous of having the building destroyed by fire on December 21 rebuilt.

The people in the community that have the lumber are willing to turn it over at cost to the Government so that the building can be built without delay. Now, these Indians live within a small radius of this school building. I have been familiar with that for many years. Years ago I worked in the Indian valley in haying and the harvest fields. I am familiar with the Indians who live there, their condition. I know you can paint a beautiful picture of the school at Carlisle. I have been there. You can describe the surroundings of the school at Riverside, and there is no better place on earth. I have helped take Indians there when I was on the bench to give the girls a better consideration rather than turning them out loose. I have seen the schools in Oregon and Nevada.

This is a school where there are 70 to 100 pupils. The climatic conditions are the best, there are fine surroundings, where the children can go home and visit their parents and come back again. Thirty years ago they had no houses there but only wikiups.

To-day some have very good homes and outbuildings. They have automobiles and are trying to become civilized, working up. Now, because you will not give $25,000 or $30,000 for a new building you are to abandon the property you have. You take these little Indian boys and girls from their parents and send them—the nearest location 700 miles away—to schools scattered over four different States. I appeal to this committee: Is it right, is it proper, is it just? It may be that some special reason is being exerted to prevent this building from being erected. I can not believe it. Both Senators from California are desirous of securing this building. Every member of the congressional delegation from California and the people of the community, public officials, superintendent of schools of the State of California, the board of charity and corrections, that have visited the place, all unite in a desire for this building.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. I know of no more worthy cause, no more worthy purpose. I know of no place where this amount of money could be so well expended with as much advantage as it can be to build this building that can be put up in two months and give these Indians an opportunity for a better education. Education as I speak of it now in this school and all these schools is not simply book learning but an education so that the Indian can go out and make a living when he gets through his school.

Gentlemen, this school at Bidwell and Greenville, if I had the time to go into it minutely, to show you the benefits to the Indians, the advantages they derive from these schools, I know you would grant the request of these people.

Go out there and visit them now and you will see Indians grown up from little boys and girls dressed as they ought to be. They keep their persons in proper shape. Their health has increased 90 per cent, and it is by virtue of the instruction that they have received. It is by virtue of the surroundings of the schools, and in addition to that they have assisted people in the community, so that the young Indians are healthy and clean and do not have contagious and infectious diseases. These pupils go home and assist the men and women and other young Indians that are not going to school to get better results. These Indians are law-abiding, they are sober now—they never violated the law except when the white man interfered—and the community has been benefited by these schools. I trust that the committee will see its way clear at this time to provide for the destroyed buildings, which the Indians were not responsible for, but one of pure accident.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has offered an amendment for the repair of the buildings. The amendment is a subterfuge. What is sought is to put up a building to replace one destroyed by fire. It is in this language because otherwise it would be subject to a point of order which would have been made. The gentleman spoke about the value of the institution having been placed at $230,000 or more. The report made to Congress last year, which is shown on page 289 of the hearings, gives the value of the plant at $71,708, and subsequent to that time the principal building of the plant was destroyed.

The building housed the dormitory, the dining room, the kitchen, the clothing and school rooms. That is the building destroyed by fire, and it does not say partially destroyed. That housed those principal activities of the school. It is safe to say that most of the $71,000 of valuation was destroyed by the fire. That having occurred, the committee was impressed a year ago, and the Indian Service took the same position, that it was the proper occasion for the consolidation of the school activities in the larger schools in that part of the country, the cost per capita being less, and, on the other hand, there are the benefits which the child receives because of the larger schools, there is a better morale, and the results are better generally. The committee did not last year provide for the rebuilding of the school, and I trust the House will not do so now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 12, noes 11.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eighteen Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 350 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., and for pay of superintendent, $79,000; for general repairs and improvements, $12,000; in all, $91,000.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling to the attention of the committee some facts which I have worked out in connection with one item that appears in the report of the committee in respect to every one of these schools mentioned in the report, namely, the production per acre of agricultural products. I think a comparative table of these figures will be of interest. I give them for the various schools noted in the report.

Beginning with Arizona, at the Fort Mojave School, it amounted to $58.33; at the Phoenix School it amounted to $99.97; at the Truxton Canyon School, $103.86. In California, at the Riverside School it amounted to $149.39; at the Fort Bidwell School, $47.51. In Kansas, at the Haskell Institute it amounted to $60.31. In Michigan, at the Mount Pleasant School it amounted to $96.85. In Minnesota, at the Pipestone School it amounted to $32.26. In Nebraska, at the Genoa School it amounted to $48.89; and in Nevada, at the Carson City School it amounted to $17.05. In New Mexico, at the Albuquerque School, $195.86; and at the Santa Fe School, $137.46. In North Carolina, at the Cherokee School, $166.06; and in North Dakota, at the Bismarck School, $39.50; at the Fort Totten School, $30.21; at the Wahpeton School, $23.61. In Oklahoma, at the Chilocco School it amounted to $6.15, and at the Cherokee Orphan School, $26.31. In Oregon, at the Salem School it amounted to $32.72; and in South Dakota, at the Flandreau School, $71.48; at the Pierre School, $31.26; at the Rapid City School, $11.41. In Wisconsin, at the Hayward School it amounted to $30.16, and at the Tomah School, $41.61. In Wyoming, at the Shoshone School it amounted to $4.83.

The extremes will prove interesting. The lowest production per acre was in Wyoming, at the Shoshone School, where it was $4.83; and the highest in New Mexico, at the Albuquerque School, $195.86. Striking an average of them all, it appears to me that the showing from the standpoint of agriculture is a very satisfactory one and indicates that the Bureau of Indian Affairs is giving attention to a very vital and important proposition in teaching these Indians how to conduct their agricultural enterprises successfully.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETCHAM. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Can the gentleman give me the figures upon the Sac and Fox School in Iowa, which is in my district?

Mr. KETCHAM. I regret that I am unable to do so, because the figures for that school are not given in the report, and that was the source of my information. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MADDEN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was presented by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On December 20, 1922:

H. R. 11040. An act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the sale of the marine hospital reservation in Cleveland, Ohio," approved July 26, 1916.

On December 27, 1922:

H. R. 12174. An act to authorize the Attorney General to convey certain land of the United States to Fulton County, Ga., to widen McDonough Road in front of the United States penitentiary; and

H. J. Res. 279. Joint resolution to permit to remain within the United States certain aliens admitted temporarily under bond in excess of quotas fixed under authority of the immigration act of May 19, 1921.

On December 28, 1922:

H. R. 3034. An act for the relief of Lizzie Askell;

H. R. 5349. An act to amend the act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to settle claims for damages to private property arising from collisions with naval vessels;

H. R. 7912. An act to provide a method for the settlement of claims arising against the Government of the United States in sums not exceeding $1,000 in any one case; and

H. R. 8996. An act to amend section 5211 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For promoting civilization and self-support among the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, $110,000, to be paid from the principal sum on deposit to the credit of said Indians, arising under section 7 of the act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889, to be used exclusively for the purposes following: Not exceeding $35,000 of this amount may be expended for general agency purposes; not exceeding $15,000 may be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in aiding in the construction, equipment, and maintenance of additional public schools in connection with, and under the control of, the public-school system of the State of Minnesota, said additional school buildings to be located at places contiguous to Indian children who are now without proper public-school facilities, said amount to be immediately available; not exceeding $15,000 may be expended in aiding indigent Chippewa Indians upon the condition that any funds used in support of a member of the tribe shall be reimbursed out of and become a lien against any individual property of which such member may now or hereafter become seized or possessed, and the Secretary of the Interior shall annually transmit to Congress at the commencement of each regular session a complete and detailed statement of such expenditures, the two preceding requirements not to apply to any old, infirm, or indigent Indian, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior; not exceeding $45,000 may be expended for the support of the Indian hospitals.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I do that for the purpose of calling attention to the situation arising from this provision which I believe will result in the Government being required to pay back some millions of dollars which have been taken from the tribal funds in violation of law. The provision here is for promoting civilization and self-support among the Chippewa Indians, $110,000, to be paid from the principal sum on deposit to the credit of said Indians arising under section 7 of the act entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota," approved January 14, 1889. The Committee on Indian Affairs some time ago held extended hearings on the Chippewa Indian matters and found a most complicated and involved condition due to bureau control. One or two things stood out clear and distinct, however. One is that the act of 1889 prohibits Congress from appropriating money from the tribal funds of this tribe for the purpose of maintaining officials of the Indian Bureau and for administrative expenses on the reservation. Section 7 of that act reads as follows:

That all money accruing from the disposal of said lands in conformity with the provisions of this act shall, after deducting all the expenses of making the census, of obtaining the cession and relinquishment, of making the removal and allotments, and of completing the surveys and appraisals, in this act provided, be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a permanent fund, which shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually for the period of 50 years, after the allotments provided for in this act have been made, and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in manner following: One-half of said interest shall during the said period of 50 years, except in the cases hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors for their use; and one-fourth of said interest shall during the same period and with the like exception be annually paid in cash in equal shares per capita to all other classes of said Indians; and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall during the said period of 50 years, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintenance of a system of free schools among said Indians in their midst and for their benefit, and at the expiration of the said 50 years the said permanent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chippewa Indians and their issue then living in cash in equal shares: Provided, That Congress may in its discretion from time to time during the said period of 50 years appropriate for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians a portion of said principal sum not exceeding 5 per cent thereof.

We have had for some years past a provision in the bill taking out of the tribal funds large sums, running up to as high as $180,000, for the support and civilization of the Indians and the maintenance of the employees and administrative expenses. It has always been held by the Indians involved that this was not a rightful charge against the tribal funds. Millions have been taken from the tribal funds, which have been cut in two, and certainly some day a claim will lie. A provision in this item I seek to strike out provides a sum of money for schools. There is some $50,000 now being spent out of this interest on these Chippewa funds. There is provision here that $35,000 shall be spent for agency expenses, every dollar of it unwarranted, and I believe in violation of the act of 1889, and the claim will lie against the Government for every dollar of this expenditure, extending over the years since 1911. The intent of the act was that at the end of 50 years the principal should be divided among the then living members of the tribe. If the present policy is continued they will be turned loose as paupers, with only a memory of past riches.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course, this is an appropriation bill; but after a provision upon it is passed by the Congress authorizing certain tribal funds to be expended, is not that authority of law for that expenditure; and where it is so authorized now in the years to come could they come back and say that there was no authority of law for the expenditure?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. There is surely no authority to carry items on appropriation bills which violate a law on the statute books.

Mr. BLANTON. To that extent would it not be a repeal of that law?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That question has not been decided judicially, to my knowledge. The Supreme Court did have a phase of this question before it some years ago. In 1915, on the 4th of March, a resolution was passed through this House carrying on the appropriations for the year previous by general resolution. One of the Chippewa Indians took the matter to court, and that court held that Congress by a general resolution could not detail this appropriation in the bill, but it was appealed to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court decided that by general resolution this appropriation could be continued, but the question of the power of Congress to appropriate from these tribal funds for administrative purposes was not decided.

The question as to whether Congress had the power to take the tribal funds in violation of a specific statute was not at issue, although it has been stated before the Committee on Indian Affairs that it was in question. I maintain that this appropriation of $110,000 is unnecessary, in view of the fact that some $250,000 is available from interest on the tribal funds, and the act itself provides how this sum can be expended. By striking it out you will do no injury to the Indians, and at the same time we make sure that there shall not be any claims on the part of these Indians against the Government for this sum in addition to the amount already involved in these appropriations. The Chippewas have the right to have the act of 1889 carried out as written and as it was explained to them by the commissioners. The commissioners agreed that it would not be so used, and it should not be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEENERSON: Page 40, at the end of line 24, strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following: "at the Red Lake, Croquet, and White Earth."

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to explain the reason for this amendment. Up to last year the agency for the Chippewas of Minnesota was at White Earth, and there were erected there numerous buildings, including a very fine and practically new hospital, with full equipment and furniture and everything to accommodate those people. The agency being moved to Leech Lake, quite a long distance away, about 100 miles away, these buildings have been abandoned.

Now, there are on White Earth Reservation something like 7,000 or 8,000 Indians, and many of them are very poor. Many of them, of course, are well to do. But owing to the peculiar theories of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] having been carried out one year, by which the appropriations were taken away from the agency at White Earth, they received no medical attention, and the condition is very bad among the poor Indians.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that as to the $25,000 which has been carried for the three hospitals there, two of them have been discontinued and the money spent for one?

Mr. STEENERSON. I went to the White Earth Reservation last October. I met a great many people there. I saw this hospital, which is in splendid condition, even to the beds and bedclothes and furniture and everything, although it has been closed for a year. They were complaining that there were scores of sick people that needed hospitalization a few miles away. I at once sent a telegram to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs requesting that this hospital be opened. I sent a similar telegram to the President of the United States and explained that there was real urgency, according to the evidence of scores of people that I met there at the White Earth Reservation, so called. The answer came in this way; here is the telegram:

Replying to your telegram of October 24, White Earth boarding school hospital closed as the result of reduced appropriation brought about by the activities of the Chippewa General Council and Attorney Ballinger.

That is the result of carrying out the theory of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think the bill already accomplishes what the gentleman wants.

Mr. STEENERSON. It may, but I want to make it sure. If I may be permitted, I want to explain this. I think I am entitled to the opportunity to do it. I read further:

We are asking in our estimate for increased Chippewa appropriations so that White Earth, Fond du Lac, and Red Lake hospitals may be operated for the benefit of the Indians. If these appropriations are made immediately available White Earth hospital can be opened as soon as Congress passes the Interior Department appropriation bill. We will appreciate your cooperation in procuring the necessary appropriation.

The whole telegram is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 24, 1922.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
Detroit, Minn.:

Your telegram October 24. White Earth boarding school and hospital closed as result of reduced appropriations brought about by activities of Chippewa General Council and Attorney Ballinger. No appropriations now available for operating White Earth hospital. We are asking in our estimates for increased Chippewa appropriations so that White Earth, Fond du Lac, and Red Lake hospitals may be operated for benefit of Indians. If these appropriations are made immediately available White Earth hospital can be opened as soon as Congress passes Interior Department appropriation bill. Will appreciate your cooperation in procuring necessary appropriations.

E. B. MERITT,
Acting Commissioner.

Now, then, I got a letter to the same effect—that the appropriations were not sufficient. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has got the estimates there, and I think they show that the appropriation for 1922 was $20,000. They only used a little over $9,000, so they had over $10,000 unexpended balance of that item for that year. If they spend the same amount for the current year they will have enough to run both hospitals the balance of this fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. It shows an appropriation of $20,000, and they spent $9,000. That is for the current year—1923. If the expenditures for this year are the same as those of the year before, then there would be the difference between $17,500 and $9,000 available for the opening of the White Earth hospital. But although there was an absolute emergency there to my certain knowledge—being right on the spot when I telegraphed to the department—they answered that the appropriations were not sufficient. They have had $17,500, yet the record here before the committee shows that they used only $9,000 for the hospital, and you have the difference between $9,000 and $17,000, or $8,000, to run the hospital at White Earth for a few months the rest of this fiscal year.

Now, the money provided in this bill will not be available for opening the White Earth hospital until the 1st of July next. I intend to offer another amendment to make the money immediately available. I am specifying three places where Mr. Meritt, in his statement before the committee, says he intends to use this money. He says it is for the Cloquet, Red Lake, and White Earth hospitals. I presume he intends to do that. But for the satisfaction of the people there, where there are many Indians suffering for lack of hospital treatment, it should be specifically stated, because in the current year and the year before there was a lump-sum appropriation for these hospitals and they used the money for only one.

There could be no objection to specifying here that this $45,000 provided in this bill shall be for maintenance of the hospital at Red Lake, where they have one, and at Cloquet, where the commissioner says he is going to maintain one, and where there is a hospital that is vacant and that could be continued in operation, and at White Earth, where the hospital is fully equipped to take care of the people by just putting in the help.

Mr. BURTNESS. I saw the hospital and the Government buildings there on the Indian reservation a few months ago, and I was just wondering if the gentleman could give us any information with reference to the closing of the school on that reservation. They have splendid school buildings, and, if I were correctly informed, the school has been closed for a year or two.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; that is true, and the only reason why we have not made any effort in this Congress to change that situation is that they are negotiating with the State authorities for the disposal of that school. There is a school there that cost probably $50,000, and there are some 600 acres of land connected with it. If the legislation already enacted is not sufficient, I should like to have a provision inserted in this bill authorizing the sale. However, the bill of a year ago, I think, carried sufficient authority for the sale, but the State authorities have not carried out that proposition, because they claimed that the legislature of Minnesota must first take action, which, it is expected, they will take next month when they meet in biennial session. That is the reason why that school still stands vacant.

Mr. BURTNESS. Is it the intention to convert it into a State school and sell it to the State?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. The appropriation bill a year ago, I think, carried authority for the United States to transfer this school property and the land connected with it to the State of Minnesota for school purposes and other public purposes, and the State of Minnesota is now going to enact a law that will enable them to do so.

I hope that the amendment will be carried so that it will relieve these people from the anxiety which they now suffer.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is entirely unnecessary. The language of the current law, as the gentleman stated, was broad enough to have permitted a portion of the $17,500 to be spent at any of the three hospitals named. It is being spent only at the Red Lake hospital, because a year ago, when they asked for the $17,500, it was expressly stated that it was for the hospital at Red Lake and not for the other two; and so good faith required the Indian Bureau to spend it for the one where they stated it would be spent.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why did they represent to me that they had not any appropriation when they had $17,500, which is nearly twice as much as they spent for that one hospital last year?

Mr. CRAMTON. Because in good faith they could not spend it anywhere except at Red Lake, where they said they were going to spend it.

Mr. STEENERSON. There was no such provision in the act. It was for the support of Indian hospitals in Minnesota generally.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; but there was an understanding with Congress, and good faith required them to keep that understanding.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then people must die for want of care because of a secret understanding with the committee?

Mr. CRAMTON. As a matter of fact the whole trouble has been that they have been hollering around that they did not want the money spent for this purpose, and because of that attitude on their part we shut up two of the hospitals, and they have been hollering ever since to get them opened again; and it has taken some time to do it. Now, this year the Indian Bureau have evidenced their good faith by asking for an increased appropriation for this purpose.

Their statement is that the item of $45,000 for Indian hospitals is $25,500 more than that authorized therefor for the current fiscal year ($17,500). This appropriation was for only one hospital, viz, that at Red Lake, the hospitals formerly operated at Cloquet and White Earth having been discontinued. However, the Indians themselves have asked that these two hospitals be reopened and that the expense thereof be paid from their tribal funds, in view of the lack of other adequate facilities of this nature. Under the circumstances it is desired to reestablish the hospitals at Cloquet and White Earth, which explains the increase in the amount requested for such purposes. So that if the bill passes as now written, without the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, the two hospitals in which he is interested will be reopened and cared for out of the $45,000, and the gentleman's amendment will be mere surplusage.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then we are reduced to this situation: We have got to depend upon a private agreement between the committee and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs instead of depending upon what is written in the law.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; there was an express agreement between the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Congress of which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] is a most honored Member.

Mr. STEENERSON. Therefore the gentleman thinks we ought to leave this matter in doubt. Why should we have to depend upon such an agreement with the committee? Let us put it right in the law saying that these three hospitals which they say they are going to reestablish shall be provided for so as to relieve the anxiety of the people on White Earth Reservation and the other reservation. It can not hurt anything to put it into the law, instead of having a private agreement with the chairman of the subcommittee which the Indians up there do not know anything about.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask the chairman in charge of the bill [Mr. CRAMTON] if this bill passes, the appropriations, of course, will not be available until the 1st of next July? Where is there any provision here making the appropriation mentioned by the gentleman immediately available?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is no such provision, and there is none in the pending amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, that being the case, the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, who has been sitting here patiently all day long waiting for this item to come up, so that he could have this hospital provided for, is right about it.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; the gentleman proposes to offer such an amendment, but has not offered it yet.

Mr. STEENERSON. I said I was going to offer it.

Mr. CRAMTON. What I have been saying is in relation to the pending amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. And when the gentleman from Minnesota offers the other amendment, then the gentleman from Michigan is going to crucify that also, is he?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know. We have not reached that yet.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman would not object to that, then?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am discussing the amendment which is before the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. The point is simply this: The gentleman from Minnesota says these hospitals are closed up, that they are needed, and he wants them reopened now, and he says that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has promised him that if he would help make the money available in this bill he would reopen them. The gentleman from Minnesota is seeking to do that very thing. If he fails in doing it, the hospitals are going to remain closed. So I think there is a good deal of merit in what the gentleman from Minnesota is saying, and I think there ought to have been a provision inserted in this bill making this money immediately available, so that they can be opened up now, and not wait until next July.

Mr. BURTNESS. Possibly there is some arrangement between the subcommittee and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs so that they may be opened up.

Mr. BLANTON. I will admit that the subcommittee is practically all powerful, that it has unlimited power, but it can not by private agreement with anyone make this money available unless it is so stated in this bill. It has to be specified in the bill; they can not have a secret understanding that money appropriated shall become available before next July. It has to be written into the bill, and the gentleman from Minnesota has been here long enough to know it, and that is why he is now fighting for this proposition. I think the money ought to be made available, and I trust that his amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to modify my amendment by adding "which sum is to be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may modify his amendment as reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. STEENERSON: Page 40, at the end of line 24, strike out the period and insert a comma and add the following words: At Red Lake, Cloquet, and White Earth, which sum is to be immediately available.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment in its original form was not objectionable, but it was unnecessary. In its present form it makes available for use this year $45,000 that was estimated as necessary for three hospitals next year. I hope in that form it will not be adopted.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I will modify it so as to provide that $15,000 be made immediately available for the White Earth hospital.

Mr. CRAMTON. That would leave only $30,000 for the three hospitals next year. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. They are dying there for the want of this hospital service.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh no; they wanted the hospital closed at one time, and it was closed in response to their clamor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STEENERSON) there were 9 ayes and 13 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, in his discretion, the sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the principal sum on deposit to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota arising under section 7 of the act of January 14, 1889, and to expend the same for payment of tuition for Chippewa Indian children enrolled in the public schools of the State of Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There has been a good deal said here about the policy in regard to Indian affairs, and I think that the situation in Minnesota is a pretty good object lesson on that subject. A great many in Minnesota shared the view of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] that the way to civilize the Indians was to release them from all Government restrictions in the control and management of their property. That was done in the case of mixed-blood Indians on the reservation in 1910 or 1911. The amendment was put on in the Senate as a rider on the Indian appropriation bill and agreed to in conference, so there was no opportunity to vote upon it in the House. So it became the law, and it released the mixed-blood Indians from the restrictions as to the alienation of land. They had before that been allotted valuable land in 80-acre tracts, some worth $15,000 and some running down to $1,000. There was a lumber company there that had employed the leaders to help acquire the land that had been allotted. The speculators went in there and took advantage of these mixed-blood Indians, many of whom were entirely incompetent. The greatest Indian fraud and scandal ever known in the Northwest resulted.

Some time thereafter when the department woke up to the situation there were 1,100 or 1,200 lawsuits started to set aside the title to land which had been acquired for little or nothing through fraud and deceit from these people. Many Indians claimed to be mixed blood that were not in order to sell their allotments for what they could get. Many were swindled out of all they had and are now poor and in distress. It was the theory advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that they ought to be let loose from Government control that was their undoing. On the other hand, the Red Lake Indians, who were by far the least advanced, have never been relieved of restrictions, still own their land, and are now better off than the others.

They have their own property, they are advanced greatly in agriculture and industry, and they are doing well. There is little disease among them, whereas among the others the reverse is true. The Minnesota board of health investigated the situation for fear it would have to be taken care of by the State. Here you have an object lesson of the working of the theory advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He wants to remove restrictions on all. The test of the thing is and ought to be, are they competent? No one knowing the Indians, the half-blood or the mixed blood, would claim that they should be relieved from Government restrictions unless they are reasonably able to take care of their own affairs. The clamor here was that when a man was mixed blood, when he was a half-blood, he ought to be turned loose, and he was turned loose. But he was not competent. Some of them got a fair price for their land and some of them just about gave it away. Some fooled it away in a few days. Some gambled it away. One Indian, who had received a large sum, wanted to ride in state, so he went to town and bought a hearse and sat down in it and rode through the town showing that he was as big as any white man. [Laughter.] That shows that he was not competent to take care of his own affairs.

These gentlemen who are philosophizing so much about the Indians ought to go and get acquainted with them before they lay down general rules on that subject. There is no question but that there are many, probably two-thirds of the White Earth Indians, counting full bloods and mixed bloods all together, that are now competent to take care of their property as well as the average white man, and they should be released from Government restrictions. But Indians who have large tribal property interests should be given control only gradually as they demonstrate their competency.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Minnesota is familiar with some things in the Chippewa case, but if he had gone further and made a study of the White Earth investigation he would find there reasons for the scandals that arose in the action of the employees of the bureau in administering the law.

Here is what the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department during the Sixty-second Congress had to say about the situation to which the gentleman has referred. They made a most thorough investigation and published the results in two large volumes, known as House Report No. 1336. I commend it to the consideration of the gentleman:

These White Earth Indians, the remnant of the once powerful Chippewa Nation, are rapidly succumbing to the effects of extreme poverty and the white man's diseases and, betrayed by their lawful guardian and their mixed-blood relatives, are now despoiled of their heritage.

It is indeed a sad commentary upon the administration of the Interior Department, and more particularly upon the Indian Bureau, that notwithstanding the fact that they have about $4,000,000 in the United States Treasury and that millions of their own have already been spent ostensibly for their relief and civilization, the condition of a very large part of the tribe is far worse than when the first treaty was concluded with them at Fort McIntosh in 1785.

The Chippewa Indians of Minnesota are not released. I pointed out yesterday the difference between the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota and the Chippewa Indians of Michigan, who are released. The Chippewa Indians of Michigan have not had a dollar out of the Government Treasury since 1872. They are Americans owning their own property, unfettered, and free. Two-thirds of them own their own homes. They have township supervisors. They have county officials. They are not under the bureau; but here is a tribe, the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, who now have in the Treasury of the United States some four or five million dollars, and they are being pauperized and kept in leading strings on these reservations, although it was the intention of the Congress to turn them loose.

The gentleman is mistaken in his idea that they are released from control. If you were to take the Indians in this country and divide up the property which they own as a race, every Indian family would have $15,000. Suppose some of them, after being released, should stumble and fall on the upward climb; that is not an indication that all of them should be kept serfs under a debasing system of dependency.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is one dollar appropriated in this bill out of the Treasury of the United States for the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This item is out of the tribal funds, and is in violation of law.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is their own money.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They are still under the Indian Bureau. The result is that you have a people up there who are living in uncertainty. If they had been turned loose they would be to-day in the position of the Chippewas of Michigan, absolutely free, American citizens.

Mr. STEENERSON. This bill contains an appropriation of $500 for the Indians of Michigan out of their trust funds, and further along another provision out of the trust funds. Giving the man his own money is not pauperizing him.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; that is exactly what I contend. Give his own to him and let him go. There is a gratuity in this bill of $62,000 for the Indians of Minnesota. There is a treaty item running up to almost $200,000 more. My argument is that they are not out from under the jurisdiction of this system. If they had been, they would have been in the situation of the Chippewas of Michigan, who are brothers in blood, but who are free, and who are self-supporting and self-respecting American citizens. I would like to see the experiment tried on the White Earth and the Red Lake Reservations in Minnesota. In 1889 the Congress ordered that the Red Lake Reservation should be allotted, but no allotment has been made. The reservation is still a center of tribalism, although a generation ago Congress ordered it divided into homesteads for the individuals.

Mr. BURTNESS. By what reasoning does the gentleman arrive at the conclusion that the Indians on the White Earth Reservation would be better able to handle their own funds if they were distributed to them?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I am sorry that I have not time to answer the question of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Pipestone, Minn., including pay of superintendent, $45,000; for general repairs and improvements, $7,000; in all, $52,000.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CLAGUE: Page 41, lines 11 and 12, strike out all of line 11 after the word "superintendent" and all of line 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$47,000; for general repairs and improvements, $8,000; in all, $55,000."

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this school at Pipestone is one of the main schools in the State for taking care of Indian children. As stated here, the school at White Earth has been discontinued. There are applications now at Pipestone from more than 300 children to attend the school. In my own county there are at least 20 Indian children who can not attend this school because there is not room for them. At the present time there are attending the Pipestone School 230 children. There are applications to make the attendance 300. Personally, I know this school and its surroundings. They have buildings there worth nearly $200,000. With an appropriation of $8,000 for repairs and improvements there could be additional room made to take care of at least 250 pupils, to take care of a number of pupils that should attend the school that are not attending a school anywhere. It is stated in the report of the committee that they educate children up to the eighth grade. That is not the fact. They are carried only through the sixth grade, and those of the sixth grade go to Flandreau and to other schools. There have been two additional teachers added to this school within the last year, but there is no room for them to carry on the school work. I visited this school during the last six months twice. It is located in my district, and I know it is in need of the money to carry on the school work. It will be an actual loss not to appropriate more for general repairs. More room is needed to take care of the Indian children that do not have a chance to go to school anywhere.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the allowance granted—$45,000—is above the allowance granted through the bill for schools of 200 and more in attendance. Some allowance is due to the need for more fuel, and so forth, than in the southern schools, but having given the $25 per capita above what is given schools generally of that same size, the committee does not feel that we should go any further in the direction the gentleman suggests, and we hope the item will not be further increased.

Mr. CLAGUE. Does not the gentleman think there should be room made for children that ought to go to that school who are in that vicinity who have no school facilities anywhere?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CLAGUE) there were—ayes 7, noes 10.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the necessary surveys and enrolling and allotting the homeless nonremoval Mille Lac Indians in Minnesota, to whom allotments have not heretofore been made, on lands purchased for that purpose in accordance with authority granted in paragraph 8, section 8, of the Indian appropriation act of August 1, 1914 (38 Stat., pp. 582–591), $10,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 42, line 5, after the word "paragraph," strike out the figure "3" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "4."

Mr. CRAMTON. This is simply to correct a clerical error.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISSISSIPPI.

For the relief of distress among the full-blood Choctaw Indians of Mississippi, including the pay of one special agent, who shall be a physician, one farmer, and one field matron, and other necessary administration expenses, $10,000; for their education by establishing, equipping, and maintaining day schools, including the purchase of land and the construction of necessary buildings and their equipment, $21,500; for the purchase of lands, including improvements thereon, not exceeding 80 acres for any one family, for the use and occupancy of said Indians, to be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for its repayment to the United States under such rules and regulations as he may direct, $4,000; for the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among said Indians and to aid them in building homes, in the culture of fruits, grain, cotton, and other crops, $8,000; which sum may be used for the purchase of seed, animals, machinery, tools, implements, and other equipment necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable said Indians to become self-supporting, to be expended under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1930; in all, $43,500.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOWREY: Page 42, line 16, after the word "equipment," add the following: "under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in connection with and under the control of the public-school system of the State of Mississippi."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to make the point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; I desire to make the point of order on the ground that the gentleman proposes to expend money for the operation of schools under the public-school system of his State, not under Government control. There is no law authorizing such an expenditure.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I followed the wording exactly, I think, of the provision which was passed in regard to Minnesota on page 40.

Mr. CRAMTON. No; the difference between the items as having any effect on the parliamentary situation is this: The Minnesota item is for the payment of tuition to public schools, and, of course, those public schools are a part of the public-school system of the State. The gentleman in his amendment proposes here that the Federal Government school shall become a part of the school system of the State of Mississippi.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, all the items appropriating money for the Minnesota Chippewas are authorized by a special treaty, which has reference only to those tribes and none other.

Mr. HAYDEN. I would like to be heard, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAYDEN. It seems to me clearly in order, because Congress has authorized an appropriation for the education of Indians. Under the Snyder Act of 1921 the appropriations are authorized for general support, including education. The broad term "education" covers a public-school system, a private-school system, or any kind of school system that the Congress may make appropriations for in behalf of the Indians. Clearly to my mind under existing law, as carried out in the Snyder Act, this amendment is in order.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I call attention again to the fact that the language of the amendment is identical with the language just passed in the item in regard to Minnesota.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will permit, the item to which he refers is an item the authorization of which is provided by a special treaty with these particular Indians, and it applies only to the Chippewa Indians. Practically all the items in Minnesota are of that character. They are all in compliance with the treaties. I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] will agree to that.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. As a matter of fact, all the appropriations for Minnesota are made out of tribal funds, and not a dollar comes out of the Treasury.

Mr. CARTER. Yes. The appropriations in Minnesota are made out of the tribal funds and in pursuance of a special treaty with those tribes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I realize that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs can put any Indian he desires in the public schools. He can put these Indians in Mississippi in the public schools without any authorization of law. The amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] simply says he must work in connection with the public-school system in Mississippi. It seems to me in any case it is clearly in order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman undertakes to go a little further than that, if the gentleman will permit. He undertakes to place the jurisdiction of the expenditure of this Federal money under State authority.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. But the Secretary of the Interior must also act in connection with the Mississippi system.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think the amendment quite states that. I think it places the expenditure of the funds and the jurisdiction of the children completely under State authority, without any joint control on the part of the Secretary. I would not be sure about that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. It says "in connection with the Secretary."

Mr. LOWREY. If I may be permitted, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to put that under joint control. I would like to have an opportunity to discuss the merits of this particular situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan reserve his point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman desires, I will reserve it for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan reserves his point of order. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] for five minutes.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, the situation with reference to the Indians of Mississippi is just this: There are only about 1,100 of them, and I suppose it would involve only 400 or 500 educable children. For years, I might say for generations, they have lived right there with the white folks and the negroes. There are three races there. They are all mixed, and they are not segregated in any sense, and as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] knows, the Indians lost their opportunity for tribal lands in Oklahoma, and they are just there as Mississippians. I think they ought to be citizens of Mississippi, and ought to be taxpayers, and ought to be educated and dealt with just like the other two races in the State, and I would like to see them come to that condition. I would not favor making any appropriation to them if circumstances did not warrant it, but I think they should be educated just to be a part of "the folks." Their schools should be just like the other schools and under the same management.

Further, I know the superintendent of education in Mississippi and his assistants and his coworkers, and I consider that system one of the most efficient aggregations that I know of. They are interested in this proposition, and they can handle this situation better than anybody else.

Further, I do not want to enter into minute details, but there have arisen lately some complications, some prejudices with reference to the Government's handling of things there that are hurting the situation and will hurt it further the longer this thing stays in the hands of a Government bureau. The sooner those schools are put along with the other schools and under the same management and under the same board the better for those 1,100 Indians. Now, if this money could be expended for building under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as stated, then wherever the schools could be run with the State schools the other system could be discontinued. I believe next year it could be abandoned entirely. I think those Indians should become citizens and part of the State.

But I think this move is heading that way, and I insist again that I have adopted the very wording used in another State. While one is a gratuity and the other out of tribal funds, it is all money for Indian education, and I see no reason why the distinction should apply in one case and not in the other. I shall be glad, if I may, to put in the words "under joint control." I want to bring these schools into the State educational system and to do it as soon as possible. I am sure it will be the very best thing for all concerned.

I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting the words "under joint control."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I reserve a point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOWREY: Page 42, line 16, after the word "equipment" add the following: "Under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in connection with and under the joint control of the public-school system of the State of Mississippi."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan make a point of order?

Mr. CRAMTON. I desire to reserve it for a moment to make this one observation: There may be much merit in what is proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi. It may be a matter that should be worked out in concert with the officials having the responsibility and who are fully familiar with the facts. I do not think, however, that it is a good plan to go into something when we do not know just exactly what we are doing. Hence I feel obliged to oppose the amendment.

As to the parliamentary phase of the amendment, I make the point of order that the language, as it stands, providing for joint control of Federal funds, is not permissible under existing law and is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, let me call the gentleman's attention to this: I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] has taken a step in the right direction; but as the gentleman from Michigan suggests, we do not want to take any step here that will do any violent damage to the thing that is at present being done for these people. I would suggest that what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] desires to accomplish may be accomplished by inserting after the word "equipment" in line 16 the words—or for paying the tuition of full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indians in the public schools.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Here is an appropriation which compels the erection of buildings for these schools. It provides that the money shall be spent for the erection of new buildings and the purchase of equipment that will not be necessary if the children are put in the public schools.

Mr. CARTER. It does not compel the building. It simply authorizes it.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that will be done.

Mr. CARTER. I think they have built all the schools they will build. I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] will agree with me on that.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma withhold his argument for a moment until we can have a ruling on the point of order?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, since the amendment has been modified by providing for joint control, it may be subject to a point of order, but the way the gentleman from Mississippi originally offered it I do not think it is subject to a point of order, for this reason: In practically all of the legislation up to the present time we have made provision for sending these Indians to day schools and public schools. That is positive legislation providing that they may be sent to the public schools. The gentleman made the argument awhile ago that we were doing that under the Snyder law. Now, when you direct the Secretary to send them to the public schools, do you not do just exactly what the gentleman is proposing to do here by his amendment?

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand the gentleman from California admits that the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. I think the amendment with the words "under joint control" is subject to the point of order. Yes, sir. But as the amendment was originally presented I have grave doubts of a point of order being successfully lodged against it. I just wanted to call the distinction to the Chair. I am afraid the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY] has lost just what he is after by the amendment to the amendment which has been offered by him without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi reads:

Under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in connection with and under joint control of the public schools of the State of Mississippi.

The point of order is made that this is legislation not authorized by existing law. The provision of the law under which it is claimed that this amendment may be authorized is the act of November 2, 1921. The provision of that law is that the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall direct and supervise the expenditure of such money as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the benefit and care of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes: "* * * General civilization, including education."

The members of the committee will understand that all of these general provisions must be placed under the control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, under this law. There is no provision made for a division of control. It would be perfectly within the power of the Secretary of the Interior to direct that these children might be educated in the public schools. There would be no objection whatever to a provision in this law that if they were educated in the public schools it might be paid for out of the general fund or out of tribal funds. There would be no objection in either case. Still the disposition and control of the funds would be under the Secretary of the Interior. But this proposes to place the control partially at least under the school authorities of the State of Mississippi. That is not authorized by existing law. For that reason the point of order is sustained.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOWREY: Page 42, line 16, after the word "equipment," insert "or for the tuition of full-blood Choctaw Indian children enrolled in the public schools."

Mr. CRAMTON. That amendment is satisfactory and the committee will accept it.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that the word "Mississippi" be inserted before the word "Choctaw."

Mr. LOWREY. I ask unanimous consent that the word "Mississippi" be inserted according to the suggestion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOWREY. You have got all the land belonging to these Indians. You ought not to get all the school money, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LOWREY: Page 42, line 16, after the word "equipment," insert "or for the tuition of full-blood Mississippi Choctaw Indian children enrolled in the public schools."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all purposes necessary for the proper drainage of the lands of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico in the Rio Grande Valley, including the Pueblos of Cochiti, Santo Domingo, Santa Ana, Ranchitos purchase, Sandia, and Isleta, including cooperation with drainage districts formed or to be formed by others or draining the land by the Government direct, $20,000, reimbursable in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I understand this paragraph, it is proposed to spend $20,000 for the drainage of the lands of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico in the Rio Grande Valley. Would it be advisable to spend that money there if the Bursum bill is passed and becomes a law?

Mr. CRAMTON. My information is that the Bursum bill has been interned in the committee from which it came, and that there will be no probability of its passage.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the gentleman's information is correct, but the gentleman would not think it advisable to extend it if the bill was passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement, operation, and maintenance of the Hogback irrigation project on that part of the Navajo Reservation in New Mexico under the jurisdiction of the San Juan Indian School, $7,500, reimbursable under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman give us the information so that the country may know as to these reimbursable amounts to the reclamation funds? How do they get the consent of the Indians to do this work? I see that most of the items are reimbursable for irrigation work on Indian lands and take it out of the Indian fund.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is asking me for information which perhaps is far less valuable than his own. My understanding is that legally the consent of the Indian is not necessary. The authority to supervise their affairs by the Government makes it legally unnecessary to obtain their consent. I assume, however, as a practical question, that very generally the matter is worked out in cooperation with the views of the Indians who are interested. At any rate, there should be some sort of cooperation in order that money shall not be expended the benefits of which will not be realized by the Indians.

Mr. RAKER. I am asking in the best of good faith. These matters are so varied and so large that we can not get too much information about them. The point is that the Indian is getting the benefit by virtue of irrigation and will receive a splendid return for the money expended in his behalf?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that in this particular project before us the figures show that the activity is in accordance with the wishes of the Indians. The Indians do not always avail themselves of the land after it is irrigated, but in this case the amount that is actually irrigated on this project is 1,550 acres. Of that, 1,540 acres are cultivated by the Indians and only 10 acres by whites, which demonstrates that this particular project is in accordance with the desire of the Indians.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a further answer to the gentleman's question, with all due regard to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. I think it was a proper question to have been raised by the gentleman from California, and I think my answer will give him some information.

I remember in 1920 or 1921 I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I was asked by the chairman of the committee to make some investigation into the reimbursable appropriations for the use of irrigation projects. Now, while what the distinguished chairman said is true in regard to the law, the practice is that they do not consult the Indians. I know as a matter of fact and I know of many cases where the Indians, well-informed Indians, came before the subcommittee and complained that under the operation of the law permitting the use of tribal funds for irrigation purposes, under this so-called method of reimbursable legislation, that in many cases valuable allotments of 40, 80, 120, and 160 acres of land have been encumbered by more money than the land would sell for, because of the department spending large sums of money on these irrigation projects.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more in order that I may yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. I now yield further to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RHODES. It is my opinion, and I think my distinguished friend [Mr. CARTER], who was present during a great many hearings, as was also the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY], will agree that it is not the practice to consult the Indians, and it is a matter of general complaint by many well-informed Indians.

Mr. RAKER. From the gentleman's observation, what was the conclusion that the committee came to as to whether or not the money expended was justified by reason of the value of the land and the location?

Mr. RHODES. I think in most cases it was not justified, but the committee was somewhat divided in opinion as to what the future policy should be. That situation was true, because the testimony that came before the committee from the Indian side of the case was not entirely in accord with the testimony that came before the committee from the officials representing the Indian Bureau. My personal opinion is that there had been an abuse of authority in this regard by the bureau, and my opinion further is, and I think it is borne out by the statement of the officials of the bureau, that it is very doubtful whether or not many of these great irrigation projects are practicable. The Government of the United States by law has undertaken to convert into agricultural land that by nature is not fit for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more, and then I will not trouble the committee further.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri this question: What is his opinion as a member of that committee, with his long experience as an attorney, as to whether or not, if the Indians should venture to raise the question on the facts stated, their land would be responsible and could it be taken to pay the expenses of the reclamation?

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very doubtful in many cases whether or not the land of the Indian can be held liable for the amount expended. I was reading the report of the Attorney General for the fiscal year just closed, and I think there are some cases pending in the district courts of the United States now which involve this very question.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. If I have the floor; yes.

Mr. CARTER. As to the lands that had been allotted prior to the passage of the act, there might be some question; but as to lands that had not been allotted prior to the passage of the irrigation proposition the matter was clearly settled in two decisions, one the Lone Wolf decision, in southwest Oklahoma, and the other the Gritts case, in northeast Oklahoma, in which it was held that the Federal Government had plenary power to do as it saw fit in the capacity of guardian to ward in connection with any properties retained in tribal ownership. I assume one of the reservations is with reference to the Blackfeet?

Mr. RHODES. Yes; and on the Flathead, too.

Mr. CARTER. I hold no brief for the Indian Bureau, but the Blackfeet irrigation project, as I recall, was put over by Congress without the consent of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. RHODES. Most of these propositions have been put over without the consent of the Indians.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I think I should make this statement for the benefit of the committee generally as to these irrigation projects for the Indians: It is the position of the Indian Service now—of the commissioner and the assistant commissioner—that there have been errors made in the taking up of some of these irrigation projects for the Indians, but what has been done can not now be undone. At the present time the Indian Service is not encouraging any new irrigation projects. It is simply continuing those that have heretofore been commenced and which must be completed in order not to have a complete loss.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 220 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Wahpeton, N. Dak., and pay of superintendent, $49,500; for general repairs and improvements, including well and water system, $9,000; in all, $58,500.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTNESS: Page 51, line 8, after the word "system," strike out the figures "$9,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and for the purchase of additional land, $41,000."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, that it is legislation not authorized by existing law.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, the Snyder Act has already been referred to several times. It was approved November 2, 1921. The amendment proposed comes clearly within the authorization of several provisions of that act. I think it would come within the first provision authorizing appropriations for the general support and civilization, including the education of the Indians. I think it would come within the provisions of the third subdivision, possibly, for industrial assistance and advancement, but if it should be held that it does not come within either the first or the third subdivisions, it is very plain that it comes within the provisions of the fifth, which reads as follows:

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

The only purpose of the new language in this amendment is to enlarge and extend the existing plant.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman has knowledge of the situation. The amendment which he offers does not show whether the land he proposes to acquire is contiguous to the existing plant. Will the gentleman state whether it is?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes; it is. I would be very glad to insert in my proposed amendment the word "contiguous."

Mr. CRAMTON. Under those conditions it would not be subject to the point of order, and if the gentleman states that is the condition, then I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, so that there may be no question about it, to modify my amendment by inserting the word "contiguous" before the word "additional."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota to so modify the amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BURTNESS: Page 51, line 8, after the word "system," strike out the figures "$9,000" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and for the purchase of contiguous additional land, $41,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTNESS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. At what page are the hearings on this particular matter?

Mr. BURTNESS. At page 395.

Mr. RAKER. And where does the statement of the gentleman appear in regard to this?

Mr. BURTNESS. I did not make a statement before the subcommittee. I did introduce a separate bill, H. R. 13190, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, covering the individual matter of buying additional land, but in asking for a hearing I was informed by the subcommittee that it would not hear anyone except such people as were interested in items that had come through the Budget estimates.

Inasmuch as this item had not been included in the estimates of the Budget, I did not appear before the committee. I was told it would be useless, regardless of the merits of the case, and that it would be a waste of the time of the committee.

Mr. CRAMTON. And of the gentleman.

Mr. BURTNESS. The question raised by this amendment is simply whether or not it is advisable to purchase additional land for this school. This is a nonreservation school. The appropriations last year were authorized upon the basis of 200 pupils. The hearings show that there was an average enrollment of 222 pupils. There are several hundred applications in from pupils who can not be taken care of at the school. The school does not provide facilities for pupils in my district, because there happen to be no Indians in that district, although the school is in the corner of my district. It provides facilities for children that come from South Dakota, Minnesota, and a number from North Dakota.

Mr. MURPHY. How much ground is there at the school?

Mr. BURTNESS. The school now has approximately 150 acres of ground, or a little less, possibly, that can be used for cultivation purposes. It is in the valley of the Red River of the North, and there is no better land to be found anywhere. The superintendent of the school, not only the present one but a former one, has been anxious for a considerable time to get additional land. To show that additional land is required for the school, I need only point to the fact that they have during the past several years been renting some land, but even with that they have not sufficient to take care of the needs of the school. The school to-day has to buy hay and feed. Under the items proposed in the present bill they are increasing the appropriation so as to take care of 220 pupils, and upon the same basis of last year I presume the enrollment will actually be increased to 240 or 250.

The per capita cost of taking care of the school even in that cold climate is only $188 each. If a reasonable amount of additional land can be provided, it is the contention of the people at the school that they can provide, among other things, plenty of wheat to take care of the flour needs of the pupils. To-day, as I have already suggested, they are trying to build up a herd of dairy cattle; they are trying to establish a herd there sufficient to meet the needs of the school, retaining the females and selling the males. There is no chance of keeping more females there without additional land for pasture as well as for raising forage for the winter.

As you all know, most of the pupils who come there naturally come from agricultural communities, and, in my judgment at least, it is fully as important, if not more important, to teach these Indian boys and girls something about farming out in that country, so that they can go back to their communities and know something about farming, as to acquire book learning.

If a reasonable-sized farm can be maintained in connection with the school it will be very beneficial for all concerned, both for the Government and for the pupils.

At Fort Totten, in the second district of my State, they have a large and substantial farm in connection with the Indian school there, and a great deal is accomplished in the way of enabling the students to develop along agricultural lines and be able to conduct their farming operations when they get back home. The land at the Wahpeton School at the present time can be bought——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, may I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTNESS. I might suggest that just now it is only reasonable to suppose that the additional land which is required could be bought very reasonably, due to the general agricultural depression. It would be a very good investment on the part of the Government to make the purchase now, rather than at a later date.

This present bill proposes an increase of 20 pupils, I believe, at the school. The fact is that in the immediate future there is expected to be a further increase. Some years ago there was appropriated $20,000 for an additional school building and $10,000 for an assembly hall at the school, but owing to the war conditions the amount appropriated has not been sufficient, so that it has been deemed advisable not to let contracts up to this time for these buildings. I am informed by Mr. Meritt, Assistant Indian Commissioner, to-day that the bureau is now proceeding to advertise for bids for those contracts, and if contracts for such buildings are let, the school will be able to accommodate many more pupils. I hope the bids will be such that they can erect the required buildings within the appropriations available, and if that is done they expect to take care of nearly 300 pupils instead of 220.

This probable growth emphasizes that much more the need for additional land in the immediate future, so that this school would have in a general way somewhere nearly the same amount of land that like schools have up in that northwestern territory. This happens to be a place where perhaps the same objection can not be given against providing for the needs which we think are urgent as was made to the gentleman who presented the amendment for one of the California schools. The suggestion by the committee there was that the climate in California was so excellent that they might not need the additional appropriation to take care of the children. Our climate, while it is healthful and vigorous, and all that, is such that we do not always allow our children to sleep out of doors in the wintertime. We need this money not only to take care of some of these children who are clamoring to get into the school, but particularly to teach these young Indians something more about agriculture than they now know, and also to assist the Government in providing for the needs of the school, for the proceeds from the additional land, if bought, would amount to a splendid interest on the investment in the way of additional crops and produce. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the item that the gentleman asks, $75,000, is a larger amount than is proposed for the extension of any other Indian school in the bill.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. The item suggested in the amendment is not $75,000; it is $32,000.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, $32,000. Then I say that the amount that the gentleman suggests is still larger than any amount proposed for the extension of any other Indian school in the country, notwithstanding it has an attendance of only about 213, while there are others of 700 or 800, and with waiting lists.

Now, as to the particular needs of even that particular school, the committee feels that we must keep pretty well within the Budget and within the estimates that come from the bureaus, because they are carefully weighed and the relative consideration due to each institution is given to it.

The gentleman speaks of the importance of the land and the results obtained at Fort Totten School in the same State. There they have 1,500 acres and they are cultivating only 420 acres. I do not know how much they would cultivate of this proposed extension at Wahpeton if it were given to them.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman realize the difference in the value and quality of land near Wahpeton, N. Dak., and that at Fort Totten?

Mr. CRAMTON. No. They all look alike to me. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTNESS. I am sure the gentleman does not, because if he had understood anything about it he would not have made the comparison.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman referred to Fort Totten as illustrating what could be done. I admit that the land near Wahpeton may be more desirable than that in the neighborhood of Fort Totten.

Mr. BURTNESS. Much of it there is brush and hills.

Mr. CRAMTON. About one-third is used. Now, as to the estimates of this particular school, I want to suggest that in the judgment of the management of that institution, and they are about as near to its needs as the estimates of anyone, if they are to have $32,000, they have several places where they would like to put it before they want to buy any land. I read in the hearings a little while ago where a superintendent wanted $200,000, where it was not approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

This superintendent sent in his estimates, the same as all the rest of them. He had the opportunity to ask for what he thought was needed. What did he ask for? He asked for support $49,500, which is carried in the bill. He asked for repairs and improvements $10,500, which the Budget and the committee reduced by $1,500, allowing $9,000. Then he asked for new buildings, assembly hall, $45,000. There is nothing in the gentleman's amendment about that. He wanted for the purchase of laundry, machine shop, kitchen and dining-room equipment, $5,000. There is nothing in the gentleman's amendment about those things. On the other hand, there is not a word in the estimate of the superintendent as to any need of any more land.

In the absence of a more clear showing as to the needs, I hope we will not appropriate $32,000 as requested, more than we are giving to any other Indian school in the country for extension.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. Does the gentleman recall that the Senate regarded this as of sufficient importance to attach the item to an emergency deficiency bill a year ago?

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not recall that, but I know that another body has attached to appropriation bills many things that are of very questionable value.

Mr. BURTNESS. I take it the gentleman does not contend that this additional land is not desired by the superintendent.

Mr, CRAMTON. There is no evidence except the gentleman's statement, which I accept.

Mr. BURTNESS. I have several letters here which I should be glad to have the gentleman read.

Mr. CRAMTON. I accept the gentleman's statement, but in the superintendent's own report it is not asked for.

Mr. BURTNESS. The $45,000 asked for building is plainly a duplicate of the $30,000 which is already available, which doubtless the superintendent did not understand.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BURTNESS) there were—ayes 5, noes 9.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that in line 19, on page 50, there is a typographical error in the spelling of the word "Fort."

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent that that typographical error be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to return to page 50, line 19, to correct a typographical error in the spelling of the word "Fort." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The sum of $325,000 is hereby appropriated out of the principal funds to the credit of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, the sum of $75,000 of said amount for the benefit of the Ute Mountain (formerly Navajo Springs) Band of said Indians in Colorado, and the sum of $175,000 of said amount for the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians in Utah, and the sum of $75,000 of said amount for the Southern Ute Indians in Colorado, which sums shall be charged to said bands, and the Secretary of the Interior is also authorized to withdraw from the Treasury the accrued interest to and including June 30, 1923, on the funds of the said Confederated Bands of Ute Indians appropriated under the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 934), and to expend or distribute the same for the purpose of promoting civilization and self-support among the said Indians, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress, on the first Monday in December, 1924, a detailed statement as to all moneys expended as provided for herein.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLTON: Page 63, line 8, after the word "herein," strike out the period and insert: "Provided further, That none of the funds in this paragraph shall be expended on road construction unless wherever practicable preference shall be given to Indians in the employment of labor on all roads constructed from the sums herein appropriated from the funds of the Confederated Bands of Utes."

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Gladly.

Mr. CRAMTON. The language of this amendment has been discussed with the subcommittee by the gentleman from Utah. The subcommittee see no objection to it and have no opposition to it. We had not supposed the language to be necessary, but had supposed that to be the policy, as it generally is the policy. The gentleman from Utah states that he has evidence that that policy has not been followed, and so he thinks the language is necessary, and the committee have no objection.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, just a word in reply. Complaint has been made to me that on this reservation the Indians are not given the preference. In a letter which I have received from an Indian it is stated that—

But little of the road money is paid to the Indians. Yesterday I visited the road camp and found 26 teams with drivers and 9 single hands. Of this number only one team was owned by an Indian, and he is not a member of the tribe; and among the single hands only one was an Indian. I know of many Indians who have applied for work and have been refused. We are willing and anxious to work, and we need the money. A number of our tribe are badly in need.

From the information contained in this letter I infer that preference is not given to the Indians. Hence I have offered this amendment. I do not know how accurate the information is, but the amendment is in harmony with numerous other provisions in the bill and can do no harm.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of lateral distributing systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompahgre, Uintah, and White River Utes in Utah, and to maintain existing irrigation systems authorized under the act of June 21, 1906, $100,000, to be paid from the principal funds held by the United States in trust for the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There have been a great many complaints made to me that the expenses of maintaining this particular system are excessive. I have tried all day to get certain information but have not succeeded, and am asking now if the chairman of the subcommittee can give it. I notice in the hearings, as recorded on page 460, that among the items of expenditures of a similar amount last year is one of salaries and wages in the sum of $57,742. In fact, over half of the money appropriated was paid out in salaries and wages, and the complaint to me is that this work is costing too much and that it can be done much more cheaply. It may be interesting to the committee to know that a great many white settlers irrigate lands adjoining the Indian lands and use jointly the same canals. In some of these canals the rights of the Indians have been entirely extinguished, yet the Government continues to operate and maintain these canals at the expense of the white settlers.

Those using the canals have no voice whatever in their maintenance or, at least, in the expenditure of the money. They pay what they consider large assessments and have no voice at all in the expenditure of the money thus paid.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLTON. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Did I understand the gentleman to say that he was trying to get information as to the rates of wages and salaries paid under this item?

Mr. COLTON. I am trying to get whatever information I can as to how this money is expended.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will state that the information before the committee is that there is a proposed salary roll of $31,360, the same as for the current year. That carries an engineer at $2,000, a junior engineer at from $1,800 to $2,040, an instrument man at from $1,200 to $1,500, a hydrographer at $1,500, a chief clerk at from $1,200 to $1,380, a foreman at $1,500, supervisors of ditches at $1,600 to $1,800 and ditch riders at $1,380, there being one of each of those positions except the last, and there being 14 of the ditch riders.

In addition to that there is proposed $40,000 in wages, which is miscellaneous and temporary labor at from $3 to $6 per day.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what the gentleman has said, let me state that a committee of white settlers representing those who use these canals jointly with the Indians have made representations to me and to the department that this work can be done very much cheaper than it is now being done. They say that there is a large item of expense connected with the use and operation of automobiles which is unnecessary and that the work of maintaining the canals can be done much more economically. The white settlers are asking that they be given some voice in the expenditure of the money to operate the canal. It is hoped that some system can be worked out whereby they can have some voice in the operation. I simply arose to make this statement and to ask information of the committee, which the chairman has kindly supplied. I appreciate it.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-utes, including pay of employees, $900.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that we have appropriated here for the support of the Qui-nai-elts and the Quil-leh-utes, including the pay of employees in the State of Washington, the sum of $900. I would like to make the observation that the Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-utes are not being very well supported and not becoming any too well civilized, with a few exceptions. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee what employee receives the $900?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is one-half of the time of one clerk at a salary of $1,200 a year, being $600 for half his time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am not surprised that the Qui-nai-elts and Quil-leh-utes are not getting along any better. They are dying off and a few have allotments, but a number of them never received an allotment and never will. It will be some time before the proceeds for sales of timber from that part of their forest which belongs to the tribe will be paid into a tribal fund. There seems now to be little or nothing in that fund, therefore some of these Indians must be supported by the Government in spite of their potential wealth. Old and dependent folks are thrown in on those who are still older to be fed, and they have to beg and borrow, in spite of resources of great value. They live on in the hope that some day they will come into possession of the fifteen or twenty million dollars, the value of the timber reservation.

The sale of timber on allotted lands has begun and will help the situation a great deal, and a happy lot might as well abandon the hope.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Indians at Colville, Taholah, Puyallup, and Spokane Agencies, including pay of employees, and for purchase of agricultural implements and support and civilization of Joseph's Band of Nez Perce Indians in Washington, $11,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Washington says that he is powerless to get any benefit for this tribe of Indians in his State. I want to put in the RECORD two episodes in regard to making a change in this system which might seem to enforce his hopeless attitude but which does not, for no question is ever settled until it is settled right.

The first statement is by the soldier who founded the Carlisle School and was its superintendent for 25 years, Gen. R. H. Pratt, a faithful friend of the Indian. In 1904 he made a speech before the Baptist Church of New York City, in which he said:

I believe that nothing better could have happened to the Indians than the complete destruction of the bureau which keeps them so carefully laid away in the dark of its numerous drawers, together with all its varied influences, which only serve to bolster and maintain tribal conditions.

The early death of the "Freedmen's Bureau" was an infinite blessing to the Negro himself and to the country as well. If you say the turning loose of this large number of ignorant and unprepared people would threaten the peace of our communities, I say that not a year within the last 30 but we have imported from foreign countries and turned loose in the United States a much greater number of no less unprepared and ignorant people. One thing is certain, this bureau will never lift its finger to end its own life, and we can rely on it that its emotions are most pleasurable when Congress adds to it increased responsibilities in the distribution of money, etc. It is a barnacle to be knocked off some time.

Better, far better for the Indians had there never been a bureau. Then self-preservation would have led the individual Indian to find his true place, and his real emancipation would have been speedily consummated.

He made that speech while superintendent of the Carlisle School. He was discharged from his position. He had committed lese majeste. He was a dangerous agitator in the eyes of the bureau. He made this statement later:

If my speech before the Baptist ministers was untrue in any particular it ought to be easy to indicate wherein and to hold me responsible. No part of it is contested except it is alleged I said, "Indian Bureau officials are barnacles." What I said was that "the Indian Bureau is a barnacle to be knocked off some time."

It takes far-fetched construction to contort this into personal affront. I now repeat, that after 37 years of experience in Indian affairs, 25 years of it directly under the bureau, the bureau is a barnacle, because it is an unnatural, unphilosophical attachment to the ship of state whose perpetuity depends solely upon its being able to prevent the one race in America always here from getting aboard and becoming a real part of the American crew and family. It therefore clogs progress, and that is what a barnacle does. * * *

In 1917 Mr. W. H. Gibbs, inspector in the Indian Service, resigned his position and, in a signed article published in the State, at Columbia, S. C., on January 14, 1917, he made this statement:

From association and contact with the Indian I have become convinced that his treatment by the Government is one of continued error heaped upon initial mistake. Originally segregated upon reservations in order to insure the safety of the whites who were thinly settled in outlying territory, the continuation of such a policy after the full attainment of its purposes has operated to delay the development, the amalgamation, and the civilization of the Indians in the fulfillment of their manifest destiny. This proposition is proved by the undeniable fact that those Indians who have cut loose from the Government have progressed far ahead of those who are still in serfdom as its wards.

This serfdom is a greater reproach to this Nation than was the slavery of the Negro. The tenure of the title to his lands and the holding of his funds by the Government are sometimes used to coerce him into compliance with Government requirements, thus sapping independence and undermining his character. Therefore, if there is decadence in the manhood of the old Indians thus treated the Government owes support to these Indians it has ruined, and education to their children to keep them from being ruined also. Its activities should stop there.

Everywhere there are capable and competent Indians who ought to be free and independent citizens to-day, but usually the office keeps them chained to their stationary cotribal members.

The proud, sensitive, high-strung Indian often feels that hope for him and his lies not on this side of the grave.

The young and middle-aged adult Indians should be given their land and money and made citizens of America, and citizenship should be conferred on the minors as fast as they reach maturity.

If any squander their heritage it will be no more than our white citizens do, and usually the school of adversity alone confers a valuable civic education.

Turn such Indians loose now under some well-considered plan and they, humanity, and civilization will soon be the gainers.

The emancipated Cherokees of North Carolina and Oneidas of Wisconsin have done more for themselves than the Government has done for any Indians still enslaved under its wardship.

My severance from the service is voluntary on my part, partly from a feeling of hopelessness in going after real progressive reform through the heavy machinery of the Indian Office. If field workers could talk for publication as I know they feel, in the main my points would be overwhelmingly sustained. As a rule they are faithful workers and distressingly underpaid.

The reason for my conclusions may be found in the facts and details in my official reports, which should be open to the public, which are susceptible of proof and have never been excepted to by office, though often of grave importance.

Entering the Indian Service in the belief that the Indian Office was designed and conducted as a benefaction to the race, I am leaving it convinced that it is the Indian's "Old Man of the Sea," who will try to cling around his neck in a strangle hold forever.

Mr. Chairman, here are two men of wide experience in the Indian Service under different conditions, one the superintendent of the best school the Indian Bureau ever had, which was abolished because it was making real Americans out of these original Americans, and the other a man who endeavored to lift the Indians out of tribalism and degradation, and gave it up in the face of the opposition of the bureau system.

It does seem a hopeless task, when years after their valiant efforts in official position were made, we find the system as strongly intrenched as ever and all efforts to change it ridden down.

But I am not afraid of the final outcome. Whenever the American people come to know the facts of this most un-American system they will command and secure a new policy.

History teaches but one lesson, and that is that for injustice and oppression and subjection doomsday comes at last. Freedom is stronger than serfdom. I am firm in the faith that there will be sunrise for the American Indians, when out of the night of bureaucratic control and injustice and misery they shall step forth as Americans into the dawn of a new day of freedom and development as full-fledged members of the Republic.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me say to the gentleman that that start is being made, because they have cut down the Qui-nai-elts from $1,000 to $900. The paragraph just read is for the support and civilization of the Indians at Colville, Taholah, Puyallup, and the Spokane agencies, and the amount is $11,000. How is that amount divided up? I would like particularly to know the amount that goes to the Puyallup agency, and where that agency is at this time.

Mr. CRAMTON. I fully understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Washington is asking questions about matters that he understands much better than I do myself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no. Before the gentleman undertakes to answer——

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman understands that he understands better than the chairman does.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, if that is so, these Indians are surely in a bad way. I am serious about that. If I remember correctly, it is only two or three years ago that Congress abolished the Puyallup School. Out of the clear sky they abolished that school, regardless of the treaties with the Indians. When they abolished that school that left about a dozen tribes of Indians in the western part of Washington with no headquarters. Thereupon, after the department down here discovered that, they hitched one-half of these tribes to the agency in the district of my colleague [Mr. HADLEY] and the other half of them to the agency at Taholah, which is the county seat, you might say, of the Qui-nai-elts, and after doing that they discovered that it was too much to have these Indians come from clear up near the Cushman School down to this place on the ocean beach, so they moved the headquarters of the Qui-nai-elts and allied tribes away from there, and I do not know where they have moved the Puyallup agency and I am asking for that information.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman discussed this matter at one time with the chairman of the subcommittee, and the chairman of the subcommittee took him into a conference with the Assistant Indian Commissioner, and the gentleman came out of that conference with a smile on his face.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; and that is all I got.

Mr. CRAMTON. I supposed that he obtained all that he wanted to know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. CARTER. As I recall the information the gentleman speaks of, it is that these agencies have all been consolidated with the general agency at Nes Palem.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And so when we say for the Indians at the Puyallup agency, we mean ex-agency?

Mr. CARTER. I think the Nes Palem is an agency for all of those tribes, although I would not be positive about that. That is my recollection when I was at Nes Palem several years ago. At that time it was being contemplated to remove a number of the agencies to Nes Palem and operate all of them from that place.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the gentleman must be mistaken in part.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] read a letter a moment ago comparing the Indian Bureau to a certain extent to the Freedman's Bureau, and in his speech yesterday morning he also made some comparison of that kind and spoke of the promise of 40 acres of land and a mule that was made by the Freedman's Bureau. The Freedman's Bureau was a thing which operated down in my country, and I do not think it is proper to begin to compare the Indian Bureau with that. I can give the gentleman an instance of that which will show, I think, that he is mistaken in making that comparison. One of these fellows appeared in my own county and claimed to be a representative of the Freedman's Bureau, having come there to set off the 40 acres and allot the mule. He went up to old Mr. Evans's plantation, who had been a large slave holder before the war. He had a splendid plantation. All of the slaves had left the place where they lived to show that they were free. The old colored foreman was there, however. This agent or representative of the Freedman's Bureau said to the old man: "I have come here to lay off your 40 acres of land, and you can get the mule out of old man Evans after you get the land." This man picked out a piece of land, the 40 acres, and it had a good cabin on it, and he moved in. The old man Evans went out and discovered him the next day, and said: "What are you doing here?" He replied that this was his land; that the man from the Freedman's Bureau had been down there and laid off his land. He had laid it off; had set a little peg with a red ball on top of it at each corner. Mr. Evans then asked him whether he got a paper for it, and he said yes, he did, that he got a deed. He went to the house and got his deed and brought it out. The fellow had charged him $5, incidentally. I think I may have that deed yet in my office to-day, and the man had written on it the following:

Even as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness so have I lifted this nigger out of $5.

That is about the way the Freedman's Bureau operated, and I hope the gentleman will not compare the Indian Bureau to that.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I had yesterday a copy of that same deed, and I shall be glad to put it into the RECORD word for word. There have been instances where the Indian Bureau has given a man 40 acres, and he has made it his home, raised hay there and used it for 17 years, when a tribal herd was allowed to run over it and utterly destroy it, and he did not have his 40 acres at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. All he could do was to raise cain?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operation and maintenance, including repairs, of the Toppenish-Simcoe irrigation system, on the Yakima Reservation, Wash., reimbursable as provided by the act of June 30, 1919 (41 Stat. L. p. 28), $5,000.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. On page 66, line 13, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: Page 66, line 13, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$50,000."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The effect will be to comply with this situation: At the Toppenish-Simcoe irrigation unit, on the Yakima Reservation, there was first authorized to be expended $150,000. Later the authorization was increased to $200,000. However, only $150,000 has been expended. Expecting the faithful performance on the part of the Indian Bureau and the Congress, the local people there have cleared up the sagebrush and prepared the land for immediate irrigation and for cultivation. They have waited year after year for an expenditure of the additional $50,000 which was authorized to be expended on that unit. They feel greatly disappointed and aggrieved that their Government has not carried out the evident intent of Congress.

In fact one of those Indians was in my office just a few days ago and related this story: One of their Indians died and went up to the pearly gates seeking entrance to the happy hunting grounds and was there asked by St. Peter for his record. The Indian replied, "The Indian Bureau has my record." St. Peter turned to an assistant and said, "Step inside and find some one from the Indian Bureau and bring this Indian's record." The assistant was gone for three hours and returned, saying, "Nobody from the Indian Bureau here." [Laughter.]

That is the feeling of the Indians in that particular section. They do not believe they are receiving fair and just treatment from the bureau.

Mr. RAKER. Which section did he come from?

A MEMBER. California.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. We believe that in good faith we ought to do for the Indians of that part of the reservation what we do for Indians on either side, on the Wapato side and the Satus side, which lands lie adjacent to the lands contemplated to be irrigated by this amendment. This is not a new project.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman knows that the inclusion of one of the new extension items carried in this bill, the one item that has perhaps more to do than any other item in the bill in raising the irrigation costs above the current year, was the inclusion of the item at the gentleman's initiative, I assume, for the Satus unit. Has the gentleman any idea that while other projects all over the country are being neglected and requests are being denied, the Government is going to open up the Treasury doors wide to the people of his district?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Not at all, I will say to the chairman of the subcommittee. But this $50,000 was authorized some three years ago, and it was fully expected that it would be provided in order that a certain amount of work might be done at this time, and it is in order to take care of that situation that I have offered this amendment.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman think that the need for that $50,000 is greater than the need for the $150,000 for the Satus unit? If the gentleman feels that way, I think the matter may be corrected.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am informed the land at the one place can be irrigated for less, perhaps, than that at the other. However, each unit stands on its own merits, and I am contending for fair and equal treatment for all parts of the Yakima Indian Reservation. Our obligation under the treaty of 1855 is the same to all of these Indians. Our present plan makes some of them wealthy while others eke out a bare existence. During the past four years I have repeatedly presented the merits of the Wapato, the Toppenish-Simcoe, and the Satus units and have introduced bills and offered amendments seeking funds with which to carry forward the work on these various units.

I am gratified that at last we are securing $125,000 for the Satus unit; at the same time I earnestly urge favorable action on my amendment for $50,000 for the Toppenish-Simcoe unit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the Chairman how long he intends to keep us here?

Mr. CRAMTON. We expect to run until 5.30. That will pass us through, as I understand, matters that are not controverted respecting the Pension Office and the Patent Office.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman ought to turn us loose now.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think our speeches are all made now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For completion of the road on the Quinault Reservation, Wash., $7,500, reimbursable from the tribal funds of said Indians as provided in the act of May 25, 1918. (40 Stat. L. p. 588.)

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WATSON. I notice two or three items in this bill of appropriations for road construction. Are these roads permanently constructed for automobile purposes? Or are they open trails, or are they simply dirt roads? I find the appropriations are very small.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think they are permanent roads. The character of the road, I suppose, varies with the circumstances.

Mr. WATSON. Seven thousand five hundred dollars would not go very far in building permanent roads in Pennsylvania. They cost us about $90,000 a mile.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are not of that kind.

Mr. WATSON. I presume these are trails.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are more than trails. They may be dirt roads or gravel roads in some cases.

Mr. WATSON. I was wondering whether it was the intention of the Government to build permanent roads through the reservations.

Mr. CRAMTON. In some cases they are paved roads and in other cases they are dirt roads.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, including the Big Wind River and Dry Creek Canals, and including the maintenance and operation of completed canals, $200,000, reimbursable as provided by existing law.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RHODES. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Michigan a question. I see that $200,000, reimbursable, is provided for in line 17 on page 69. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if any part of the $200,000 is to be expended for doing new construction work on this irrigation project or is it all to be expended for maintenance and operation?

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that in 1919 the Committee on Indian Affairs made a very thorough investigation into this whole matter of reimbursable legislation for irrigation purposes, and as a result of this investigation it was ascertained that much of the work on the various irrigation projects of the Northwest has been carried far beyond the point of necessity; that is to say, on many of these projects there are thousands and tens of thousands of acres of land under irrigation where there is nobody, neither Indian nor white man, to make beneficial use of the water. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that there should be no further sums expended on new projects until use is made of all available water, and that the only justification for the expenditure of any of the Indians' money or for the expenditure of any of the Government's money on these projects is for maintenance and for the operation of the units that are completed.

Mr. CRAMTON. Replying to the gentleman's question, I now have the information at hand, and it is stated that the funds available for work on the Wind River project for the past two years have been so limited that very little has been done in the way of betterment and construction work, with the result that a large amount of work of that class must be done at the earliest practicable date or considerable portions of several of the units will be unfit for further service. Several of the units contain laterals having from 5 to 15 drops constructed of timber of from 4 to 9 feet, many of which have been in use since 1906 and 1907 and are now so badly decayed that it is practically impossible to make repairs that are effective. For the past four years considerable portions of available funds have been required to make temporary repairs to these hundreds of old structures, and it is a serious economic waste to continue to spend money on temporary repairs to structures in such condition. As a matter of fact, unless many of these structures are immediately replaced there is grave danger of the system's failing at a critical time, which will result in great damage to crops.

In addition to this, each year some new tracts are being broken and put into cultivation, which require the construction of new laterals and structures to enable delivery of water to the tracts. The needed demands for irrigation purposes especially during years of insufficient precipitation, necessitate better diversion facilities and in some cases storage. The construction of the Ray Lake storage reservoir is now considered urgent. This reservoir will store water from the Little Wind River during flood season, which will greatly facilitate the delivery of water during low-water season, as the low-water flow of this river has always been found inadequate to supply the lands now under cultivation. When the Ray Lake storage reservoir is available for use it will also greatly relieve the low-water diversion requirements of the Ray and Coolidge ditches and permit a large quantity of water to flow to the subagency unit and to numerous private Indian ditches on the Little Wind River. The cost of operating and maintaining the system must also be taken care of, and in addition thereto it is necessary to make irrigable area surveys at the earliest practicable date, so as to be in position to make proper proof of beneficial use of water. So there is some construction proposed, but apparently it is only that which is necessary to protect the investment already made.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask this further question: Has the committee considered the question of fixing a permanent policy in carrying forward these irrigation projects in making up the estimates for these reimbursable appropriations?

Mr. CRAMTON. I assume that the general policy will be a continuance of the reimbursable feature, so that at any rate when the lands come into white ownership they will be subject to the repayment of these costs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RHODES. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RHODES: Page 69, line 17, strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000."

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. RHODES. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman stated a little while ago that as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs he had given considerable time and attention to the question of the reimbursable feature of these funds expended for reclamation. Did the gentleman or his committee make a report on that subject?

Mr. RHODES. The committee held hearings and reached a conclusion that Congress should not make further appropriations for new construction work on these irrigation projects until beneficial use had been made of all the water provided for, and I do not believe you will find in the appropriation acts of 1920 and 1921 there is authorization for new construction work on these projects.

Mr. RAKER. It seems to me that there is nothing more beneficial to the Indians than the development of these irrigation projects. And the reason I am so particular in asking these questions is that the Government will be protected and will be able to have refunded to it the money expended on these projects. I think we ought to be fair with ourselves in considering these matters.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman raises a technical legal question. Of course, my opinion should not be controlling either as to the position of this committee or as to what conclusion the gentlemen may arrive at, but I do say that in these cases large sums of money have been expended on irrigation projects for which there seems to be little justification; and with due regard to those who have brought about these projects, I am prepared to say that the testimony before our subcommittee was that in most cases they were the white man's projects. The Indian was not consulted in the first instance, and he was not consulted as to the expenditure of money in the development of these projects, and in many cases he has found his property encumbered for more money than it is worth for construction charges. In truth and in fact the policy of ambitious white men and the policy of the Interior Department has been to try to convert large areas of land into farming lands which by nature are unfitted for that purpose. The severe climate, the short season, the lack of rainfall, and everything that make successful agriculture possible are wanting. Congress authorized a committee to go into the Indian reservations, and that committee went over the reservations and found that in the opinion of both Indians and many white men large sums of money had been expended on projects which were not justified, and for that reason this committee decided that no further money should be appropriated for new work until all the land now under water has been used.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. RHODES. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. What the gentleman is saying is very interesting, but it does not apply to the particular case that he is discussing. If he will give me an opportunity to enlighten him as to that particular case I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I prefer to complete my statement. Then the gentleman will be able to make his statement and I shall be very delighted to hear it. Like a great many of our distinguished friends from the extreme Northwest the gentleman from Wyoming is very zealous in the cause of irrigation. What I was about to say was that as a result of a well-directed effort a well-meaning committee was sent by the Congress into the Northwest and made an investigation, and it was the opinion of that committee that Congress is not justified in appropriating these large sums of money against the Indians' will on these new projects. This sum of $200,000, appearing on page 69, in line 17, seems to be a large sum of money for a small project. I was only wanting to know if it is the policy of the present committee to change the plan that was adopted by your committee in the Sixty-sixth Congress, which I thought was well understood and accepted by Congress?

My question to the chairman of the committee is this: What is the policy of the present committee? Now, if $100,000 is not a reasonable sum for carrying forward the improvements that are necessary, then, of course, I shall not be grieved if this committee votes down my amendment. But I do think in a majority of these cases it is largely problematical as to what the result will be, and not justified.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman could hardly expect to cut out of this bill any portion of this particular $200,000, could he?

Mr. RHODES. I offer the amendment in good faith.

Mr. RAKER. Why does the gentleman ask that question?

Mr. BLANTON. I think it would take great effort to do it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I asked the gentleman from Missouri to yield to me, and he refused.

Mr. RHODES. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman need not do that, but I would like to hear some word about this particular item. Does the gentleman know that this particular item is extravagant? So far I submit that there has been no discussion of this item.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that my services here or my action in regard to appropriations justify anyone in suggesting that the appropriations that relate to my section or my State do not have the same scrutiny that other appropriations do. The increase in the item referred to is not only justified but the item could have been increased still more and still be justified.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES] clearly has in mind, in the statement he made, certain projects in the Northwest for the irrigation of lands partly held by Indians but proposed to be reclaimed largely for the benefit of white men. Some of these projects have merit and some have not much merit. We discussed one yesterday which I do not think has much merit, but it carried a small appropriation in this bill. But this is an Indian irrigation project. It is on an Indian reservation. The lands are all owned by Indians except where the land of a deceased Indian has been sold to a white man, the white man paying the full value, including construction cost, under regulations carefully prepared by the department. In that way there are white settlers scattered throughout the reservation, occupying perhaps 20 or 25 per cent of the irrigable land. There is no fairer area of irrigable land anywhere of the same latitude and altitude than this area.

It is a good fruit country; it is a part of my State where we grow the best apples. It is a wonderful alfalfa section. It is a good grain section. It is an ideal farming country, largely owned by the Indians, operated by the Indians, farmed by the Indians—one of the projects in the United States where the Indian is really making splendid progress in the cultivation of the land.

I went through the reservation this last summer and fall several times, over different roads, and I saw fine hay and straw stacks, and threshing machines at work, and I took pains to inquire whether the farms and the stacks and the machines were those of white men or Indians. I found that in a majority of cases the stacks of wheat and alfalfa and the machines were those of Indians, operated for and by the Indians.

During the war the development of this project, which has been going on for a number of years for the benefit of the Indians with their complete approval under treaty provisions to that effect, the appropriation was reduced to $75,000 a year. With that sum it has not been possible to keep the ditches already built in a good state of preservation and it has been utterly impossible to extend the system or even the laterals to the additional lands which the Indians themselves were desirous of cultivating.

The Indians not only made the treaty under which we are doing this work, they are not only taking advantage of the work being done and farming their land, but these Indians have abundant sources from which the money will be repaid. They own over a million acres of land on the north side of the Big Wind River which they have ceded to the United States but which has not yet been sold. A large portion of it is under lease for grazing purposes, bringing a steady revenue for the benefit of the Indians. On that land there are several oil fields.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. These oil wells are a long way from the railroad. They are just beginning to get in operation, but from these oil fields alone these Indians will be able to repay not only all the costs of reclamation but have a fine sum remaining. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that the criticism aimed by him at certain enterprises on so-called Indian lands for the benefit of white men have a reasonable basis, but what he has said in no way applies to this particular Indian project, where the land is rich, where the climate is good, where the project is being carried on economically, and where the Indians are utilizing it, and where they have abundant resources for payment.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman has stated a number of conditions which are certainly ideal, and I think I am justified in pressing this further question. If it is answered to my satisfaction, of course I shall not be disappointed if my amendment fails. The gentleman has indicated that it is necessary from the Indian standpoint, and that is the thing about which I am particularly concerned. Does the gentleman say that the Indians are requesting the appropriation of $200,000 for the continuation of this project?

Mr. MONDELL. I visited this project recently. I found everyone interested anxious for a larger appropriation, particularly the Indian farmers. My attention was called to the fact that the money which has been appropriated during the past four years—the war period—was wholly insufficient for the maintenance of the system in good condition and for the necessary extension of the canals and laterals to the land. I discovered on inquiry that there had been a request submitted for an increase in the appropriation. This is an Indian project, and a good one.

Mr. RHODES. It is very refreshing to know that there is at least one Indian project.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing roads and bridges within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, $20,000, said sum to be reimbursed from any funds which are now or may hereafter be placed in the Treasury to the credit of said Indians, to remain a charge and lien upon the lands and funds of said Indians until paid.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put I have an amendment I desire to offer, and so has my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will have any rights to-morrow that he has now.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma has an amendment which could be disposed of at once.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will there be any debate upon it?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No.

Mr. CRAMTON. If there is no debate, I will withhold my motion.

Mr. CARTER. Then I ask unanimous consent that we return to page 21, line 12.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, I prefer to have a little consideration of that. The gentleman will have his opportunity to-morrow. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13559 and had come to no resolution thereon.

RUSSIAN RELIEF.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a report by the Surgeon General of the Army showing the medicines, medical, surgical, and hospital supplies transferred to American relief organizations under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the President to transfer certain medical supplies for the relief of the distressed and famine-stricken people of Russia," approved January 20, 1922.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 28, 1922.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. McFADDEN, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 29, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.
